Take the singular admission which we have had made on the floor this morning. Take the admission that years ago Congress passed a national quarantine act, a national quarantine act doing what? Selecting representative men all over the United States, making the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service a member of that board, making the surgeon-in-chief of the Navy a member of that board, making the chief surgeon of the Army a member of that board, and putting on foot all the necessary machinery incipiently to do everything which might be required. Now, what is the statement made this morning? The statement made this morning by the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill is that all that legislation became inoperative. Why? Because of the relentless hostility of the Marine Hospital Service; that they went to work and fought the law, and that by their antagonisms they prevented appropriations and prevented it from being carried out.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Louisiana will allow me, I shall be very glad to add to that statement that it was done somewhat by the relentless hostility of the Marine Hospital Service and very largely by the relentless hostility of the New Orleans board of health.

Mr. WHITE. That may be. That does not change the situation. Now, we have the anomalous statement made that here is this organized Bureau of the Government which for years has fought and resisted the exercise of power by the National Government, and what does that ultimate in? It ultimates in a bill which puts them in charge of this country from one end to the other, in charge of every town and every village in it.

It ultimates in a bill which puts this vast country entirely in charge of this Bureau in Washington. That is what the bill provides, and an analysis of the bill will show it. Before this bill is voted on I expect to be heard and to make, if I can, a demonstration of that fact.

The grant of power in the bill is a covert grant of power; it seeks to accomplish its objects by indirection; it is not a frank and open statement of the grant of power, but it is a grant of power by insinuation, by which if a case of typhus fever or a case of scarlatina or a case of diphtheria occurs in the city of Boston or the city of New Orleans or anywhere else this board may come in and take charge and displace the local municipal authorities. We have had this remarkable statement made about the reason why the other system had not been carried out, supplemented by the statement on the floor this morning that the Marine Hospital Service have prepared the rules which are to execute this proposed law before the bill has even passed the Senate.

I say those things rivet my attention and seem to me to demand at our hands a most serious consideration of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] is quite right when he says this bill undertakes to do by indirection what I think would be infinitely more creditable to the Senate to do directly and with emphasis. It would, to my mind, be a sorry spectacle if we were now to pass this bill, in which you can scarcely tell where the Federal authority begins or the power of the State authority ends; in short, it is a dual mixture of authority. Not to incorporate in this bill the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is simply to tie up the hands of the President, for you confer upon the President, as the bill now stands, only the authority to appoint officers and agents to do what? To see that the laws are executed. But in the hands of the President there is no power to make regulations, unless you give the power conferred by the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

You appropriate $1,000,000 for what purpose? To enable somebody to adopt certain measures which are to be sufficient to protect the country from the encroachment of these diseases. This amendment proposes to confer the power which rightfully belongs to the President, not only to appoint the agents but also to adopt and use such measures as may be necessary for the purpose of preventing the introduction and spread of infectious and contagious disease.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the demand for the yeas and nays on the amendment seconded?

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent—I have not consulted the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]—that the special order which was made the other day, under which the Senate is now acting, may be continued to include Monday.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be very glad indeed to have the special order continued; but in the absence of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], who kindly yielded, when he had the power of objecting, to giving two days to the consideration of this measure, when the bill of which he is in charge had the right of way, I want to observe the utmost courtesy in respect to him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator that it only includes Monday. The Senator from Minnesota is not here to-day; he is resting from his labors; and on Tuesday the unfinished business will be again in order.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In what way, if any, will that interfere with the request I made, which was complied with by the Senate, to be allowed an hour or two on Monday morning for the discussion of another subject?

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand that no special order interferes with any remarks a Senator proposes to deliver by the courtesy of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent for the order I have indicated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from New Hampshire? [Putting the question.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PLATT. That continues the order of to-day until Monday?

Mr. HARRIS. Until Tuesday.

Mr. CHANDLER. Including Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To and including Monday, as the Chair understands.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, perhaps I ought to make a slight explanation of my proposed amendment.

So far from adopting the views of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE], that we are giving a tremendous power to the Marine Hospital Service or to the Secretary of the Treasury, it seems to me we are really giving no power at all by the bill as it stands without my amendment. A careful analysis of section 3 shows just this in as few words as I may state it: Where a State has adopted quarantine regulations and made provisions for the exclusion of disease, the United States authorities shall aid the State authorities; and, then, if the Secretary of the Treasury shall think that the arrangements which have been made by the States and their rules and regulations are not sufficient, the Secretary of the Treasury may make additional rules and regulations for what? For the carrrying on of quarantine by State authority practically, for, although they will be United States rules and regulations, the United States will have no means of carrying them out except through the State arrangements and State authorities.

When those are made what is the Government to do? Aid the States in carrying out the additional rules and regulations which have been made, and that only. Then if the States fail——

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Connecticut will allow me to make a suggestion right there, for I feel inclined to repel the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] and of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] that secretly and indirectly we are seeking to give powers that we dare not avow. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that he insert in his amendment language to the effect that coöperation and those rules and regulations are limited by the terms of the bill to things which are necessary to prevent the importation of contagion from foreign countries into this and from one State into another, absolutely limited and confined to regulations of commerce with foreign nations and amongst the several States.

Mr. PLATT. I was saying, Mr. President, that clear up to the point where the State and municipal authorities fail or refuse to enforce rules and regulations which have been made by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Government has no power whatever. Now, if they fail or refuse to enforce those rules this bill as it stands gives certain powers to the President; that is, he shall execute and enforce the rules which have been made.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. Let me get through. Suppose the bill is not amended, the only power really given to the President is to execute some rules and regulations which have been made as to how the State shall conduct its quarantine, and if the State does not choose to allow the President the use of its quarantine buildings and the management of those buildings, the President is utterly powerless.

Now I will listen to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. WHITE. I only wish to ask the Senator in whom is lodged the power to determine whether the rules are enforced?

Mr. PLATT. I do not think the power is given in the bill. I think that if the question arises, for instance, in the State of New York whether the authorities of that State have failed or refused to execute the additional rules which have been promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury, a conflict is going to arise just there on that point. That is why I said yesterday that I thought this bill was most ingeniously formed to precipitate a conflict between the State and national authorities. At any rate, there is nothing in the world by the bill which the Government can do if the State of New York says it has not failed or refused to execute and enforce the additional rules and regulations.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Can the Senator point me to an instance from the foundation of the Government where such a controversy has been engendered where the practical result has not been a decision of that question by the Federal Government in its favor and the dominancy and operation of the power vested in the Federal Government?

Mr. PLATT. Hardly that in the history of the quarantine war, if I may call it so, in New York Harbor last fall. In other words, this bill as it stands involves just this: If the State concludes to allow the General Government to take possession of its buildings erected for quarantine, its hospitals, its machinery for disinfecting, and its inspection, then the President would have some power under it; but as the bill stands, if the State says "no," the President can do nothing; he has not the power to erect a hospital; he has not the power to do anything; he has not the power to make any arrangements whatever.

What was done last fall on the part of the Government was done under a power which was conferred in an appropriation bill, which provided a sum as an emergency fund and gave certain powers for the disposition of it. That provision is as follows:

> The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, yellow fever, or smallpox, to use the unexpended balance of the sums appropriated and reappropriated by the sundry civil appropriation approved March 2, 1889, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in aid of State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same; and the additional sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for the same purpose.

It is just those words "or otherwise" that gave the Government the power to deal with cholera in New York last summer.

If you pass this bill and let this appropriation fail, neither the President nor the Government will have any power to deal with the cholera in the ports of New York, Boston, or New Orleans, except by the gracious permission of the State authorities.

I think we ought to give the Government the whole power; but I do think there ought to be some power in the bill, so that if the State authorities neglect or refuse entirely the President may take such measures as are necessary to prevent the introduction or the spread of disease. That is all I propose by my amendment. That power is not in the bill now, but it ought to be.

Mr. COKE. I ask unanimous consent at this time for the present consideration of a very short bill to which there can be no objection. It is House bill 9824.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length for information.

The bill was read.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask if the yeas and nays were ordered upon the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to the bill which has been under consideration? I remember that they were demanded, but I do not know that they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that they were not ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not quite willing to allow other bills to be taken up when the bill which has been pending has the right of way. I wish to get along with it so far as it is possible to do so, and if the yeas and nays have not been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut I wish to proceed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Have the yeas and nays been called for on the amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WHITE. I understand now that it is pretty well apprehended that this bill will not be finally voted on to-day. With that understanding I shall withdraw the call for the yeas and nays. I do not want to be captious.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be glad to let the bill of the Senator from Texas lie over for a little while, and we may find an opportunity later for its consideration. Let us proceed now with the regular business as far as we reasonably may.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. WHITE. I understand the amendment can be reserved for a separate vote in the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course the Senator can reserve the amendment for a separate vote and have the yeas and nays on it in the Senate if he chooses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] can not now be proceeded with. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] asks for a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 39, after the words "same and," to insert "adopt such measures as in his judgment shall be necessary to prevent the introduction or spread of such diseases, and;" so as to read:

> The President shall execute and enforce the same and adopt such measures as in his judgment shall be necessary to prevent the introduction or spread of such diseases, and may detail or appoint officers for that purpose, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CALL. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I am willing, for one, to vote in favor of the Government of the United States exercising the powers of national quarantine under very strict limitations; I am willing that the power should be granted to the executive department of the Government to suspend intercourse and even to do what the Constitution forbids shall be done as a regulation of commerce, close the ports temporarily where contagious diseases is in imminent danger of being imported into the country, believing that the language of the Constitution may properly be qualified to that extent; but to give an arbitrary power to the President to legislate, to exercise his discretion without limit, to do what Congress may do in making a regulation of commerce, I think is not only unnecessary, but is a very dangerous precedent.

It may be said that the President will wisely execute this power and will wisely frame the measures which he shall see fit to adopt to give a preference to one port over another by a regulation of commerce, for that is the necessary effect of closing the ports of any State or any one port in a State because of the danger of introducing infectious or contagious disease.

What justification can there be in reason for saying to the President "Whenever in your opinion it is proper to close the ports of a State Congress authorizes you to do so?" What authority is there to vest in the President the entire legislative power of Congress not to do a particular act, not to suspend the operation of a law, not to provide a regulation in the enforcement of a law, but in his judgment and discretion to adopt any and all measures for the closing of the ports of a State and the opening of other ports, of controlling the commerce of the United States entirely? Who shall guarantee the integrity of the executive officer to whom this great power is intrusted?

I am willing to give him power to do any particular act; I am in favor of giving a large discretion to the executive officers of the Government; I am not afraid of vesting that authority, but I insist that it shall be done by careful legislation. I think the law should say when the President should do it, upon what information, and not say whenever in his opinion, be it wise or unwise, he thinks proper to adopt, not this particular measure, but any measure and all measures Congress authorizes him to do so. This is to declare him a dictator for the time.

I insist, Mr. President, that there is no such authority in Congress, and that the adoption of this amendment will be a serious obstacle to the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I consented to that amendment, though I do not think it necessary. I think that power is given without the amendment, but the Senator from Connecticut is in doubt about that. The power given to the President to adopt the measures of which the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] speaks, is to the accomplishment of one object, and that object expressed by the bill, to adopt such measures as may be necessary to prevent the importation of contagion from foreign countries into this country, or from one State into another. He could adopt under this authority no measure except one pertinent and necessary to the accomplishment of that object, and if that object is not within the scope of Federal power there is nothing that Congress can do that is within the scope of the Constitution.

Mr. CALL. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that that is not the point of the objection. The point of the objection is that Congress vests its entire legislative power as to the measures in the opinion of the President.

Mr. HARRIS. I intended in my remarks to state to the Senator from Florida that it does no such thing; that it gives the President the power to adopt measures to accomplish a strictly constitutional object and purpose—nothing more, nothing less. But if I had supposed that my remarks would provoke the Senator from Florida to enlighten the Senate further on this subject I should have withheld them.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is only equal upon the floor of the Senate to any other Senator, and I, for one at least, shall not be in anywise influenced in my discussion of a subject by the ill-natured remarks of the Senator.

I insist that the proposition of the Senator is altogether incorrect. The bill unmistakably, in its very language, gives to the President and Secretary of the Treasury, where it mentions them, the right, in their opinion, to adopt such measures as they think are necessary, and the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut so states in precise terms. That was the point of the objection, and the Senator's ill-natured reply can not affect the correctness of that objection; which was that he has brought a bill here giving the entire power of Congress to the discretion of the President, to be exercised as he may see fit and as to such measures as he may adopt. That is the point. The Senator's proposition is that the President is compelled to do such things as are necessary to a purpose declared by Congress. Necessary in whose judgment? Only in that of the President?

The Senator from Florida is as capable of enlightening the Senate as the Senator from Tennessee, and the Senator from Tennessee as often makes inopportune and too frequent remarks as the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. If there are no other amendments to be offered as in Committee of the Whole, let the bill be reported to the Senate.

Mr. CALL. I have an amendment to offer, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 9. That whenever the proper authorities of a State shall surrender to the United States the use of the buildings or disinfecting apparatus at a State quarantine station, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to receive them and to pay a reasonable compensation to the State for their use.

Mr. CALL. I wish to modify my amendment by striking out the word "or," in line 3, and inserting the word "and;" so to read: "buildings and disinfecting apparatus," etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there are some amendments to be offered to the bill before it shall be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not remember that there were. I simply desire to give every Senator an opportunity to offer amendments as in Committee of the Whole as he will have afterwards in the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. I understand the Senator in charge of the bill has been kind enough to say that the question of taking the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment in the Senate is reserved.

Mr. HARRIS. Every Senator has the right to reserve any amendment made as in Committee of the Whole when the bill comes into the Senate, and the Senator will have the right in the Senate to demand the yeas and nays upon that reserved amendment.

Mr. WHITE. It is understood that I may do that?

Mr. HARRIS. Of course there is no question about that.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senate is very thin now, and before this important bill comes to a vote I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for two reasons. I objected a few moments since to the consideration of a bill of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], because I wanted to go on with this bill; and I chance to know that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] is very anxious to have a brief executive session. Let the Senator from Texas call up his bill, which was read a little while ago.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the motion for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Texas to have his bill considered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will change his motion to one for an executive session.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to that.

DEEP-WATER HARBOR ON TEXAS COAST.

Mr. COKE. I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill 9824.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment in line 4, before the word "years," to strike out "five" and insert "two;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of said act be so amended as to extend the time of commencing said work two years from the 9th day of February, 1893.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED SUSPENSION OF IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of January 6, 1893, calling on the Secretary of State for information whether the provisions of Senate bill No. 3513, absolutely suspending immigration for the period of one year, are in conflict with any treaties now existing between the United States and any foreign countries, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State giving the information called for.

BENJ. HARRISON.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 7, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MILITARY TELEGRAPH LINE, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriations submitted by the Secretary of War for a military telegraph line between Fort Ringgold and Fort McIntosh, Tex.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PROPERTY LEASED BY WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a tabular statement showing what property under that Department has been leased since the passage of the act of Congress approved July 28, 1892; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IMPROVEMENTS OF RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House communications from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from the Chief of Engineers, showing preliminary examination and survey of proposed improvements of the Wabash River, Illinois, and also the Embarras River, Illinois; which were severally referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

EXPENSES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting detailed statement of the expenditures of appropriations for that Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.

FINDINGS COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House communications from the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of findings in the case of George W. Smith vs. The United States, and also in the case of W. L. Connelly et al. vs. The United States; which were severally referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House certified copies of the ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President in the States of Nebraska, Minnesota, Kansas, and Missouri, transmitted by the Secretary of State; which were severally ordered to lie upon the table.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted (on motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE) to withdraw from the files of the House the papers and petition of Charles G. Hood, without leaving copies.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FORNEY, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. OHLIGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 166) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cover back into the Treasury $48,800 of the appropriation to Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians;

Joint resolution (S. R. 123) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution;

A bill (S. 1786) granting a pension to Mrs. Jennie Gray;

A bill (S. 1831) to admit free of duty the wreckage of the ships Trenton and Vandalia, presented by the United States to the King of Samoa;

A bill (S. 2593) granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Campbell;

A bill (S. 3029) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River, in the State of Washington;

A bill (S. 2187) granting a pension to Margaret M. Rice; and

A bill (S. 3048) granting to the Blue Mountain Irrigation and Improvement Company a right of way for reservoir and canals through the Umatilla Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3623) to amend the act of March 3, 1873, for the relief of the Columbian University in the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 130) to amend an act entitled "An act making Saturday a half holiday for banking and trust companies in the District of Columbia," approved December 22, 1892.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The following report from a committee was handed in at the Clerk's desk and referred to its appropriate Calendar, as indicated below:

IMMIGRATION AND CONTRACT-LABOR LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HARE, from the Select Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 3240) to facilitate the enforcement of the immigration and contract-labor laws of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE HIWASSEE AND OTHER RIVERS IN THE STATE OF TENNESSEE.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, being the bill (H. R. 10015) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiwassee, the Tennessee, and the Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EVERETT].

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EVERETT] for the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. OTIS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of standing and select committees for reports.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move to dispense with the morning hour, and in that connection I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to submit may file them with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the morning hour, and that gentlemen having reports to make may be permitted to file them with the Clerk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. MCRAE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the first general appropriation bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10038) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the estimates submitted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, aggregate $6,733,544.66. The amount recommended in this bill is $5,160,120.91, being a reduction in the estimates of $1,573,423.75, or $212,616.36 less than the current law.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I ask to have printed in the RECORD—and will have it read if any gentleman desires it—a statement of the various items of increase and decrease in the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I suggest that the statement be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is my request, unless some gentleman prefers to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection it will be inserted in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent—with the consent of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] representing the minority of the committee—that all general debate on the bill be considered as closed.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, all general debate on this bill will be considered as closed, and the Clerk will report the bill by paragraphs.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, for the purposes following, being for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, namely:

Mr. OTIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, line 3, strike out the word "half" and insert the words "one-fourth;" in line 5 strike out the word "half" and insert the words "three-fourths."

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, is not that subject to a point of order?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I will make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It changes existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it reduces the expenditures of the Government very heavily.

Mr. OTIS. I would like to have the gentleman refer to the paragraph on which he relies to sustain his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] will please state his point of order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The point of order is that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. OTIS] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OTIS. I think, Mr. Chairman, under the decision of the Speaker of this House in the last session, that this amendment is in order. I do not believe that it conflicts with Rule XXI, which I believe the gentleman relies upon. Rule XXI reads:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

It certainly reduces the amount of money paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and comes within the purview of this section. I will also call the attention of the Chairman to the fact that in the last session of this Congress we appropriated the sum of $90,000 to the Grand Army encampment, to be paid out of the funds of the District of Columbia; and I can see no objection to changing this bill in such a manner that the District shall be made to pay three-fourths of the taxation of this city, and the Government be charged with only one-fourth. It seems to me that it is against all principles of justice that we should be told that because we have a large amount of public grounds and many public buildings here that we should pay one-half of the taxes.

I have received numbers of communications from citizens of this city on this subject, who desire that an amendment of this character should be adopted. One of those which I have received is as follows:

The Government's presence is a tremendous and increasing Pactolian Niagara of private and real estate riches. Compute all the business thereby brought, all the annual unearned increment (some forty-five million), and about as much cash yearly United States expenditures here. The streets, reservations, etc., are as perfectly free, and the citizens have all the use and benefit of, precisely as though city property. The century ago five-sevenths donated lots would not even now bring $20 an acre but for the Government's golden advent.

I think, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Who is your correspondent?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Read the name of the author.

Mr. OTIS. He is an "Impartial Citizen" [great laughter], and he represents the sentiment of several other correspondents who have written me giving similar expressions; and I think that these citizens are right in this respect.

This bill is brought up under the law of 1878, which I am informed was passed in this body with a view to easing the taxation of the citizens of this city. The people of this District, I think, ought to bear the just burdens of taxation like other American citizens do in this Union, and the Government of the United States should not be called upon to pay one-half of the taxation annually in this city of Washington.

As I said last session, if this Congress and this Capitol were placed in any of the States of the Union, any city in which it was located would only be too glad to donate 640 acres of land free from taxation forever to the Government of the United States. And this is a provision which is working injustice to the American citizen and an injustice to the people of this District who are not land speculators or capitalists.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the discussion in relation to this amendment proceeds the Chair would like to hear read the general statute under which this partnership or agreement between the Government and the city is carried on.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the Chair desire to have read the organic act of 1878?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. The Blackburn act.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, at the last session of this Congress an amendment similar to this was offered by the gentleman from Kansas who submits the present amendment. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] was chairman of the Committee of the Whole. A point of order was made against the amendment I believe by my colleague [Mr. DOCKERY], and the gentleman from Kansas apparently conceding the point of order to be good, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole did not rule upon it, and the amendment dropped.

At a later stage of the proceedings I submitted a motion in the House to recommit, or to amend a motion to recommit, with instructions to report the bill back so amended as to require but one-fourth of the revenues to be paid out of the general Treasury and three-fourths out of the District treasury. A point of order was also made upon that motion, and after some discussion, during which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], who was Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, stated what had transpired in that committee upon the question, the Speaker ruled upon it, overruling the point of order, and deciding that the motion to recommit was good and was in order; and I think I can refer the Chair to the ruling.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DE ARMOND. With pleasure.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I was about to state the history of this motion at the last session. My colleague has, however, stated it correctly. I shall not, at this session, support the proposition presented by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OTIS]; but I am satisfied that, under the ruling made by the Speaker at the last session on the motion to recommit, the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas is in order, and therefore I did not raise the question of order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I wish to be heard upon that proposition before the Chair decides the question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The record of the proceedings to which I have referred is to be found upon pages 1696, 1697, and 1698, of Volume 21 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I will read simply the decision of the Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes it is the same decision which is to be found on page 255 of the Digest.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the Chair please have that decision reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the portion of the decision indicated.

The Clerk read as follows:

This bill, a copy of which is before the Chair, provides, that the half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

So there seems to be an amount of money in the Treasury recognized as the "revenues of the District of Columbia," distinct from money in the Treasury from general sources, and this proposition, as the Chair understands, is to reduce the amount appropriated from the general fund that is raised for general purposes. Therefore, the Chair thinks the amendment reduces expenditures, and is in order.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That is the decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read paragraph 2 of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill, or amendment thereto, changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Mr. DOCKERY Mr. Chairman, in response to a request of the Chairman, I desire to read paragraph 16 of section 3 of the act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia. It is as follows:

To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, it ought to be a matter of some consequence to remember that there is not a dollar collected out of the taxpayers of the District of Columbia that does not go into the Treasury of the United States. This rule simply provides that an amendment can be entertained if its effect is a "reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States," or a "reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States." I deny that this amendment reduces the compensation of a single person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

I want to call the attention of the Chair particularly to the wording of the rule, "shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States." Now, this amendment does not reduce either the number or the salaries of any officers of the United States. The rule then goes on to say, "or by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States." That is all it says. In the first place, all the money that is appropriated under this bill is paid out of the Treasury of the United States, but even if the District fund were not in the Treasury, still this amendment does not propose to reduce the compensation of a single person.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. And will not do so in fact.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And will not do so in fact. If this amendment prevails the compensation of the persons paid under this bill will be absolutely the same after the adoption of the amendment as it is under the proposed bill.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. And the number of persons paid will be the same?

Mr. HEMPHILL. And the number will be the same.

Mr. OTIS. Then why do you object to it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I object to it because it changes existing law and because it is not proper under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Waiving the question of whether or not the amendment changes existing law, the Chair is of the opinion that under the rule just read, as well as under the decision of the Speaker which has been cited, this amendment is in order, and overrules the point of order. The latter clause of the rule just preceding the proviso reads, "or by the reduction of the amount of money covered by the bill." This amendment certainly proposes to reduce the amount of money to be appropriated from the United States Treasury, which should be the test.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It does not say so.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the Chair to hold that the amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so decided.

Mr. HEMPHILL appealed from the decision of the Chair, but immediately withdrew the appeal.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I think that the amendment offered by my friend from Kansas ought not to be adopted at this session, for the reason that its adoption will involve a deficiency in the District revenues of $728,204.74. It is true that the appropriations now carried in the bill will leave a surplus in the Treasury amounting to $570,000 in round numbers to the credit of the District of Columbia; but under the provisions of the bill that surplus will be applied to the indebtedness due the United States by the District of Columbia, which at the close of the present fiscal year will amount to $974,349.74.

To state again the proposition, the amendment ought not to prevail for the reason that it would create a deficiency in the revenues of $728,204.74——

Mr. BRETZ. What revenues; the District revenues?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir; and for the further reason that the District is now indebted to the United States in the sum of something over $974,000. For these reasons I shall oppose the adoption of this proposition at the present session of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he is aware of the fact that for the last year the officers of the District government—the assessors and the board of equalization—have been engaged in an effort to prevent revenues from coming into the District of Columbia fund. Is the gentleman aware that board after board has been appointed to cut down assessments so as to reduce the amount of money coming?

Mr. DOCKERY I will say in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON] that it is not the issue here. The estimated receipts of the District of Columbia, $3,216,282.82, are based on existing law.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the reason advanced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], as I understand, why this amendment ought not to prevail is, that a deficit in the Treasury will thereby be created. I have heard considerable to the effect that we are threatened with a deficit in the Treasury of the United States. It is certainly true that money ought not to be taken out of the public Treasury simply because upon the present assessment there may not be sufficient revenues raised in the District to meet the expenses which those charged with the expenditure of the money desire to incur. The rate of taxation in this District is not over $1.50 on $100, with an exemption, I believe, of $500 to each person, and with a further exemption in the provision which permits an offset or deduction of all indebtedness which a person may owe; and the taxation on what is called farm property, property outside the city limits and within the District, does not exceed $1 upon the $100.

Sir, there is not in the United States a city, large or small, where the rate of taxation is so low as in this city; and it will be hard to find any city where the inhabitants get more for a given amount of expenditure than they do here. While the people of the United States are paying to the taxgatherer at the rate of two or three dollars and upward on the hundred dollars on all their property, they are yet compelled to pay one-half of the taxes of the people of this District.

Let any one glance through this bill and observe what are the objects of appropriation. Where there is one that has relation to the United States or affects the people of the United States there are twenty which are peculiarly, essentially, strictly, wholly municipal—relating solely and entirely to the people of the District, the people of this city. I venture to say there is scarcely a gentleman in this House who will dare go back to his constituency and proclaim that he has advocated taxing the people of the United States to an amount equal to half the expenditures for this District. Scarcely a man here will go back and say to his constitutents who are paying upon every dollar of their property more than three times as much is paid by the taxpaying citizens of this District, "I have advocated and voted for a measure to compel you to pay half the taxes of the people of the District of Columbia."

And let gentlemen not suppose that the people throughout the country, burdened with excessive taxation, will remain forever ignorant of the fact that their representatives pile two or three million dollars of taxes upon them yearly for the benefit of the people of the District of Columbia, including, possibly, some Senators and Representatives. When the gentleman from Kansas rose to offer his amendment I rose for the purpose of offering another proposition—to strike out all of this bill requiring the payment of anything out of the Treasury of the United States. My idea is that the people of the District should pay the taxes which are peculiarly and essentially District taxes—the people of this city the city taxes. If there are embraced in this bill items which should be paid by the United States let them be incorporated in a separate bill, which will not be based on the proposition that the people of the District are to pay the half of $100 in order to induce the people of the United States to pay the half of $1,000, or something in that proportion. Since we have now the opportunity, since it is in accordance with law and justice, let us confine this bill for once to its proper objects; and let us make appropriations for the District of Columbia out of the revenues of the District.

Wherever and whenever it is necessary or proper for the people of the United States to make payment of anything let them make payment in a direct way. There is no use in talking about a deficiency. To talk in that way is simply shifting the ground. The people back in the country—in the gentleman's district and in mine and in almost every district represented on this floor—are, I repeat, paying now in taxes three times as much upon every dollar of property they own as the people of this District are paying. If there is to be a deficit in the revenues, let those who are lightly taxed make good the necessary amount to meet it, instead of those who are heavily taxed to-day and who are compelled by such legislation as this bill embodies to contribute by way of gratuity, unwillingly and unknowingly, to make up the necessary fund to meet such deficit.

Not only, Mr. Chairman, should the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas be adopted, but we should go a step further and strike out all of the bill requiring the payment of any part of these appropriations from the public Treasury, and put into a separate bill such items, if there be any, as should be paid by the people of the United States. Then we will know what we are doing and the people will know what we are doing. Wrong will be done no one and right will be done to all, so far as this bill goes. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. The proposition my colleague makes should be presented to the District Committee, which is charged, under the rules of the House, with the inauguration of reforms in the government of the District, and not the Committee on Appropriations, which simply reports appropriations under existing laws. The gentleman has mistaken his remedy.

Mr. DE ARMOND. One word in answer to the suggestion of my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired, but without objection he may proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. DEARMOND. I am not criticising the committee because they report appropriations in accordance with existing law. I am not finding fault with the committee for its action in the matter. I am saying now simply that which can not be denied, that in voting up or in voting down this proposition to shift taxation from the people of the United States to the people of this District we are not compelled, in order to do justice to the people we represent, to resort to the Committee on the District of Columbia or to any other committee of the House. We are in the great Committee of the Whole here, and this committee is competent to decide the question. I am addressing myself to the judgment and to the sense of right of this committee, and do not care to withdraw from that position for the purpose of submitting something to a committee which has less power and less significance than the body before which this proposition is now pending.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas, and will give some of the reasons for entertaining that objection. In the first place this question of the assessment of property here is not in issue on this amendment. That is a question of the execution of the law. How I shall stand on that question is not to be measured in any way by my objection to the pending amendment. I am in favor of a true and accurate assessment always; therefore I pass that part of the discussion as not germane in any way to the issue.

I am opposed to the pending amendment for the reason that it involves the overthrow—the radical overthrow—of the present system of raising funds for carrying on the affairs of this District. In 1878 the present plan—the law under which we are now operating—was adopted. Homes have been bought in this District and business interests inaugurated, and the system of running the local government of this District has been carried on since that year in pursuance of existing law.

I do not believe it is wise on an amendment here, introduced in Committee of the Whole, to attack and radically change this great system affecting the affairs of this District. I believe such a measure should have its origin, if it be considered by this House, with the Committee on the District of Columbia, where the citizens of the District may be heard and the matter fully discussed and considered; where all parties interested should be allowed to go before the committee, of their city council as it were, and express their judgment on the proposition. Therefore am I opposed now to that amendment on that single thought without yet reaching the merits of the question, and I may say, and think I am not digressing from the privileges of the floor, that that was the thought of the Committee on Appropriations when this matter was suggested to them, and when they refused to change the ratio coming from the District and the Federal Government respectively.

But, Mr. Chairman, coming now to the real question presented. The present plan of requiring one-half of the expenses to be paid from the Federal Treasury, and one-half from the funds of the District of Columbia, was inaugurated by what is known as the Blackburn law. Mr. Blackburn, then a member of the House from Kentucky, is known as the father or author of that proposition which was to divide the expenditures half and half between the General Government and the District. Now, my friend from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], who spoke just before me, would go even farther than the pending amendment and make the District pay all of the expenses.

It seems to me that those who take this radical ground, or those who take the ground even in favor of cutting down the one-half now paid by the General Government to one-quarter, have not carefully considered the conditions of the District, or the provisions of this bill. I do not wish to reflect upon their judgment, nor upon their position upon this question. But I feel that they can not have given the situation of affairs in this District that thoughtful consideration which is needed before reaching a judgment of that kind.

I have not the figures before me, because I did not anticipate this debate, but in a former Congress I published an elaborate statement, showing all that the citizens of the District of Columbia had contributed to the General Government, amounting to many, many millions of dollars.

Let it be borne in mind also that the great number of public buildings here belonging to the General Government bear no weight of the burdens of this District, and are wholly exempt from taxation. I doubt if a single citizen of the District of Columbia or any one appreciating the conditions in the District, would interpose a single objection if all of the property of the District of Columbia, including United States property, were to bear equally the burdens of taxation; but the Government is exempt.

Now, my friend from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] says that only a small amount of the items in this bill affect the Government at large. I challenge the calling attention to a single item in this bill that does not have relation to the people at large in this country. Do you refer to the money expended upon the streets? The feet of millions and millions of our countrymen, nonresidents of this District, annually tread them and wear them out.

Do you refer to the schools? The children of twenty thousand clerks in this District, citizens of our respective States, patronize these schools and the money goes to their education.

Do you refer to charitable institutions? In company with colleagues on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, I have visited fifteen out of thirty-one of them at this session, and I am amazed to find how far-reaching these charitable institutions are in aiding and carrying their blessings to people who are not citizens of the District of Columbia. That seems to be wrong, but it is an incident of our peculiar system of government.

Do you refer to the police? Their duties touch every one visiting our city, and touch few less harshly than the citizens of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will allow me to suggest, 46 of the police are detailed for duty at the Executive Mansion and other Government buildings.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. That is a good suggestion. Instead of soldiers to police them, we prefer to have these civilian officers around the public buildings. I prefer it. I do not like fixed bayonets, not even in war, if I can avoid them.

But I want to call the attention of gentlemen of this committee to the fact that this great Republic uses this District as its place of business, uses it as its own city; and it was on that theory that the Blackburn law laid down the doctrine that the General Government should pay one-half of the expenses.

I have been eight years a member of this subcommittee in charge of the appropriations for the District of Columbia. I remember that I started in with an adverse impression toward this system; but growing familiarity with the conditions of the District, has led me to approve unhesitatingly of the system, and I warn you, my fellow Representatives, against this radical change until full discussion is had, a discussion in which not only representatives of the country at large, but residents of the city may have a hearing before action is taken.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think it would be proper to extend this discussion to too great a length; but in view of the declaration made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] it does seem to me that the attention of the House ought to be directed to the facts in this case; and at the risk of tiring the committee I will seek to further enforce what has already been said, and some things which have been hinted at, by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Now, Mr. Chairman, what would my friend [Mr. DE ARMOND] have? What does his proposition mean? Has he reflected, does he know that—in my poor judgment at least—the grossest conceivable injustice would be done by a proposition such as he has suggested to this House? Injustice enough is embodied in the proposition submitted by the gentleman on my right [Mr. OTIS]; but, sir, to come here and say that the property of the people of the District of Columbia shall be taxed to practically support the Federal Government; to say that the property of the people of the District shall be taxed to furnish the means wherewith the property of the Government in this District shall be protected against fire; to say that the property of the people of this District shall be alone taxed to furnish educational advantages for the children of thousands of people who are not residents or taxpayers of this District; to say that the property of this District shall alone be taxed to furnish police protection to the thousands of district agents of the Government of the United States who pay no taxes here and who are not residents of this District; to say that the property of this District shall alone be taxed to provide proper sewerage to protect the health of the District of Columbia, in which so many agents of the Federal Government, nonresidents of the District and nonproperty-holders, are interested would, as I say, be the grossest conceivable injustice.

Why, Mr. Chairman, it is true that it is a privilege and a great blessing to this District and the property-holders in this District that they shall have in their presence the great Government of this Union. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that the privilege of having the President of these United States here is a great blessing and privilege to the people of this District; and if the proposition of the gentleman will hold, it would be an equally good and sound reason why the property of the District should be assessed and taxes levied and collected so as to pay the salary of the President of the United States.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON], as he says it is a great blessing and privilege that the President resides here, is it not also a fact that his residence here brings very large advantage here in the enhancement of the value of real estate; and I would ask whether or not the people of the District of Columbia would not prefer to tax themselves so as to retain those advantages rather than to have this capital removed to some other part of our country, where we would take care of the Government?

Mr. COMPTON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has raised a man from his imagination and a condition of things that he knows does not exist. He knows as well as I do that his premises and hypotheses have no foundation in fact, and therefore I decline to discuss that proposition or answer his suggestion. [Laughter.] He is suggesting a condition of things that never has and never will exist. Why, Mr. Chairman, it does strike me that such propositions as those of the gentleman on my right [Mr. OTIS], and especially that of the gentleman from Missouri on my left [Mr. DE ARMOND], are the most unreasonable, unjust, and unfair propositions that I ever heard submitted upon the floor of this House, and I hope the House will not entertain them.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] began his speech, I had an intimation from him that he expected to submit some remarks in respect to this amendment, and I suggested to him that I would like to have some good reason given me that I could give my people why we should vote money out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of paying the expenses of the District of Columbia. Now, I suppose he has given the House all he had to present upon that subject.

Mr. COMPTON. Oh, no; I could have gone on indefinitely. [Laughter.]

Mr. KYLE. And let us see what it is. Why the intimation comes out that it is a disadvantage to the District of Columbia to have the capital situated here.

Mr. COMPTON. Oh, no.

Mr. KYLE. That is the effect of your argument. That it is such a disadvantage to the city to have the public buildings here and causes such an additional expense to it, that the Government ought to come with its Treasury and pay the increased charges. Now, that is all there is in it; and that is all there is in this argument—that simply because the Government has its public buildings here, and that it transacts its business here, for that reason, and for that reason alone, the General Government ought to pay half the expenses of this District. Now, is that not true? Have I not stated the proposition fairly and squarely, as it has been presented both by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON].

Now, I want to submit to the committee this question: Upon what theory of right, justice, equity, fairness, or common sense can you justify this sort of unfairness to the people at large? Where could you find a city in this great country, in any State from Maine to Texas, that would not be proud of the privilege of having these public buildings situated within its corporation? And could they be now located in one of these it would gladly accept them, and not ask the Government to pay their city expenses for them because of such location.

Mr. ALLEN. Tupelo will take them. [Laughter.]

Mr. KYLE. Yes, I am glad my colleague from Mississippi has made the suggestion. I believe the patriotic town of Tupelo, in the State of Mississippi, would open wide its gates and permit the seat of Government to be located within its limits and not look to Congress for an appropriation to pay them for the privilege of living in the nation's capital, because the people of Mississippi are accustomed to paying for all they get out of this Government.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. They are satisfied with the representation they have here. [Laughter.]

Mr. KYLE. That is well enough, and I am glad it is true; but, Mr. Chairman, it is claimed that people come here from different parts of the country and wear the pavements and walks. Is this not true of any other city? I do not see that there is anything in this argument.

Why, that is true of all the cities in this great country, and the people who live in those cities are only too glad to welcome their neighbors and others who will visit them. Is that any argument?

It is insisted that because there are institutions in the District for the care and maintenance of the unfortunate who are unable to care for themselves, for this reason the Federal Treasury should pay one-half the expenses. I suppose there is no city in the world as large as this and inhabited by a charitable people that has not made provision for this class of people, and many of them, no doubt, entertain and care for as many unfortunates. Are these cities not in their father's house, and have they not as much right to expect reimbursement from the General Government as this city has? If not, why not?

I submit, Mr. Speaker, with all candor, earnestness, sincerity, and honesty, that I can not see anything in the arguments of these gentlemen upon this proposition, and I do not see how any Representative can justify himself to his constituency when he votes that one-half of the expenses of this District shall be paid out of the Federal Treasury, especially when he remembers that the money with which they are paid comes from a constituency already overburdened with taxation—taxed beyond their capacity to pay, and not taxed as these people in the District of Columbia ought to be—in proportion to the value of the property they own. Our constituents are forced to contribute the money that helps to sustain these people by paying duties upon the necessaries of life which they are compelled to buy in the form of manufactured goods. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of a reform in the expenditures of this Government, and I think here is a good place, as we have not done so before, to begin, and set the seal of condemnation upon this piece of favoritism, which is wholly indefensible.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in twenty minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think I shall have to object to that. I want to hear some reason given why this proposition should be voted upon at all. I do not think anybody has assigned any yet. I desire to occupy about ten minutes myself.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Let the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] have ten minutes, and then we can probably agree to limit the debate.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this proposition and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] be limited to thirty minutes, ten minutes of which shall be occupied by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I hope the time will be divided equally between the advocates and the opponents of the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that to be the practice. Unanimous consent is asked that all debate upon the pending amendment and the proposed substitute be limited to thirty minutes, the time to be divided equally between the advocates and the opponents of the proposition.

Mr. DOCKERY. Ten minutes of the time to be occupied by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. We will see that he gets ten minutes of the time allotted to the opponents of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SEERLEY. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio was recognized.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] has not yet been sent to the desk, the Chair understands. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I propose to vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. OTIS]; not, however, for the reasons given by the members of the committee. Except by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], there has not been one substantial reason given why this amendment should be voted down. The suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa that the people of this District should have a hearing upon this question is entirely proper; but, I repeat, that is the only valid reason given so far in opposition to this amendment. I propose to vote against the amendment because the people of this District are to-day unjustly taxed, some men paying ten times as much taxes as others, and if you to-day repeal the existing law and require the people of this District to pay one-fourth instead of one-half, you will add greatly to the burdens of a part of the taxpayers of this District who are already too heavily taxed.

The first duty you have is to arrive at a proper basis of assessment, and see what a just system of assessment and taxation will yield, and then discuss fairly what share the Government ought to pay. It is clearly and absolutely certain that the United States Government ought to pay some part of the taxes of the District of Columbia. It is not right that all the property of the Government here should contribute nothing to the District expenses; but whether the proportion should be one-half or one-quarter is an open question, one that a committee organized for that purpose or the regular District of Columbia Committee should take up and carefully consider.

Some of the objections made here to this amendment are very peculiar. Gentlemen say that the United States ought to pay a certain proportion of these expenses because strangers come here and walk our streets, and because clerks from all over the country are living here and are not taxpayers. They are mistaken. Every man who comes into this city, whether he stays one day or one week or many days and weeks, whether he is a clerk or not, whether his name is on the rolls as a taxpayer in the District or not, pays taxes here. He must sleep somewhere, and when he pays his room rent or his house rent he pays taxes and is therefore a taxpayer in the District of Columbia. The first question we have to consider is the question of a just assessment, and a little later in the consideration of this bill I propose to ask the committee to consider an amendment reaching that particular point.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the substitute which I have sent to the desk.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "half of," in line 3, and also by the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half," in lines 4 and 5.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, when the Federal Government selected this location for its capital it established a peculiar relationship with this District which has always since been recognized. It will not do to judge of the relation of the Federal Government to this city as we would judge of our relations with any other city in the Union. When the capital was first established here this was a wilderness; there was no city, and the entire expenses necessarily were defrayed by the Federal Government. There was no property here to be taxed except farm property, and from that day to this it has always been recognized that the Federal Government had to proceed from first defraying all the expenses to participating afterwards in a part of the expenses. I think it has also been recognized that the time would come when the participation on the part of the Federal Government in what seem to be the ordinary municipal expenses would become less and less.

We are now proceeding under an arrangement by which we pay 50 per cent of the expenses of the municipal government. This, I think, is fully as much as the Federal Government ought to pay. I think it is more than at this time we ought to pay. But undoubtedly, sir, a change in this ratio should never be hastily made. We must remember that ratios of this kind are not established without thought, discussion, and careful investigation. This ratio was established principally under the leadership of Mr. BLACKBURN of Kentucky. It was established by a Democratic House when the spirit of economy was very strong in this body. I insist, therefore, that this House should consider in the first place that to enact the provision now proposed without a very extensive adjustment in other matters in order to meet its effects would throw the whole business of the District and of the Government in its relations thereto into inextricable confusion. There has been no consideration of the effects of such legislation and no provision to meet those effects.

Mr. SEERLEY. When will there be?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Why, sir, whenever the District Committee, the proper committee, will consider a bill which any gentleman is at liberty to introduce and have referred to it.

Mr. SEERLEY. In the next generation.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. The question has been dealt with from time to time, and it should always be dealt with advisedly.

It has been well said that the District has interests in this question which can not be ignored. The time has not come when the Federal Government can wholly dispense with some participation in what seems to be the municipal expenditures of the capital. The authorities of the District and the people here have had no hearing or opportuity for a hearing on this question.

It will make such a change as has never yet been made hastily and without consideration of all the details and effects. It will pass judgment upon the interests of the people of this District without giving them a day in court. Such a step would be precipitate, unwise, and unjust. The proper committee, charged with legislation of this character, should take the question when referred to it into consideration; and I think that in the early future there should be a readjustment. But certainly there should be no hasty action by this House at this time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, the provision of existing law which it is now proposed to change was adopted by the Congress of the United States and approved by the President as far back as 1878, after a thorough investigation of the whole question. From that time to this whenever the question has been investigated propositions of this kind have always been negatived by any committee or any House to which they have been submitted. I think that if we will look at the past we can not hesitate in reaching the conclusion that if this subject were investigated before a committee appointed for the purpose, and all parties in interest given a fair hearing, such an amendment as this would not be adopted. How much of the taxes do the people of this District pay? Over $2,500,000. That is more than $10 a head for every man, woman, and child in the District of Columbia. I want to know whether there is any other city in the United States in which every man, woman, and child pays a tax of $10?

Gentlemen who have discussed this question speak of taxing their constituents to pay the expenses of this District out of the public Treasury, as if we were not taxing the people of the District as well for the money which forms a part of the public Treasury. The people of the District of Columbia pay one-half of the total expenses of the District government, and they pay also their proper share as citizens of the United States into the general Treasury, from which we take the balance of the money expended here, so that they are paying double taxation. The citizens here are taxed for local purposes at the rate of $10 a head; and, in addition, as citizens of the common country, they are taxed as the rest of us are taxed. Their money goes into the general Treasury, and from that is drawn the other half of the expenses of this District.

But, Mr. Chairman, if we adopt this amendment where is the other one-fourth of this money to come from? Is any gentleman on this floor able to state to the House that there is money enough in the District treasury to pay three-fourths of the expenditures of the District government? We have not had any figures submitted on that subject.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Oh, yes; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] showed that there would be a deficiency.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I mean we have not had any figures from gentlemen who advocate the amendment, showing there is money in the District treasury to meet these appropriations under the terms of the amendment or that there will be money enough there. What is to become of the fire department, the police department, the water department of this District if we go on and appropriate money out of the District treasury when the money is not there to pay the appropriations?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. The people of the District pay the entire amount of the water tax.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes; as suggested by the gentleman, the people of the District pay the entire water tax, and we all get the benefit of it. But in addition, Mr. Chairman, there are many people in this city who are not residents of the District—people who are coming here from all parts of the country and getting the benefit of the money that is appropriated for this city. Take the children, for instance, who go to the public schools of the District. Is there any justice, I would ask, in taxing the people of the District of Columbia to buy the school books for the education of the children of members of Congress who go to the public schools here? And that is just what we would do if we adopt the amendment. We will be taking the money from other people's pockets to pay the expenses of the school system of this District and to buy books to educate the children of members of Congress of the United States and of the other officers of this Government who come here and enjoy these privileges.

And I want to say in addition, sir, that this city has been laid out by the National Government. That is a fact that gentlemen should keep in mind. A public debt of more than $20,000,000 has been incurred here under the various acts of Congress of the United States regulating the affairs of the District, in respect to which the people themselves have had no voice. We have broad streets, wide reservations here, which were laid out a hundred years ago; and I repeat that there is neither sense nor justice in levying a tax on the people of the District alone to keep up these great thoroughfares and handsome parks, which all of the people of the country enjoy, especially when these taxpayers in the District have no voice in saying whether they shall be kept up, or as to the manner in which they shall be kept up, or anything whatever in regard to them.

If we are going to make them bear the burdens of the Government, we ought to let them govern their own city and let them say that the streets shall be of such width, and that they shall be paved in such manner and kept up in such a way as the people feel they are able to provide for. But for us to come here as the representatives of the people of the United States and say that this is to be the great national capital in which all of the people can take pleasure and pride; that we are to have wider and better paved streets than any other city, and parks kept up and trees planted and grass growing, with no representation and no voice in the matter on the part of the people of this city, I say if that is to be done, then the Government should pay its due proportion of the expenditures. If, on the contrary, we are to say to the people here you must pay the whole of the expenses, then as a matter of right and justice they should determine what part of these improvements shall be maintained and what shall not be?

I say, therefore, sir, that the proper thing, as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], if gentleman want such a change, is to carefully investigate the matter by a committee, and whatever is the proper share of this Government let it be paid by the District people, but let them first have an opportunity of discussing and presenting their side of the case. And if there is any gentleman here who wants such an investigation let him introduce a bill; let it go before the proper committee, and let the people have a hearing before they shall be burdened with additional taxes, and then have the matter come before the House in proper form.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman from South Carolina before he sits down allow me to make one additional suggestion?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. You have referred to the expenditures for the water department. These expenditures are not only paid entirely out of the funds of the water department arising from the District of Columbia, but every Government building is supplied with this water free. The Government pays not a dollar for water consumed in all the public buildings.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that it is due to the House that those gentlemen who have been arguing in favor of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Kansas should show to the House, in the event of the adoption of the pending proposition, how the necessary expenses of the Government, incidental and necessary, are to be provided for. They surely do not mean to say that they would impose additional taxation on the private property of the people here to provide the Government of the United States with all of its wants in the District. Therefore, I say it is incumbent upon them to show the House, in the event of the adoption of their proposition, how these necessary expenses of the Government provided for in this bill are to be paid, in view of the fact that a deficit will exist in the treasury of the District of Columbia if this legislation should prevail.

And now before taking my seat I want to call attention to another fact which I think can not be known to gentlemen on this floor who advocate this proposition, that, in addition to the immense number of grand public buildings and parks and other property owned in this capital by the Federal Government, the fee simple in every foot of the streets and in every sidewalk in the city of Washington rests in the Federal Government to-day.

Are our friends, then, prepared to say that the Federal Government shall bear none, or comparatively none, of the burdens of taxation of this District, but that the property of the people of the District shall be assessed and levied on and the money raised to provide for these streets and the pavements, the fee-simple right to which exists to-day in the Federal Government?

Mr. OTIS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COMPTON. Certainly.

Mr. OTIS. Is it any worse for the District of Columbia to have a deficit in its treasury than for the United States to have a deficit in its Treasury?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. We do not intend that either shall have a deficit.

Mr. HEMPHILL. O, no; we will look out for that.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. The gentleman need not worry about deficits.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. OTIS].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to further trespass upon the time of the House in the discussion of this question, but I feel like saying a word or two more upon it.

It seems to me that there is a strange lack of harmony in the views of those who antagonize the proposition. There is a suggestion that we ought to approach this matter with great care and caution, and ought only to legislate upon it after great deliberation. And yet there is a request that all debate upon the proposition be closed in twenty or thirty minutes.

What better time is there for giving this question consideration than the present, when the subject is up? What can better engage the attention of the representatives of the people in this House than these questions relating to taxation?

It has been suggested that in 1878 the present plan of imposing half the taxes upon the general public and half upon the people of this District for the support of this District government was adopted by a Democratic House; and it was added that it also received the approval of the President, who was at that time, I believe, Mr. Hayes. That would make a tolerably even break upon the proposition.

It is said that that measure was a measure of great reform, that it was a relief to the people of the United States. If so it was worthy of the approval of the Democratic party, pledged to relieve the people from unjust taxation. If relief was given to the people in 1878, what is the force of the argument that fifteen years later there can be no further need of relief and no further opportunity for relief by this sort of reform. How mightily has this city grown in the fifteen years since 1878! How much worse is the condition of the people in many respects now, the country over, than it was fifteen years ago!

The burden of taxation has not been lessened for them. The burden of taxation upon them is grievous and hard to be borne. If there is reason for further deliberation in the consideration of this question, then let there be further deliberation and consideration. Why trifle with the question by suggesting that it be permitted to drag its weary length through some committee, perhaps to be strangled in the committee room? If it is to be strangled, let it be done here in the open House, in the sight of the country.

The suggestion was made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] that the police here preserve the peace not only for the citizens, but for strangers who come to Washington upon public business, and on other accounts; and that therefore the Government of the United States should bear at least a portion—which he seems to think ought to be one-half—of the expense of the police department. Can not the same statement be made with reference to the police departments of New York, of Chicago, of St. Louis—aye, of the gentleman's own city of Dubuque? Are not the police everywhere agents employed for the preservation of the peace, for the protection of the stranger as well as of the citizen?

It was suggested by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] that if this substitute were adopted there would be cast upon the people of this District the payment of the entire sum required for the support of the public schools. Why should not the payment of that entire sum be cast upon the people of this District?

It has been suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina Mr. HEMPHILL], by way of addendum, that the children of members of Congress are educated in these public schools free of charge, and that books are supplied them in some of the grades without cost, and that if this amendment were to prevail, the people of the District of Columbia would be required to supply books free, and tuition free, to the children of members of Congress. By a little reflection upon that proposition, the gentleman could, I think, readily perceive a way to get out of that difficulty without the slaughter of this amendment. The regulations could easily be so changed as to provide that the children of members of Congress shall not be supplied with books and tuition free. Look at the proposition. The people of the United States are taxed between two and three millions of dollars annually because, forsooth there is a little money expended in supplying the children of the members of Congress with tuition and with books free of cost to them.

Let members of Congress, like other people, pay for the education of their children, and not throw that cost back upon their constituencies. Then there is a suggestion, too, that this has grown up to be a great city; that it is the capital of the nation, and the Government ought in some way to take care of it by paying part of the taxes of its people. The Government has been taking care of it, and but for the fact that it is the seat of government and that it is a beneficiary of the Government trees would be growing and swamps would exist where now this capital city is found. That is the fact of the situation. Instead of the people of the District of Columbia making this capital city, the Government has made it. But for the advantages that came to this site by reason of its being the location of the seat of government there would be no town here; perhaps not even a straggling village.

As was suggested by my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], if this capital were removed to the heart of the country and placed upon the bank of the mighty Mississippi or upon the shore of one of the Great Lakes, there might be found in the broad spirit of the broad West a disposition to endeavor to live and let live within a reasonable radius of that capital without plundering the people of the United States. It was suggested, too, by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] that the taxation in this city amounts to $10 per head. It has also been suggested privately, in contradiction of a statement I made that the rate of taxation here is larger than any other city in the Union, Chicago alone excepted.

I challenge that statement. Here are paid nothing but city taxes. When you take the taxes that are paid on land and personalty, for State, school, county, municipal, and other purposes, I say there can not be found within this Union a single town, great or small, or a single rural district, in which the people are taxed upon each $100 of their possessions less than these District people are. Outside of this city and the city of Georgetown, in what they call "the agricultural districts" of the District of Columbia, the people are taxed $1 upon each $100 worth of real property. And there is permission to take out $500 worth of property as exempt, and also permission to deduct all their liabilities. Within the corporation the rate of taxation is $1.50 upon every $100 worth, and that is the whole taxation except what these people bear in common with all the people of the United States under our system of indirect taxation. That is all the taxation they have. To them, as compared with the people of the United States at large, it stands for State and county taxes, road taxes, school taxes, and all other kind of taxes; and all of it amounts to no more than $1.50 within these two cities, and $1 outside of them, but within the District of Columbia, upon the $100 worth of property subject to taxation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the propositions pending to this paragraph be limited to twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TUCKER. I object.

Mr. ANTONY. I suggest thirty minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman suggests thirty minutes. I ask that the proposition be submitted in that form.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that all debate upon the pending propositions be limited to thirty minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri to control fifteen minutes of the time.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to speak for or against the amendment?

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the general proposition of reform, but this may not be the way of reaching the question. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to be in charge of the time in favor of the amendment.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Chairman, this may not be the proper way of reaching the reform contemplated by the friends of this amendment, but it seems to me that in some way or other this end should be attained.

In the history of this city it is found that the Government has paid a large part of the taxes; that up to 1878 the city paid the greater part, and that since 1878 the taxes have been divided equally between the city and the General Government.

Now, it is pertinent to inquire what gives the great value to the property——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that at no time has the Government failed to participate liberally in the expenses of the city.

Mr. STOUT. I am aware of that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. But that is contrary to the statement the gentleman has made.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Not by way of supplementary taxes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. The Government has at all times defrayed part of the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STOUT. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the Government has been very liberal in making special appropriations, but the general policy of dividing the taxes in equal proportions between the people of the District of Columbia and the General Government has only obtained since the year 1878. As I was saying, it is a pertinent inquiry here to ask what gives the special great value to the property in the city of Washington. It is that a large portion of the taxation is paid by the General Government. I may here say that there is not a city in the United States with a population such as that of Washington where real estate is as high as it is here; and the reason is because the Government steps in and pays a large portion of its taxation.

Now, this may or may not be the time to discuss this matter and to determine the policy to be pursued with respect to taxation in this city, but I desire to emphasize the fact that the people of this country demand that a less proportion of the expenses of this city shall be paid by the General Government. At the same time the General Government should be liberal, very liberal, toward the city of Washington. It should not, simply from the fact that this is the capital of the country, and because a large part of the value of the property here comes from that fact—the General Government should not, for that reason, refuse to be generous; but I contend that it ought not to pay the proportion of the expenses of the District that it now pays.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

Mr. BYNUM. I have not paid a great deal of attention to the administration of the government of this District, leaving that entirely to the District Committee and to the Committee on Appropriations, and therefore I am not as well posted as I ought to be to speak upon this question. The copartnership between the Federal Government and the District government was formed for the purpose of transferring the administration of local affairs from the hands of the local government to Congress.

Now, it does seem to me that if we are going to assess the people of the District for the entire expenditures of the local government; if this municipality is to be carried on in the present expensive manner in which it has been carried on up to this time; if the present standard of improvements is to be maintained, we ought to pay a portion of the expenses. If we are not going to do so we ought to turn the control of it over to the people of the District. Certainly we ought not to collect so large a sum of money as we are now appropriating from the people and retain the right to regulate the expenditure. If we are going to divorce ourselves from the District by refusing to contribute to its support, then let us turn over the government to the people who are required to pay the bill.

It is not right that Congress should retain its jurisdiction and at the same time compel the people of the District to pay all the taxes. Take, for instance, the street improvements in this city. In almost every other city in the country such improvements are made by assessing the abutting property. I am not positive that my information is correct upon this point, though I have an impression that the United States owns nearly one-half of the real estate in the city of Washington—at least one-half in value.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. In order to make that appear, they have to include the value of the streets.

Mr. BYNUM. Well, I do not state the proportions as accurate, but certainly the value of the property owned by the General Government abutting upon the streets here is very large. Now, the street improvements in any other city would be paid for by an assessment upon the abutting property, but here we avoid that, the whole expense being paid out of the general fund. The taxpayers of this city could not afford to improve and keep up the streets in the manner in which they have been improved and maintained. The municipal government is a very expensive one. Indeed, there is not a city in the country that could afford to do it.

The taxes here are already exceedingly high. Two and a half millions of dollars in the way of taxes are levied upon property of the people of this District; a proportion more than twice as high as the taxation in the city in which I live and in which I take great pride, a city about half as large as Washington in population, and a city as wealthy as most cities of its size in the country. There the amount of taxes levied and collected is about $685,000, and we think they are high enough. We could not afford to make and keep our streets up in the style they are maintained in Washington; and if this city, the capital of the nation, is maintained in a manner to excite the pride of the people of the whole country, the Government of the United States must contribute a portion of the expenses.

I repeat, therefore, if we are going to divorce ourselves from a share in the burdens as proposed, I am in favor of making the divorce complete and turning the control of the administration of affairs in the District over to the people who have to contribute the money. If they do the paying, they should have the right of expenditure. If we are going to refuse to contribute, let us allow the people of the District to conduct their own local affairs in the manner and on the scale that they feel they can afford.

Mr. OTIS. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the deficit of which he speaks would be more injurious to the people of the District of Columbia than it would to the Government, and during the last session he called our attention to an inevitable deficit in the Treasury of the United States. I think it is our obvious duty to consider the interests of the General Government as well as the interests of the people of the District of Columbia. In reply to my friend on the right in reference to the overthrow of the system, I think it matters little what plan we adopt, but the system shouly be overthrown, and the people of the United States should have their rights, and the people of this District should have their rights under a local government.

The CHAIRMAN. If no other gentleman desires to speak in behalf of the amendment the Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk again read the substitute, as above.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, the effect of that would be to bring the whole of the expenses upon the people of the District.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

The question was taken; and the substitute was rejected—ayes 30, noes 75.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. OTIS, there were on a division—ayes 31, noes 68.

Mr. OTIS. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. OTIS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 94.

Mr. OTIS. I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of "no quorum" being withdrawn, the amendment is rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For assessor's office: For one assessor, $3,000; two assistant assessors, at $1,600 each; one special assessment clerk, $1,700; two clerks, at $1,400 each; two clerks, at $1,200 each; one clerk and draftsman, $1,200; three clerks, at $1,000 each; one clerk, in charge of records, $1,000; one license clerk, $1,200; one inspector of licenses, $1,200; one assistant or clerk, $900; one clerk, $900; in all, $22,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the pending paragraph the following:

That the reductions in assessment returned by the board of equalization in August, 1892, and December, 1892, are declared void, and the present board of revision, created August 5, 1892, is hereby abolished. The payment of taxes due May 1 and for the balance of the triennial period shall be upon the original returns of the board of assistant assessors made May, 1892, and December, 1892, at such rate as the Commissioners may determine, not exceeding $1.50 on each $100.

Mr. COMPTON. I make a point of order on this amendment, that it is new legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. It is new legislation; but it reduces expenditures by abolishing a board that is now under pay; and it does not substitute another. It is a reduction of expenditures by abolishing the board of revision.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I am quite in sympathy with the object which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON] has in view; but it seems to me, without elaborate argument, that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] is well taken. Of course, if the amendment proposed simply to abolish the present board of revision it would not be obnoxious to the point of order; but it does more than that; and a part of the amendment being obnoxious to the point of order, of course the whole is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I now offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

That the present board of revision, created August 5, 1892, is hereby abolished.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, last June a board of assistant assessors, organized about a year before that time, made an assessment of the value of all the property in the cities of Washington and Georgetown. In December of last year they made an additional return for that part of the property in this District lying outside of the city limits. It is impossible to get at the exact amount of these assessments, since the assessors have not made the extensions or footings; but as near as the result can be reached the original reports will foot up about $280,000,000 or $300,000,000 as the total value of all the taxable property in the District of Columbia. At the close of this report these same officers were formed into a board of equalization.

These men had gone over this ground, making in each case a separate finding—determining how much certain lots were worth by the square foot and the value of the buildings. They had accomplished their work; and it was the best and the fairest assessment that has ever been made in this District, although it was open to some very serious objections. Even under that assessment at least one-half of the property of the District was assessed at from 70 to 90 per cent of its market value, while the other half was assessed at less than 20 per cent of its market value.

When these officers formed themselves into a board of equalization, instead of making, as you would naturally expect, a reduction on the assessed value of property which had been put too high, or an increase on that which had been assessed too low, they, by their revised report, reduced the value of the property already assessed too low. They did not make this reduction by fixing upon certain pieces of property, and saying: "This has been assessed too high, and we will reduce it." They took certain sections, business property, as on F street and good residence sections of the city, where property is valuable, and made reduction of 20 and 30 per cent, and land held for speculative purposes, land on which there were no houses at all, and they reduced the assessment, which was already too low, in the same way. They thus took something like $40,000,000 off the tax duplicate.

A new board of revision is now at work; we do not know what they are going to do, although we can form some guess by the kind of men who are on the board and their expressions which have appeared in the public press. The president of that board said in a published interview that the duty of the board was to reduce assessments. It will thus be seen that as soon as the original report was made, a report in which these men had fairly tried to do their duty and had corrected some abuses—had gone a long way in the right direction—they were surrounded by powerful influences having large interests at stake and were thus induced to reduce their assessments. Not satisfied with that, they go on and organize a board to reduce still further the assessment.

Why is this? They found, under the law requiring the payment of $1.50 on each hundred dollars of valuation, that too much money would be raised, and instead of coming here in a fair and open way and asking a change of the law to reduce the rate, they undertook to work it in in an unlawful manner by reducing the assessment. If the reduction had been all along the line, and fairly made, there would have been less ground of complaint and no injustice done, but instead of trying to do this, they undertook to deceive Congress, and did not even then act fairly with each other, the effect of which is that the men having the most influence are getting all the benefit of the reduction.

I say, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that it is an outrage for the House to allow a bill of this character to go through without finding some means of abolishing that board of equalization and giving a fresh start and change the organization and methods, whereby the rights of all of the citizens of the District can be properly protected and where property can be equally assessed, doing justice to all.

But allow me to call your attention now to some cases coming before that board of equalization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I would like to be permitted to proceed for a few minutes longer.

Mr. COMPTON. I hope that will be done.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the gentleman will be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I had occasion to go before that board of equalization myself, as chairman of the committee appointed specially to investigate the subject, having taken considerable testimony upon the question, and examined citizens under oath, and we secured a number of special cases where much injustice was done and called the attention of the board to the matter. One case, a notable case, was that of the Washington Loan and Trust Company. The president of that company swore that the building had cost $380,000. This property was assessed at less than $175,000.

Now, if improvements are to be assessed at all, let all be assessed on the same basis and not some 30 or 40 per cent less than others. Another case that we called to their attention was a piece of property assessed at $100,000 that had just been sold for $80,000. There were wide differences in the assessments, and no attention seems to have been paid whatever to anything like an equalization. In many such cases as that the assessment was not touched, while in other cases where the owner swore that property was worth $35 a foot it was assessed at $15 a foot, which was afterwards reduced 20 or 30 per cent.

These are facts, Mr. Chairman, and with the assertion of this new board that their duty was to lower assessments and not to equalize them, it must be evident that there is no opportunity of getting an equal assessment. There is opposition on the part of owners of valuable real estate to prevent a fair assessment.

I am not here to defend any plan by which a set of citizens should get an advantage over any other class or set of citizens; but I do claim that it is our duty to abolish this board and provide some other that will be able and qualified to give us a fair assessment on which a rate can be levied to produce the necessary revenue to support the District of Columbia or its part of the expenses. I am not one of those who say that the District should pay all of the expenses. That would be manifestly unfair. But first we should lay the groundwork, take the necessary steps to get an assessment which will be just, on which we may start as a true basis.

We hear much said of the purity of the Government of the District of Columbia; and I am prepared to agree myself that it is well managed. But there is a flagrant injustice in regard to this matter of assessments, and there may be such a thing as robbery before the money goes into the Treasury as well as after, because, Mr. Chairman, it is just as much robbery to undervalue some property and overvalue others, thus reducing some men's payments, to the disadvantage of others, as it is to give to a favored contractor with whom parties may be in collusion an advantage, or to deliberately take money out of the Treasury and pay it over to favored friends. I ask if it is not a species of robbery to tax certain property only one-half or one-third or one-tenth of its real value, and force other property to pay its full value? The dishonesty is not after the money is collected, but it is before and by the assessment that has been made. I wanted this opportunity to call the attention of the House to this matter for the purpose of suggesting that the mode of correcting the wrong, and as the first step, is to abolish the board of revision.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman whether, if this motion carries, he has any plan to suggest in its stead?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. If this is adopted we are carried back to the equalization just finished. That is certainly better. There are three bad assessments. The last is the worst. We are proposing to cut off the last.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON] know that the last sundry civil bill makes the assessment continue through this year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. It does. We do not change that.

Mr. BINGHAM. What does the gentleman propose to do with next year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Next year will be assessed on the basis of the assessment made by the board of assessors as they originally returned it, subject to the revision which they made. The first amendment I offered was to strike out that equalization. The Chairman has ruled it out of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why does the gentleman condemn a board that has made no report as yet, a board just appointed by the President about six or seven weeks ago; an untried board, selected from the best citizenship of the District, whose duty it will be to take this assessment of your assessors under the old law and revise and equalize it and listen to appeals? It seems to me that by this means you can reach the fairest conclusion, for the reason that you make a new board, an untried body of men, who will pass judgment upon the very line of criticism that the gentleman is following.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. The gentleman asks me why I condemn the board. It is because that board's first public utterance was that they propose to defeat the purpose of the law—to reduce, not to equalize assessments.

Mr. BINGHAM. Ah, but that is extra-official.

The amendment proposed by Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITIA OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

For the following to be expended under the authority of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, namely:

For rent, fuel, light, care and repair of armories, $14,000. In the disbursement of this appropriation part thereof may be applied to leasing premises for armory purposes at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly, for a term not exceeding three years.

For current expenses, namley: For lockers, gun racks, and furniture for armories, $800.

Mr. OTIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 17 to 24, inclusive, on page 37, and all of lines 1 to 17, inclusive, on page 38.

Mr. OTIS. I move the adoption of that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCCREARY in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. OTIS].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order upon that amendment. My attention was diverted for the moment, and I am not sure that I understand its purpose.

Mr. OTIS. My amendment proposes to strike out the provision in relation to the militia. I have been unable, sir, to see any good reason for our being at the expense of $19,500 to support the militia of this District. It seems to me that with the necessary military force that we naturally have in this locality the militia is an unnecessary adjunct. Therefore, I move to strike it out. It seems to me that so far as any advantage could accrue to this District from the presence of the militia, the same result could be easily attained by the presence of the military forces that would necessarily and justly be located in the capital city.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask for a vote.

The amendment of Mr. OTIS was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $44,336.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to correct an error in the footing.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 40, in line 4, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "six."

Mr. DOCKERY. That simply corrects an error in the footing.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. So that it will read how?

Mr. DOCKERY. So that it will read:

In all, $44,636.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making a brief statement to the committee.

It will be observed from the report that the reductions made in this bill below the estimates of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia amount to $1,533,350.

I desire to say that the chief reductions entering into this sum are as follows:

Street paving is cut from $500,000 to $150,000, a reduction of $350,000 on streets.

The amount for sewers is reduced from $598,314 to $292,160, a reduction of $306,154.

The item for county roads is reduced from $115,000 to $14,000, a reduction of $101,000.

The appropriation for new school buildings is reduced from $108,350 to $68,100, a reduction of $50,250.

The estimate for Metropolitan police is reduced from $555,730 to $504,810, a reduction of $50,920.

The estimate for the fire department is reduced from $216,906 to $150,000, a reduction of $66,906.

The item of exhibits at World's Fair is reduced $25,000.

The estimate for Municipal buildings is reduced $100,000.

The item of reformatories and prisons is reduced from $225,061 to $153,647, a reduction of $71,414.

The proposed appropriation for charities is reduced from $259,367 to $217,975, a reduction of $42,000.

The estimate for the water department is reduced from $308,132.69 to $268,058.94, a reduction of $40,074.

These items aggregate a cut of $1,203,718, below the estimates of the Commissioners.

I want it understood that while I have not undertaken to debate this bill in detail, in my judgment I do not subscribe to the majority of these cuts.

I desire to make one other point, Mr. Chairman. The statement filed by the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], shows reductions from the current law of $454,822. I desire to say of that amount $266,820 are for matters that have been exhausted or are disposed of. To illustrate: In the current law we give $90,000 to the Grand Army encampment. That is satisfied. And then we gave a large sum for building a reform school for girls, etc. I have carefully figured up those items of reduction because of work being exhausted, and it gives the above result.

Mr. SEERLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. SEERLEY. How much do you increase the amount of the bill by the increase in the number of grades in which you provide text-books?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Two grades.

Mr. SEERLEY. How much increase?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. It amounts to $13,000. That gives free text-books to all in the public schools up to the high school, but does not provide for them in the high school.

Mr. SEERLEY. Then you tax the people at large for text-books for the people of this city?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. We pursued the same principle there as we did in everything else in the District. We make no exception against the poor children of the District.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10030, and had directed him to report the same back to the House favorably, with an amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question to the engrossment and third reading of the bill and amendment.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I desire to enter a motion to recommit with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered to the engrossment and third reading of the bill. The gentleman can offer his motion after the question has been taken on the engrossment and third reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I rise, as I gave notice a little while ago I would, for the purpose of making a motion to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER. That is in order either before or after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I send up my motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the pending bill be recommitted, and the committee instructed to report back in lieu thereof two bills, one appropriating money out of the revenue of the District of Columbia solely, the other appropriating money out of the revenue of the General Government, the money appropriated out of the revenue of the General Government not to exceed a sum equal to one-fourth of the amount carried by the pending bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. OTIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a substitute for the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order unless the previous question is voted down.

The previous question was ordered on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 65.

Mr. DE ARMOND. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 100, not voting 176; as follows:

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, if Mr. POST, with whom I am paired and who is detained from the House, were present I would vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 54 and the nays are 105; no quorum.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the House accordingly (at 3:30 o'clock p. m.) adjourned.

BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, a bill and joint resolution of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COMPTON: A bill (H. R. 10085) to authorize the Washington and Chesapeake Beach Railroad Company to extend its railroad into and within the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 22, 1892, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 extra copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations on Senate bill No. 1218, relating to the Nicaragua Canal, and the accompanying documents be printed for the use of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 3695) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Pawnee tribe of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 3696) for the relief of Brig. Gen. John R. Brooke, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3697) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Wade H. Newman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3698) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Olivia Betton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 133) instructing the Secretary of War to cause an examination to be made of the piers of the Aqueduct bridge, and the District Commissioners to furnish a statement of expenditures on account of said bridge, since it became the joint property of the United States and the District of Columbia; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORT ON CATTLE DISEASES.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That there be printed of the special report on the diseases of cattle and cattle feeding, prepared by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, 100,000 copies, of which number 30,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 60,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 10,000 to be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

REPORT ON SHEEP INDUSTRY.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That there be printed of the special report on the sheep industry of the United States, prepared by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, 35,000 copies, of which number 10,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 20,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for distribution by the Secretary of Agriculture.

OBSERVATIONS OF NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the annual volumes of the observations of the Naval Observatory, commonly known as the "Washington Observations," for the years 1889, 1890, 1891, and 1892, be printed, and that 1,800 additional copies of each volume be printed, of which 300 shall be for the use of the Senate, 700 for the use of the House, and 800 for the use of the Naval Observatory; and, furthermore, that 1,200 separate copies of each of the astronomical appendices, and 1,000 separate copies of the meteorological and magnetic observations, extracted from each of the above volumes, be printed for the use of the Naval Observatory.

TREATY WITH INDIANS OF OREGON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. MITCHELL on the 7th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of a treaty negotiated by Joel Palmer, then superintendent of Indian affairs for the Territory of Oregon, on or about the 11th day of August, 1855, with the various Indian tribes inhabiting the coast of Oregon from the Columbia River to the California line, consisting of Tillamook, Coos Bay, Coquille, Too-too-to-ney, Chetco, Siuslaw, Clatsop, and Lower Umpqua Indians, and whereby they, it is alleged, ceded all the country claimed by them between the country theretofore ceded by various other treaties and the Pacific Ocean, estimated to contain 5,000,000 acres of land, and by the terms of which it is alleged there was a reservation of a tract of country on the coast within the limits of the coast reservation established by the President, estimated to contain 750,000 acres; and that the Secretary of the Interior be further directed to advise the Senate whether such treaty was ever transmitted to the Senate for ratification; also whether the United States, if said treaty was not ratified, has acted upon the terms stipulated therein and received the benefits of the cession therein provided; and if so, whether said Indians were ever paid the amounts stipulated in such treaty to be paid to them for and on account of the lands so ceded, and if so, when were such payments made; and further that he advise the Senate fully whether such treaty became operative and whether the terms thereof or any of them have been enforced against the Indians, or the stipulations therein complied with by the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 7th instant approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 112) to print and bind 2,000 extra copies each of the Drill Regulations for Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery.

The message also announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 123) to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

ADDITIONAL QUARANTINE POWERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the quarantine bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 1, before the words "Marine Hospital," insert "Supervising Surgeon-General of the;" so as to read:

That it shall be the duty of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all the duties in respect to quarantine and quarantine regulations, etc.

COINAGE OF SILVER.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, in accordance with the notice previously given, I desire to call up Senate joint resolution 126, which I had the honor to introduce a few days ago, and I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the joint resolution before the Senate. It will be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 126) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend all purchases of silver bullion, as provided in the act of July 14, 1890, was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to suspend, until otherwise ordered by Congress, all purchases of silver bullion as provided in the first section of the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes."

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I ask to have read what I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

We denounce the Republican legislation known as the Sherman act of 1890 as a cowardly makeshift, fraught with possibilities of danger in the future which should make all of its supporters, as well as its author, anxious for its speedy repeal. We hold to the use of gold and silver as the standard money of the country, and to the coinage of both gold and silver without discriminating against either metal or charge for mintage, but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, or be adjusted through international agreement or by such safeguards of legislation as shall insure the maintenance of the parity of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts; and we demand that all paper currency shall be kept at par with and redeemable in such coin. We insist upon this policy as especially necessary for the protection of farmers and laboring classes, the first and most defenseless victims of unstable money and a fluctuating currency.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, this is the proclamation of the Democratic party in national convention assembled in June last in the city of Chicago. That convention was composed of delegates representing every State, every hamlet in the American Union, and the convention almost unanimously, and without division, voted down every amendment that had for its object to bind the national Democracy to the support of a different policy. The delegates there assembled seemed not to be oblivious to the fact that a crisis, fraught with great distress and danger to the Republic, had been reached in the financial affairs of the Government, and they enjoined upon those temporarily intrusted with leadership in legislation and in administration, that the perils which threatened us demanded the prompt and speedy repeal of the Sherman act. That in the coinage of both gold and silver the dollar unit of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value.

And to make this command still more emphatic, we insist (say they) upon this policy as especially necessary for the protection of farmers and laboring classes, the first and most defenseless victims of unstable money and a fluctuating currency.

Assuming as we must, I think, that to the Democratic national convention, constituted as it is, and to it alone, belongs the right to determine, define, and proclaim the faith and policy of the party at least to those citizens who give to it their allegiance—is it not also fair to assume that neither Democratic President, Senator, or Representative in Congress will arrogate to himself absolute liberty of judgment and action—even to the extent of nullifying the pledges made by party to people—upon a subject so vital to them as a possible violent change in their entire monetary system? It was upon the strength of this pledge, made in national convention, that gave to Mr. Cleveland more than one hundred electoral votes, not one of which he could have received without it. And now that the Democratic party is soon to be in absolute control of the legislative and executive departments of this great Government in all its branches, the people, alarmed at the present situation, demand to know when and in what mode this pledge is to be fulfilled.

In obedience to this command, and in apparent fulfillment of this pledge, the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] introduced a bill to repeal the Sherman act of 1890. As a foil to this bill, the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] again vaults into the arena with all his old-time vigor for the dollar of the daddies and open mints. As the direct, responsible representative, we assume, of the new party the distinguished Senator has done so much to create, and while defiantly dangling at his belt the bleeding scalps of a goodly number of ambitious Republican statesmen, he gives notice that preceding the repeal of the Sherman law provision by law must be made for the free, unlimited coinage of the standard silver dollar.

The Sherman law (so called) which we seek to repeal was a mere political contrivance (receiving in this Chamber only Republican support), invented and intended to hold the silver-producing States in the West, then wavering in their allegiance, firmly in the Republican column. The public interest was thus sacrificed to partisan advantage. Its all-sufficient justification was found in the perpetuation of the rule of the Republican party, notwithstanding it was plainly apparent to every reflecting mind that under the operation of this law, if long enough continued, our coin currency must be silver, and silver only. It was further apparent to the people that no relief from this incubus was possible except by the united action of both Houses of Congress and the concurrence of the Executive.

The American people were thus bound hand and foot to the terms of the definite alliance made between the Republican party, to which party many had given their allegiance, and the mine-owner, under and by virtue of which alliance the people were made to take all the risks, to bear all the losses, while the mine-owner gets all the profits.

Is it any wonder then that the people now begin to see with clearer vision the aims and intentions, the object and purpose of each political party, and are engaged in new and more earnest efforts over policies that are irreconcilable, over measures that are inherently and inevitably in conflict.

But more, if permitted to diverge a moment from the line of my argument to give additional reasons why the people recently denied to the Republican party the support they had so long accorded to it and turned for relief to the Democratic party.

The people had seen the Republican party make also a definite alliance with the manufacturing and corporation classes, to the injury of all other classes, and more recently they had seen this alliance renewed and strengthened.

And it had been further agreed, as a part of the bond between the Republican party and its mercenary allies, that as the first expressions of popular wrath would be felt in the popular branch, appropriations for subsidies would be made part of the permanent annual expenditures, in order that a Democratic House might not take from the corporations the people's forced contributions.

The people had seen the virtues of popular government; and they then beheld the vices of a government by an oligarchy of money.

They had seen the elections, once pure, become matters of annual bargain between the candidates and their supporters, and money poured into the elections in rolling streams of gold—money, the only and one thought, from the pious cabinet minister to the poorest wretch whose vote he buys.

They had seen individuals and giant corporations given sanction to oppose the people, and they had seen these beneficiaries of Republican favor return at each succeeding election with millions more for fresh riot.

The Democratic people in national convention declared their abhorrence of all these evils existing in the Government and made it the duty and the mission of those intrusted with the responsibility of making their laws to stamp out these evils. Especially and expressly did they enjoin upon their servants in Congress, "that in the coinage of both gold and silver, the dollar unit of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, and that all paper currency shall be kept at par with and redeemable in such coin;" that the cowardly makeshift known as the Sherman law must be repealed.

Mr. President, gold and silver are something more than mere commodities; they are the only monetary metals, and as such are distinguished from all other metals and all other commodities.

In the international monetary conference which met in Paris in 1881, the Hon. William M. Evarts, then a delegate for the United States, voicing the sentiment and contention of the people of the United States in that conference, spoke, not precisely in words but in substance, as follows:

"Since the days of barter, both gold and silver have been used as money by civilized nations upon some accepted relative ratio of value. There has been no single period in history in which their united strength was more than adequate for the unfolding process of society in the interchange of the products of the world, by providing therefor an intrinsic money with which to measure values. If to this we add the wide expanse of credit in the developed commerce of the world, which finally rests upon the intrinsic money of the world, it will be found impossible for the volume of both the metals that the bounty of nature could yield to the urgent labor of man to perform the task. This credit is almost without a figure a vast globe, and this service of the precious metals to sustain it is that of an Atlas upon whom the whole fabric rests. All attempts to find a permanent enduring support for domestic circulation and for participation in commerce, upon less than the broad basis, the united strength, firmness, and fixity of the two metals which should make one money out of the two metals for all the world is a vain hope and invites disaster."

This I believe to be the opinion and firm conviction of a large majority of the people of the United States; in other words, the people are bimetallists. The number of people in this country who will advocate monometallism either in gold or silver, or who will approve legislation that will tend to drive or drift us to monometallism of either gold or silver is infinitesimal. Neither the "gold bugs" nor the "silver barons" (so called) would consent to a policy which they foresee will tend to suppress one-half the intrinsic money of the State. All concede that with both metals acting in harmonious relationship as money its base has often been found too narrow; with but one it may be positively unsafe.

What then are the essential features of a bimetallic system of currency which our people favor and advocate to the fullest extent consistent with the safety of the finances?

First. "An open mint ready to coin any quantity of either gold or silver which may be brought to it."

Second. "The right on the part of the debtor to discharge his liabilities, at his option, in either of the two metals at a ratio fixed by law."

Under this true definition of bimetallism neither the United States nor any state in Europe can be said to have a bimetallic system of currency, while prior to 1871 the United States and nearly all the great states of Europe were bimetallic states, save England and Portugal.

BIMETALLISM ABANDONED.

Germany was the first to break loose from the great group of states which had used silver and adopt a gold standard, and the United States, in 1873, joined Germany and other states of Europe in destroying the relation which had theretofore subsisted between the white and the yellow metal. The Scandinavian states followed the lead of Germany and discarded silver, while the states of the Latin Union, unable to absorb in their circulation the surplus silver of Germany without the loss of their gold, closed their mints against silver. The fall of silver was easy to foresee. It was inevitable. The mischief was already done. The die completely cast.

To prohibit in ten great states, first in civilization, in finance, and commerce, the mintage of a metal which had hitherto enjoyed like mint privileges with gold and to expect this metal would maintain its former value in the face of the most unparalleled silver production would be inconsistent and absurd.

The effect of the demonetization of silver by Germany was threefold; it not only overloaded a market more than supplied, but also a cessation of the demand for fresh silver, and the increased demand for gold.

Moreover, the public mind in Europe now seems to be undergoing a change not unfavorable to silver. "Other European nations, jealous of the growing financial power and commercial progress of England, where a monetary system based upon the gold standard had been long in use and had satisfied all the requirements of that country, sought for some advantage by which, without too great loss, to change their money standards." Germany succeeded, and as to other great states the purpose seems not to have been entirely abandoned.

This declaration seems to be justified in the views expressed and the votes cast by the European delegates in the several international monetary conferences which met in Paris in 1867, 1878, 1881, and 1892. It is further apparent in their persistent hungry demand for gold to strengthen their gold reserves.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESSES.

In view of the fact that the United States had invited two and recently called for a third international monetary congress, I will refer briefly to this subject. It will be remembered the conference of 1867 recommended a gold standard, and the legislation of Germany in 1871 was strictly in line with the recommendations of that Congress. The conference of 1878 was called at the urgent request of the United States. The invitation was freely responded to by all the important states except Germany; but though the delegates were present in the body, they were absent in spirit. Our invitation was accepted more in a spirit of courtesy than born of a desire to establish a fixity of ratio between gold and silver and such mint regulations as would make one money out of the two metals. The conference of 1881 again invited by us was a repetition of the preceding one in respect of results.

With the exception of the delegates from the United States, none of the delegates there present were armed with authority to do more than simply discuss the question and report to their respective governments, while the delegates from England and Germany expressly disclaimed all intention upon the part of these states to open their mints to unrestricted silver coinage upon any ratio or any terms whatever. Mr. Cermichi, a delegate from France, and an earnest bimetallist, speaking for France, said that if the four great nations—England, Germany, France, and the United States—would join the bimetallic union, the success of bimetallism would be an assured fact; that if but three should join the alliance, bimetallism was still possible; but with only France and the United States, it could only result in failure.

The royal commission which met in London, after scanning the silver question in all its aspects, made its final report to Parliament in 1888. The report ends as follows:

No settlement of the difficulty is, however, in our opinion, possible without international action.

Since these words were spoken, owing to the great development in silver-mining, the supply of silver relatively to gold had vastly increased, while the demand for it relatively to gold had diminished, raising new and unforeseen barriers to a bimetallic union.

Notwithstanding conditions had radically changed, the President resolved to make one more effort to secure the coöperation of the great monetary powers of Europe in rehabilitating silver to its former position as one of the monetary metals. The President of the United States again extended the invitation—and the congress of 1892 was the result, with the end an absolute failure of the recent congress; and I assume no Senator will claim for it any other result, in view of the fact that the conference was called with the object of securing an international common ratio, and open mints for the coinage of both gold and silver, and this object found no sympathy among the delegates from European states in that congress. It is therefore fair to assume that European states are satisfied with their monetary systems and conditions, and are not ambitious to assist us in remedying the faults which confessedly exist in ours.

But, sir, I can not refrain from saying that in my judgment, considering the absolute failure of all former conferences in which the United States always took the initiatory, the recently called congress was a great mistake, in that it seemed begging Europe to confer with us again, thus lowering the dignity of the Government and, to use the language of a distinguished English statesman, "that, considering the present infirm status of silver, together with the persistent purchase of silver by us, our action appeared childish in the eyes of other people."

But this is not all.

Our persistent pleading for a new conference every few years can only tend to confirm the impression, now almost universal in Europe, that we are fast driving to silver monometalism and open mints, and when that point is reached they may, if so inclined, exchange their silver for our gold at the ratio of 16 to 1. I think it safe to assume that the new conference will end as all the others have done, with their mints closed against silver, they continuing to maintain an attitude of armed neutrality in respect to silver, while viewing with composure the purchase by the United States of one-third the annual world's production for use in our circulation.

When the Congress of 1878 met and parted the bullion value of our silver dollar was only 7 cents less than that of the gold dollar, and now it is 36 cents less. Considering the present infirm position of silver, the prodigious increase in silver production coupled with the diminution in demand for coinage purposes, what necessity or what advantage have Germany or the states of the Latin union (all of whom have their silver coinage full and no use for more) to join the United States in making a market for silver? Just so long as the United States persists in the policy of subtracting fifty-four millions of silver annually from the world's supply to lock up in our mints, with such added inducement for delay as the near prospect of open mints would give, I can conceive of no statesmen or financier worthy the name in Europe who will not counsel his government to pursue a policy of absolute neutrality, while the United States are willing to go it alone in sustaining the silver market. Moreover all the states of the Latin union may decide for a single gold standard and have silver to sell, which, with free coinage here, would enable them to sell.

SILVER DEMONETIZED.

The Congress of the United States demonetized silver in 1873. The coinage act of 1873 was passed by the votes of Senators and Members, as shown by the RECORD, who have since disclaimed all knowledge of the transaction. "Assuming this to be true—and, if true, it is not surprising—this legislation was made at a time we were using neither silver nor gold as the practical and present money in daily use, when silver at the ruling ratio was worth more than gold, and the public mind was inattentive to the consideration of a question so important to the interests of the State as a change in their money might exert."

Following the lead of Germany, yet unlike Germany, we had no silver in circulation and none to sell. Germany had both. The flame which was started by Germany and fanned into fury by the United States became a great conflagration which threatened with destruction the bimetallic mints of Europe, who for safety had closed their doors. Of all the causes which produced a descent in the value of silver our demonetization act of 1873 was the most potential. The position of the United States was unique among the nations. Her nationality had been tested and proven, and henceforth her right to primacy and her power to dictate policies undisputed. The civil war left us with a burden of debt, which in its volume appalled the world.

Our currency consisted solely of paper promises, for the redemption of which no provision had been made, but which the existing coinage laws gave to us the option to pay in silver as well as gold. An early day fixed for resuming specie payments unitedly with France and the states of the Latin union we could have absorbed the surplus silver of Germany, leaving the ratio between the two metals intact and undisturbed. As an aid to resumption the united strength between the white and the yellow metal circulating together as money was sadly needed, and, as events have shown, well nigh indispensable. The moral effect of this action by the United States in her day of great financial distress and danger was alarming to the bimetallic states of Europe, and decided for them a future policy. The fall of silver was inevitable. Since 1873 that metal, grown old in the service and which had for more than one hundred years kept step with gold, has grown weaker in its strength until it is no longer a giant, but a pigmy, in the operations of commerce.

The coinage law of 1878, which remonetized silver and provided for a limited coinage, was salutary in many respects. It served as a notice to the world that we had discovered the fault committed in 1873, and stood armed and ready to join other nations with whom we were then negotiating, in taking radical steps to alleviate the resulting misfortunes. In the presence of the law itself our sincerity must remain unchallenged and undisputed.

It aided resumption by enabling us to give coin in exchange for the paper issue to the extent that coin was demanded. But more, it was the foundation upon which we built our hopes for a safe, permanent, enduring, bimetallic alliance.

The failure of all our efforts in 1878 and again in 1881 to secure a bimetallic union should have been followed by us with a suspension of the coinage of the standard silver dollar. Our mints once closed should remain closed until an agreement with other nations was reached. What we could not obtain by policy, through diplomacy, we should have attempted to secure by force. Who can say that if this course had been adopted bimetallism would not to-day be an assured fact? Who can doubt with fourteen years of experience to guide us that any other remedy is left us now? Senators who consider bimetallism in all respects to be preferred to silver monometallism will think seriously of the words I have spoken.

If the course I suggest be chosen, impetus will be given to the decision of the following questions:

(1) "Will the restoration of silver to permanent monetary equality with gold by joint action of nations be beneficial to all?

(2) "Will they now join the United States to promote monetary union?"

The question is of decisive practical importance in showing whether we are to have an international or merely a national monetary system. Having waited a long period of monetary inaction, except to pass into a law, the political contrivance popularly known as the Sherman law (of which I will speak hereafter), are we not now impelled to adopt Europe's antisilver policy; suspend further purchases of silver under the Sherman law, and await events?

If I were asked to predict with precision the effect of such action upon other monetary nations owning and controlling a great mass of silver, estimated in value at four thousand millions, of which we possess but a fraction, I would say, "that a further drop in the value of silver, which would be inevitable, would produce such a revolution in Europe—both in standard and in sentiment—as would demand an international monetary congress, where we would be in a position to dictate the terms of settlement."

A bimetallic union which does not include the United States can never exist—and, having the power, it is our bounden duty to take the offensive and settle this war between the standards without taking revenge upon ourselves.

DIVERGENT VIEWS.

Two divergent views as to the line of action to be followed have wide acceptance among the true and firm friends of bimetallism. The views of one portion of our people find expression in the bill now pending in the Senate, which provides for the free, unrestricted coinage of both gold and silver as the best if not the only road to the desired goal. Another portion, which includes, as I believe, a large majority of the earnest friends of bimetallism, condemn this policy as one fraught with disaster and which will inevitably defeat bimetallism and make silver the sole standard of value, the only coin currency in use. And further—

That no one nation acting alone and independently can exert a tithe of the strength required to lift the market value of the world's bulk of silver and the annual product of the mines from the present price of 83 cents per ounce to the par of exchange with gold.

The bill before the Senate (Mr. STEWART'S bill) proposes that the United States, single-handed and alone, shall undertake at once this gigantic financial experiment. Before embarking upon this vast sea of conjecture, without chart or compass, it behooves those who advocate this measure to show some present and pressing necessity of the Government for this leap into the dark.

Without waiting for the present international conference to finish its labors, or testing the virtue of a policy that will force Europe to ask for one, as has been suggested, and which I think infinitely the wiser and better course to pursue, you deliberately pass a bill which will make bimetallism impossible in the future, and which, in effect, will sacrifice the public interest to a private interest.

If no necessity is felt to meet the demands upon the Treasury; none in foreign or domestic commerce; with the volume of circulation greater than ever before, and if enlarged tenfold it would not help a single impecunious man to another dollar who could not give a tempting equivalent in exchange for it, why, I say, adopt this radical change in our monetary system and invite the world to belch their stores of silver upon our mints?

The Secretary of the Treasury in his last annual report gives the per capita circulation on December 1, 1891, at $25.62, showing that the volume of money in circulation is not only adequate to the needs of the country, but is very much more per capita than during the so-called flush times which followed the civil war. The per capita circulation of England, whose foreign commerce leads the world in volume, compared with ours is as 17 to 25. This is approximately true also of Germany, which is 16 to 25.

The most advanced commercial nations, owing to the increase in banking and currency expedients, use by far the smallest proportion of metallic money in proportion to their dealings. It will help to an understanding what an ideal currency should be when we reflect that our total wealth is about sixty-five thousand millions, while the total amount of our coin and bullion is but the one-fiftieth part of this immense sum. Domestic and foreign commerce has for its ultimate object simply an exchange of commodities. Take for example the vast operations of the clearing house, which collects and pays credits and debts amounting weekly to quite one thousand millions, using scarcely 4 per cent of actual money in the exchange.

"By means of accounts current one purchase is made to balance another purchase, and one debt to cancel another debt. Banks and bankers issue bills of exchange, letters of credit, notes, and drafts, which largely take the place of coin. Banks transfer credits between individuals, and clearing houses transfer credits been banks, so that immense transactions are carried on with a very small use of money."

No stronger proofs of the heights of civilization in this country can be adduced than that we use seven kinds of money, all maintained at the gold value, with perhaps not 1 per cent of gold money used in all these immense transactions. Gold, the unit and standard of value, is but little more than the yardstick to measure the value of the commodities to be exchanged.

FRAUD CHARGED.

It is said, and with much emphasis, until the public mind is almost convinced of its truth, that the demonetization of the silver dollar in 1873, debarring it from the currency, was conceived in fraud of the debtor class, and that the legislation was made upon the demand of the creditor class. Admit, if you please, all that is charged against it; admit that it was conceived and passed in fraud; still the law remained, with all its direful effects, until all bimetallic states had changed, either permanently or in practice, from the bimetallic standard to the gold standard. Is it not true that in 1873 the silver dollar had been treated as obsolete and had not been in circulation for forty years; that it was confessedly worth more than the gold dollar?

Why, then, should the creditor conspire and maneuver in order not to be paid in the most valuable coin? This in itself repels the idea that there was any evil animus in that legislation. The demonetization of the silver dollar had been recommended by three successive Secretaries of the Treasury and had been discussed in newspapers and bankers' magazines. The bill to effect this purpose had been thirteen times printed and had been before five different sessions of Congress. There was no concealment or attempt at concealment. The fact is apparent by the record that it was read in both Houses of Congress and passed in both. That fact alone should be sufficient for us at this late day without further question as to the order of the proceedings.

If, however, this charge be true, I respectfully ask: Can you right the wrong done to the debtor class in 1873 by correcting in 1892 the legislation that made that wrong legal? Is it reparation of a wrong to punish the innocent creditor of to-day because a wrong was done to the debtor of nineteen years ago?

What we have done, is done. What we are now to do is the all-important question.

DEPRECIATED SILVER COIN.

"The governments of Europe, as well as our own Government, are to-day upholding depreciated silver coins by the pledge of their credit to the redemption of their coins in gold. It is equally true that their nominal value is far in excess of their real value."

At the present moment, on both sides of the Atlantic, gold alone has the right of unlimited coinage, and is the only true instrument of exchange.

Since 1878 there has not been a standard silver coin minted by any bimetallic State that has not been kept in circulation, if at all, at par with gold by the credit of the issuing State. With paper money, or with all money that has not a full intrinsic value, it is the credit of the Government that makes the value.

Drop a gold dollar into the crucible and the molten mass is still worth a dollar without the Government stamp. Drop a silver dollar into the fire and it now returns you but 64 cents.

The silver miner, for his own gain, demands that a stamped credit be given to 371¼ grains of silver to make it equal to the gold dollar. They further demand that silver coinage be unlimited and unrestricted. The audacity of this demand will be seen and felt in the four thousand millions of cheap silver now in the world, coupled with the annual new product, one hundred and eighty-five millions, from the mines, all invited and attracted to our open mints.

Mr. TELLER. Will it disturb the Senator if I interrupt him?

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the Senator will wait until I get through, as I do not want to break the thread of my remarks I will gladly respond to any question he may ask me. I think I shall make some statements further on that the Senator will perhaps think require notice as well.

The act of 1878 provided for the coinage of two millions silver per month, the same to be increased to four millions per month, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Notwithstanding four distinct administrations had come and gone, administrations representing both political parties, controlled and directed by the leading minds of each party, respectively, not a Treasury minister had coined a single dollar in excess of the law's requirement, and all without exception had asked Congress in behalf of the public interest to suspend the coinage. The conservative action of the Senate in 1878, coupled with the true conservative policy of the Treasury since, has enabled us to use a large quantity of silver in our circulation and maintain our silver coin on a parity with gold coin.

With free coinage of silver this could not continue. The first shipment of silver from abroad will deplete the Treasury of its gold, and gold payments will cease. Whenever the Treasury is no longer able to maintain the parity between the gold and silver coin, the public must look out for themselves. Gold is, then, at a premium, and it will retire from circulation. Its weaker and cheaper companion, silver, has come to perform its functions as money, and gold will go where it is more appreciated.

The effect of this legislation will be to enable France, who is not bound to us by monetary treaties, to join England and Germany in adopting the gold standard, while we will be forced from the gold plane, where we now stand, to a silver plane, whatever that may be. But it is asked, silver being a legal tender concurrently with gold, where is the depreciated currency to be found? We are reminded that from the beginning of the century down to 1873 the gold and silver coins, if based upon the ratio of 15½ to 1, had not suffered an extreme variation of more than 3 per cent. And that the average variation, covering the whole period, had been infinitesimal.

That during this period there was a constant par of exchange at the ratio of 15 to 1 between the silver rupee and the gold sovereign.

The friends of free coinage seem to be oblivious to the fact that the cardinal principle of bimetallism had been abandoned by the bimetallic world between 1873 and 1876, when they resolved that silver coinage should be limited. They do not seem to realize that it is only the legal-tender quality imparted to silver by legislative decree, and upheld by the credit of the Government that now exempts the 64-cent dollar from the category of merchandise. That while the Government can fix the value of the silver dollar for the payment of existing debts, it is beyond the power of the Government to fix its value for any other purpose.

A positive law may render 64 cents a legal tender for a dollar, but no law can oblige a person who has goods to sell, and may sell or not as he pleases, to accept 64 cents as equivalent to a dollar in the price of them. Let there be no illusions upon this subject; discount on silver means premium on gold. If the law of supply and demand be not a falsity that premium under free coinage must increase except we have the support of other great financial powers.

Free coinage means to absorb the silver of the world and place us at once upon a silver basis side by side with China and India.

Free coinage will drive gold out of circulation, except at a premium, to be followed by all the new gold received from the mints. If the experience of the past is any guide in the affairs of men, the history of the world teaches that when one of the metals becomes overvalued in the ratio it drives out the other metal, although the variation may not exceed 1 or 2 per cent.

A practical illustration of this will be found in the monetary system of France, which, in 1851 was practically bimetallic. At the time when the increased supplies of gold began to be placed upon the market from the mines of Australia and California the French currency had ceased to be bimetallic. The large influx of gold altered the relative value of the two metals: gold became overvalued in the ratio and silver undervalued. The latter metal was consequently withdrawn from France for export to the East and other places, and the overvalued gold took its place in the currency.

Again, the original ratio of silver to gold adopted by the United States was to make 15 grains of silver equal 1 grain of gold. This undervalued gold and made it cease to circulate. In 1834 we changed the ratio to 16 to 1. At this rate up to 1873 silver was undervalued, and it left us, so that we were forced to debase our subsidiary silver coins to keep ourselves in small silver for change. If, therefore, from 1795 to 1873 a change in the ratio between the small limit of 15 to 16 caused gold and silver alternately to flee the country, how more certainly with a ratio of 24 to 1, now existing between the value of silver and gold, will the standard silver dollar you propose to coin become the only standard of value and cause gold to flee from the country.

Congress can issue either kind of money it chooses, silver or paper; the coins to contain as many grains of silver as it decrees, and the paper to read upon its face as many dollars as it wills to print; and by making such moneys legal tender it confers on them debt-paying power, but this is not to confer on them future purchasing power, although it may favorably influence that power for a limited period. With silver only as the medium of exchange, all existing debts must be paid in legal-tender silver coin. The bonds of the Government and the interest thereon—State, county, municipal, railroad, industrial, and all other bonds, representing untold millions—not specifically redeemable in gold, will be paid in silver.

"The savings banks, life insurance, and trust companies are the agents for the safety of deposits, made usually in small amounts by the poor and helpless, who have not sufficient money to start business on their own account. These institutions are the depositories of the laborer for all earnings in excess of that required for food and clothing, and their deposits are loaned by these institutions in aggregate sums to those great enterprises in which labor finds its employment. The mite which the laborer loaned, together with his neighbor's mite, has given speed to the wheels of industry, made a greater demand for his labor, and thus enabled his capital to help the work of his hands. If you pay him in silver coin worth 64 cents on the dollar you rob him of 36 cents on every dollar already earned." If this is not partial repudiation, I know not what to call it.

And, again, what will be the effect upon the laborer's future?

"If you make money cheap what will be the effect on the man who earns and lives on wages? If you lower the purchasing power of your money, you, in effect, increase the cost of the things that labor buys. Labor does not go up as fast as other commodities, because workingmen are not in a position to control the world's labor market. Labor, therefore, will be paid in silver as if it were gold, and will buy with silver at its true value."

Now, as the value of merchandise is estimated by its selling price in money the price of our dollar will always be estimated by the amount the substance of which it is made will exchange for when in the world's market or where uninfluenced by legal-tender laws.

"The fact should be impressed upon every person's mind that the true value of our dollar is the amount of merchandise the pure silver or gold in it will purchase abroad as well as at home. Only by keeping the intrinsic equal to the nominal value can a truly honest currency be maintained; only in this way can personal property or real estate be correctly valued, and only in this way can a dollar's purchasing power remain constant."

The speculator alone delights in a fluctuation in the value of money, for it opens to him new chances of gain. A fluctuating coin, always uncertain in value, is most deadly to the interests of the poor, for they have the least power to protect themselves against it. They are the first to suffer from a decline in the value of the currency and the last to recover when improvement begins.

COST OF SILVER.

In view of the legislation here proposed it is evident that the future prospects of silver production will have an important bearing upon the issue involved. It is conceded by mine-owners that owing to new and improved appliances now employed, in comparison with the methods of five years ago, the cost of producing silver is very much lessened. In proof of this we need only point to the fact that for many years the world's production of silver has piled up in rapidly increasing ratio, until in the year 1891 it reached the enormous amount of 143,000,000 ounces as against 58,000,000 ounces in 1873, while the price it brought in the market was the very lowest recorded in our history.

The market value of an ounce of fine silver is about 84 cents; the average cost of the production of this silver, according to the reports of Prof. Austen, of the Royal Mint, and of Mr. Kimball, director of our mints in 1887, was about 52 cents per ounce, leaving a clear margin of profit, under the more costly methods of mining and reduction then in use (and a much greater margin under present methods), of 32 cents per ounce, even when measured by the lowest prices silver has yet reached.

A careful investigation into the present cost, under new methods and conditions, of producing an ounce of fine silver in the United States, gathered from the mint and census reports, together with such other confirmatory evidence as is furnished by the public press, mine-owners' reports, and from private sources, impels me to say that the average cost of producing an ounce of fine silver is less than 35 cents, which gives to the standard silver dollar a cost value of 26 cents. (See Appendix A.)

It will thus be seen that silver mining is the most profitable of all the industries of the United States, even if profits are measured by the highest estimates of cost and at the lowest selling price we have ever known. If we assume that free coinage in the United States will give an increased demand for silver and tend to increase its market value does it not necessarily follow that production will also increase? It would stimulate the ardor for new discoveries, increase the output from mines now working, and cause mines now temporarily abandoned to renew workings.

What the annual output of silver in the United States will be if we pass this bill and give to each ounce of silver now worth 84 cents a debt-paying power equal to $1.29, is beyond our power to estimate, but that it will exceed the full capacity of our mints to coin I have no doubt. Why subsidize the mines more than other branches of business, and why subsidize them at all at the expense of other industries?

THE AMERICAN FARMER.

It has been repeatedly stated in this Chamber and elsewhere that the low price of silver enabled the Indian ryot to take the wheat and cotton market in Europe from the American farmer; and that the only remedy for the ills which afflicted the farmer was to join the mine owner in the cry for free coinage, thus raising the gold price of silver equal to gold, and in this way defeating Indian competition. The profit of the mine owner, if successful in this, is as easy to compute as counting the fingers of the two hands. It would simply add 56 per cent to the present value of the silver stock on hand, leaving future gains subject to future fluctuations in silver.

Assuming, as I think we must, that production would be stimulated and vastly increased, and that other nations will continue to discard silver, this proposed change in our mint laws, giving to silver the monopoly of the mints to the certain exclusion of gold, will continue to inure to the benefit of the silver mine until we have reached the limit; debased dollars will be absorbed in our circulation. After that "the deluge." The American farmer produces wheat and cotton, of which he has a surplus. Both wheat and cotton are exportable commodities; so also is silver an exportable commodity, of which the world has a surplus.

The American farmer possesses a country which is now upon a gold basis, where each dollar in circulation is kept equal to every other dollar and all made equal to gold. With this standard he measures the producing cost of all products intended for domestic and foreign consumption.

The prices obtained for his surplus products in foreign markets fixes the prices for those consumed at home, and all transactions are expressed in gold—an unvarying standard. He has newspapers and telegrams which give daily foreign quotations, from which, by a simple mental calculation, he is enabled at a glance to see how much real money the products of his farm will buy.

Neither the speculator nor the money-changer is needed in the exchange of his products into gold, and he suffers no depreciation in the money while the exchange is in process or when completed. This being the position of the farmer upon the gold standard, we are now led to inquire what it will be relatively upon the silver standard.

A change in the standard here can not affect the character, habits, or the standards of the people to whom he sells his surplus products. London, commercially and financially speaking, is the exchange, the great clearing house of the world. London is the principal market for the American farmer—besides being the world's silver market as well. Here wheat and silver meet for exchange, and the value of each is expressed in the gold sovereign. The mints of Europe being closed to silver, except for limited coinage solely upon Government account, while our mints are wide open and affording an endless outlet for the world's silver—which we are sure to get in exchange for products. In short, we have exchanged the gold standard for the silver standard, where we are forced to remain, and by this operation have aided other nations to reach the gold standard where they prefer to remain. Meanwhile, the price of the farm product abroad is expressed in terms of gold.

"The level of prices in gold-using countries can only be affected by the demand for products in proportion to the supply, or minutely by changes in the relation between the volume of the currency and the work it has to do, and not by a change in the value, of the metal forming the standard of value elsewhere." In commerce there can be no such thing as a one-sided prosperity, and the necessary adjustment in the levels of gold and silver prices will therefore follow. The variation in the value of gold and silver will always show itself sooner or later in the gold and silver prices of commodities respectively.

Gold being a monopolized money metal having a more stable value than other monetary metals is, by general consent and commercial practice, accepted as the only true standard with which to measure the value of all other things, including silver. The standard once adjusted remains fixed and stable as a measure, while the law of supply and demand may constantly change the relation between the weight of wheat or cotton or silver, for example, and the weight of gold which represents it in the London market. The value of our farm products will be fixed by the gold price in gold standard countries who are the principal purchasers, and it will be paid for in silver at home.

If we pass this bill, surely no other European nation will follow our example or have need to do so; no international monetary conference need assemble, for we alone have settled, for them at least, the silver question by inviting their silver to our mints. But this is not all; we trade with them. The level of their prices is expressed in gold, the level of our prices in silver. There has been a fall in the gold price of silver of 36 per cent, and as the ratio between the level of gold prices and the level of silver prices of commodities must ultimately conform to the ratio between the value of gold and the value of silver, how is this divergence to be adjusted?

The adjustment necessarily must be effected by the exportation of silver to the United States until the value of silver in London and silver prices of commodities in the United States were so affected as to make this operation no longer profitable. The effect of forcing more and more silver upon a circulation oversupplied will be followed by a rise in silver prices of commodities, and by increased exports to London causing a fall in gold prices. In this way only can the equilibrium be maintained, and the divergence between the two currencies adjusted. Any divergence will always show itself in the exchanges. All the losses which the producers had suffered from the uncertain fluctuating character of the legal-tender notes will be repeated and continued by the adoption of the silver standard.

These fluctuations will be at the cost and to the injury of the producers, who are never exporters; it being certain the exporter will demand upon every purchase a sufficient discount to cover all possible risk of fluctuation, not only in the value of the product, but also in the value of the money. Silver in all European markets will circulate only at its bullion value, and no one can be sure that its value will be the same in any two transactions. Hence, the speculator in wheat and cotton will perpetrate these little operations backward and forward upon the producer, taking to himself all the profits and giving to somebody else all the risks. The American farmer will not profit by a single farthing in the sale and exchange of his wheat and cotton, under a silver standard, while the measure of his losses will be what the speculator and money changer will get.

WHEAT AND COTTON.

The statement has been often repeated that the silver rupee will buy as much wheat or cotton in India when the rupee is worth, as now, 1*s.* 4*d.* in gold as it did when worth 2*s.* If this statement be true, somebody is getting rich very fast out of the poor ryot who grows the wheat and cotton. If the Indian ryot, who wears straw clothing, eats only rice, and lives in a mud hovel, is so ignorant that he never knows how many silver rupees he is entitled to receive for a quarter of wheat, then the Senator may be correct in this statement; but that does not alter the fact that the cash difference commercially between the gold price and the silver price of wheat either at Bombay or London is exactly the difference between the market value of gold and silver bullion. (In order not to cloud the transaction I omit from the statement freight and other expenses.)

The wheat and cotton grower in India receives his pay from the exporter in the form of silver rupees, but the exporter draws a commercial bill of exchange on London, and this bill of exchange is for gold. This gold either pays the fixed annual stipend due to England from India, or buys merchandise to be imported into India where it is sold for silver rupees. The competition between Indian exporters and between Indian importers allows as little margin of profit as is possible in commerce between other nations; competition, therefore, regulates the price to the producer, but owing to the uncertain, variable, and fluctuating character of the silver rupee the exporter will always demand a margin to cover any possible loss of fluctuation in the money.

Gold is the standard of England and silver the standard of India; gold and silver have altered in relative value, but how does this affect articles which are interchanged between England and India?

Suppose that 40*s.* in gold purchased a quarter of wheat twenty years ago, and at that time 40*s.* was worth, say 20 rupees (2*s.* per rupee). The gold price of wheat was 40*s.* a quarter, and 20 rupees would purchase a quarter of wheat. The price of wheat is now 32*s.* per quarter, and the 32*s.* will buy 24 rupees, so that the silver price of a quarter of wheat will be 24 rupees instead of 20, as before.

The gold price has fallen 8*s.* per quarter, and the silver price has advanced 4 rupees. It is argued that the silver standard, therefore, is a great gain to India, inasmuch that there has been less variation in wheat prices in India than in England; that in consequence of this the Indian ryot puts more land in cultivation and increases his exports; that wages and cost do not differ materially in India, and, therefore, to enable the American farmer to meet Indian competition we must also open our mints to the free coinage of silver.

If it be true that prices have not fallen in India as in England, that production and export has been stimulated, that wages and cost have not advanced—is it not also true that conditions in India compel us to deal with India itself and alone?—and the rule sought to be applied is not possible in any civilized country.

Will the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], now that he has his silver market secure in the act of 1890 (and I know he means to keep that much and get more if he can), dare to tell the farmers of the United States, our mints being open, that a standard silver dollar for a bushel of wheat is quite as good pay as the gold dollar for which the wheat was sold in London, when the fact is that a bushel of wheat would buy enough silver to make one silver dollar and the third part of another one on on the same day in the same market.

The American farmer is usually a man of liberal education, he knows his rights, and dares maintain them. The American farmer would receive for his wheat and cotton, in silver, exactly what the exchanges would give him. To illustrate: If wheat is worth 40*s.* gold per quarter in London, or $10 gold in our money, this gold will buy enough silver bullion to make 16 standard silver dollars, and with open mints he may elect between the exchanges and the mint.

If the American people prefer the weaker money of the weak nations, the commercial world will fix its value and the daily fluctuations will be found in the market reports.

WHEAT AND COTTON.

A single glance at the exports of wheat and cotton from those States upon which the world depends for a supply will show how unimportant a factor is India in influencing the price of these commodities in the world's market, and how fallacious the statements so often made that the low prices of silver had enabled India to fix the price to the American producer.

In 1870 the Suez Canal was opened; prior to that trade in wheat with India was very small. Since that year India has increased the mileage of her railroad system over fivefold and has had for over twenty years cheap and direct transportation to the London market for her wheat and cotton.

In 1872, before the demonetization of silver, the wheat crop of the United States was 250,000,000 bushels (I speak in round numbers), of which we exported 37,000,000 bushels.

In 1891 the crop was 611,000,000 bushels, of which we exported 188,000,000 bushels.

The yearly average export of wheat from the United States for twenty years, ending with 1891, was 112,000,000 bushels. During this entire period we have been on the gold basis.

The yearly average export of wheat from Russia during the same period was 62,000,000 bushels. The money of Russia, gold and paper.

From British India the annual average export of wheat for the same period was 20,000,000 bushels, and, although the price of silver has been steadily going down, her export of wheat for 1891 (fiscal year) was less than the average of the ten preceding years. During these twenty years India had been upon a silver basis.

It will be seen that of the entire wheat export from these wheat exporting countries, covering the entire period of twenty years, the United States have furnished 58 per cent, Russia 32 per cent, and India only 10 per cent.

COTTON.

In 1872 the cotton crop of the United States amounted to 3,000,000 bales, of which we exported 2,000,000.

In 1891 the cotton crop was 9,000,000 bales, of which we exported 5,800,000 bales.

Not only had there been in 1891 an increase over 1872 in the acreage planted with cotton of 131 per cent, but the production per acre had increased 36 per cent.

The United States had increased her production and her export of cotton in the year 1891, as compared with 1872, nearly 300 per cent.

Now let us compare this record with India. In 1872 India produced 838,000,000 pounds of cotton, and exported 809,000,000 pounds. In 1891 India produced 1,172,000,000 pounds, and exported 620,000,000 pounds, or about one and one-half million bales. Increase in crop in 1891, compared with 1872, 40 per cent; decrease in exports 23 per cent, and yet the silver advocates insist that India is taking the cotton market from the United States, when, in reality, with silver at $1.32 per ounce in 1872 she exported 188,000,000 pounds more of cotton than she did in 1891, when silver was down to the yearly average of 99 cents per ounce, or a loss of exports in 1891 with cheap silver of 23 per cent below the exports of 1872 with the rupee at par of exchange with gold.

On a gold basis the United States in 1872 produced 56 per cent of the world's supply of cotton; in 1891 she had increased to 74 per cent.

On a silver basis—with silver at par—India in 1872 produced 35 per cent of the world's supply of cotton; and in 1891, with a stimulus of 40 per cent in the fall of the gold value of the rupee to aid production, India's production of cotton had fallen to 20 per cent.

These statistics clearly show that demand and supply govern the market value of all products in the open or world's market, and that the money standards, infinite in variety as they may be, in the countries where they are produced, have no influence whatever "in changing the laws of trade."

That there has been overproduction of wheat and cotton and consequent low prices will be apparent to all who will take the trouble to investigate it. The increase in the world's production of cotton for twenty years, ending with 1891, had been 141 per cent. In wheat 49 per cent, while the increase in the world's population for the same period had been only 36 per cent.

Mr. TELLER. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he has in his figures the exports of cotton yarns and cotton goods from India?

Mr. McPHERSON. I have not.

Mr. TELLER. I thought the Senator would not have them

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senator will reflect for a single moment he will see that we can not deal with that question when we are comparing the cotton report of the United States with that of India. A difference in money standards will not prevent India, if she has the facilities, the labor, the skill, and the inventive genius, from manufacturing cotton and selling her manufactured goods to all who will buy. India stands on exactly the same foundation we do with respect to manufacturing industries. It is the surplus product which is not used in manufacturing enterprises either there or here with which we are now dealing.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will allow me to suggest to him that India has destroyed our cotton-yarn trade with Great Britain, which was the consumer of our cotton; and for every pound of yarn India now makes which she did not formerly make she has to that extent destroyed the market for cotton produced in the United States.

Mr. McPHERSON. I admit all the Senator says, and it is to the everlasting credit of India that she has become a great cotton-manufacturing country; yet she can not compete with either England or the United States in cotton goods. But we are now dealing with two different money standards, and the effect of each upon the prices of commodities in the markets to which we send our raw surplus products.

I desire to invite the attention of Senators who represent cotton-growing States to a review of the cotton market during the last nine months of 1892, as furnishing proof positive that the price of silver had not the least influence upon the price of cotton in the open or world's market.

In April, 1892, the gold price of cotton was 6¾ cents; the gold price of silver, 87 cents per ounce. In November, 1892, the price of cotton had advanced to 10½ cents, a rise of 50 per cent, while silver had declined to 83 cents, a fall of 4⅘ per cent. Decrease in cotton production for the same year, over 30 per cent.

THE SHERMAN LAW.

The act of July 14, 1890, popularly known as the Sherman law, passed by a Republican Congress and signed by a Republican President against the protest of every Democratic Senator, was the first step leading to the ultimate and inevitable result so fondly hoped for by the silver inflationists. It was a signal triumph for the silver-producers, who aim to use the United States Treasury as a market for their productions, and an enduring triumph as well, in that the policy of purchasing monthly and burying in the Treasury 4,500,000 ounces of silver must continue until both Houses of Congress and the President acting concurrently shall condemn it.

The possible continued use of both gold and silver was thus stricken down by a Republican Congress and President for partisan advantage when within their power to prevent it. It is proper to ask, will free coinage give more silver money than the existing law, or tend to hasten us faster towards the silver standard? Some of the most intelligent opponents of silver coinage agree that it would not. But then I ask, what would simple free coinage mean but the giving up of the use of gold for the use of silver.

In like manner, what does the Sherman law ultimately mean but giving up the use of gold for the use of silver? Silver will be attracted here just so long as the Government shall continue to buy silver and try to maintain this equality of its gold, silver, and paper dollars. Silver exchanged for Treasury notes, redeemable in coin, may have a chance of redemption in gold coin, and the time may come when gold coins shall be worth much more than silver coins.

The law contains no provision for the redemption of the Treasury notes in silver bullion at its market value, or the original purchase price of the bullion.

Silver is purchased at the market value, but the intention of the law is to redeem the notes in silver coin, and provision is made to coin silver dollars for that purpose. The standard silver dollar is all the law promises the holder of the note—all else is left to the discretion of the Treasury. The requirement to purchase $54,000,000 of silver per annum to be buried up in the Treasury, unsaleable and immovable, causes gold to take its place in the foreign exchanges. By far the most serious loss of gold we have ever sustained has occurred since the passage of the Sherman bill. Between February and July of 1891, we lost in gold over seventy millions of dollars, and during the same period we hid in our vaults twenty-five millions of silver which might in part have performed the same service. Under the operation of this law the Treasury notes have not assisted the flow of money to the places where most needed, but have remained at the financial centers, and gold has been driven out of the country.

"It is easy to foresee what our financial position under the pro-silver legislation of the Sherman law would now be had the order of Providence been reversed, and the crops abroad been bountiful, while our crops had been light, with only light exports of products, and consequently light railroad earnings. Add to this the fact that European capitalists fully believe that, do what we will, we have now gone so far in the direction of the silver basis that to escape it is impossible, and they are exchanging our securities for our gold rather than wait until the dollar they invested will yield but 61 cents in return. It would seem a sufficient argument to any intelligent man to point to the fact that while the balance of trade appears upon our books to be largely in our favor, foreign exchange has been held at the gold-exporting point for the past year."

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from

New Jersey that he has fallen into an error in the statement he is now making. When we have exported gold during this last year, it has invariably been when the rate of exchange was not at the gold-exporting point, and it is so shown by the Director of the Mint in his recent report.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I used it in the sense that it was more profitable to export gold than to buy exchange.

Mr. DANIEL. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will state to the Senator that I shall be through in a few minutes, and I shall then be glad to hear him.

It is not a question of gold exports that is now alarming the people of the United States. With our power to produce and to absorb gold, we can continue to give Europe all the gold we owe her, provided the growing want of confidence among the people in the stability of our monetary system shall not have the effect of creating a sudden home demand for gold. Fully three-quarters of all the gold in the United States is held outside the Treasury by private parties, who may hoard it for a rise, or not, as they please. Judging from the daily comments in newspapers, the only remedy now left us against the hoarding of gold—which might mean a contraction of 400 millions in the volume of our gold circulation—is to stop the purchase of silver.

It is not a question of the ability of the Government to maintain its present silver circulation at par with gold even if the intrinsic value of the silver dollar should decline to half its present value. The people will and do demand that all our circulation shall be of equal exchangeable value, and all kept equal to gold, and to make sure of this they further demand that this wholesale inflation of silver shall cease. Over fourteen years this country has staggered under the burden of attempting to control the silver market for the entire world; even in the presence of increased and ever-increasing production of silver the Government at great cost has taken enough of the product to limit the fall in price. The Government has tried all these years to benefit silver producers by securing higher prices, but has failed, because it has succeeded so well in stimulating production.

Prior to 1850 England alone, of all the states of Europe, had the single standard of gold; all the other states were either in fact and law, or simply in fact silver monometallic. Everywhere in Europe gold was at a premium. Everywhere, not only domestic, but foreign circulation was effected by means of silver.

At the present time the situation is absolutely reversed. Throughout the whole of Europe the mints are no longer open to the free coinage of silver. To calculate the quantities of gold with which Europe has been flooded since 1848, when the mines of California, Australia, and Russia poured out their treasures, it is not enough to give only the quantities produced; we must add what America sent abroad after the establishment of our forced paper currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope the unfinished business will be laid aside in order that the Senator from New Jersey may continue his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will first be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be informally laid aside in order that the Senator from New Jersey may conclude his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from New Jersey will proceed.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Since 1850 the quantity of gold has doubled. In this short space of time trade and commerce have thrown in the circulation as much gold as mankind had accumulated in four centuries. Owing to these conditions, with those that are found there to-day, gold monometallism has made rapid progress among the states of Europe. Some of the European states, however, desiring to reach the single gold standard, find their easy progress blocked by an excess of silver in their circulation, the result or legacy of the abandoned bimetallism. As a sole remedy for this discomforting condition they close their mints against silver.

Compared with these European states the policy pursued by the United States is exactly the reverse. It is reported upon the apparent authority of the Secretary of the Treasury that embarrassed by the excess of silver in the circulation he may be obliged to buy gold with a new issue of bonds in order to maintain gold payments. As a remedy for this threatened danger (I say danger, for this policy once begun where is it likely to end?) my resolution stops the further purchase of silver. The remedy prescribed by my distinguished friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is, "to correct this excess of silver by a still greater excess of silver."

Mr. President, this is a serious question—a question of sound finance or unsound finance. Shall we obey commercial laws and enjoy commercial prosperity, or disobey and defy these laws and suffer disaster?

Mr. STEWART. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him how he would correct the deficiency of gold, by creating a greater deficiency in letting all the world buy it?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will pause to answer the Senator by simply saying this: I would utilize all the gold we have by keeping it out of the hoards of its owners. I would try to keep it in circulation. I would stop the inflation of silver and not frighten gold to its hiding place. Then, as I have tried to make it clear in my remarks, I would stop the purchase of silver absolutely and let silver find its normal value all over the world, and await events.

I would wait for Europe and other nations of the world who have an excess of silver to join the United States and agree upon an international ratio; and I want to say to the Senator I care but little what that ratio is provided that there were enough strong nations to join together in an international agreement to mint the silver produced, and I should be perfectly willing then to accept the result.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to say to the Senator from Nevada that this is all there is of my speech [indicating], and if he will permit me to conclude I will then listen to him. I am proceeding not in my own time, but by the courtesy of the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask another question then.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In the commercial world gold is king. Gold counts the cost, markets the goods, and measures the margins of profit or loss, and this it will continue to do whether we adopt a silver standard or not. Possessing a country almost exhaustless in resources, producing more of the objects which make commerce than any other nation, rivaling all other nations in civilization, in intelligence, inventive genius and skill, to-day the granary and, with wisdom, soon perhaps to become the workshop of the world, can we afford to take a step backward to the money plane of India and China? Shall we stand with the great nations or with the weak nations? Shall we stand for bimetallism, with all its essential features, demanding both gold and silver—and showing preference to neither—or drift to silver monometallism? These are grave questions, and they need a prompt answer.

Now, I will say to the Senator from Nevada that my silver policy is summed up in the following words as near as I can get it into a single statement: In my opinion the true answer, the only answer, will be found in reversing our silver policy, stop buying silver to lock up in the Treasury, and, in turn, dump the new silver from the mines upon the world's market. Bimetallism will never venture forth from any European state until demand is made, not in resolutions, or in piteous appeals, but in positive, aggressive action. Buy no silver and coin none until the effect of such action shall determine a future monetary policy for European States.

"The suction pipes of Europe are now at work upon our gold reserves and whether we live under free coinage or its twin sister the Sherman law, the final result to us will be the same."

Now I will listen to the Senator from Nevada with great pleasure. I was going to say to the Senator, however, that I have a good deal of material here that I think not only the Senator from Nevada but the Senator from Colorado would like to have put in the RECORD, and I ask him to withhold his questions until I get through, unless I am interfering with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] in his desire to go on with his bill. I do not wish to encroach upon the time he may rightly claim in his own behalf.

Mr. BUTLER and others. Go on.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have stated in my remarks that in my opinion silver was to-day being produced in the United States at 35 cents per ounce, that the average cost of the production of an ounce of fine silver throughout the whole of the United States was not above 35 cents. The present price of silver is 85 cents per ounce, which leaves a clear margin of profit of 50 cents per ounce.

I also stated that according to my estimate, if silver can be produced and claiming that it is produced at 35 cents per ounce, the intrinsic value of the standard silver dollar amounts to 27 cents.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator permit me to state a fact right there?

Mr. McPHERSON. As soon as I get through with my statement.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator is mistaken about that, and I wish to correct him.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am going to offer my proofs. I prefer the Senator to deal with my proofs.

Mr. STEWART. Before the Senator states his proof let me state the fact. I have seen gold procured for less than 10 cents an ounce; I have seen silver procured for less; but that in either case is when you find it. The great cost in producing the crop lies in the fact that it must be produced by explorations, by thousands who make nothing; but after it is found it is easily gathered. I saw a place called Gold Run where a man would make from $50,000 to $100,000 a day for awhile. Quite a number of men were engaged there who made several million dollars in a short time. I do not suppose the labor amounts to more than 5 or 10 cents an ounce to take out the gold when you find it, but the great cost is the explorations to reach that result.

Any statistics you may get relate only to reaping the crop, to gathering the find after the heavy work has been done. Those are the only statistics we have. I have been at work for the last six months attempting to get at the average cost of the product. We have had a committee attempting to get at the average cost and we find great difficulty in reaching the facts; but one thing is certain, that, according to the opinion of all engaged in the business, an ounce of silver costs more than $1.23. That is the average cost when you take into account the labor necessary to produce the result of finding it. Deep shafts have to be sunk and millions have to be spent in finding it, but when it is found it is like any other find——

Mr. McPHERSON. Let me ask the Senator not to interfere longer until I can put in my proofs, although I am very much delighted at all times to listen to him.

In justification of the statement just made by me that the average cost of producing an ounce of fine silver in the United States was less than 35 cents, I subjoin as an appendix to my remarks the following table, compiled (by Dr. Ivan C. Michels, a most competent and careful compiler and statistician) from census and Mint reports for the year 1889. I have not verified this statement, because he gives dates and page of the reports he quotes, and no error seems possible, except perhaps slight errors in computation. [See Appendix A.]

Mr. STEWART. I know the gentleman referred to, and will state that in my opinion his statistics are valueless.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well.

Mr. STEWART. They are valueless.

Mr. McPHERSON. They must then be proved valueless, and that must be proved from these same census reports. I give my authority for them. I will state that I have not verified them, because I have every confidence, and I think most Senators in this body have great confidence in the capacity and correctness of this gentleman.

This statement gives from the census reports of 1890 the cost of the production of silver for 1889. I stated in my remarks what the cost was by the report of Dr. Kimball and of Prof. Austin in 1887, as it appeared in the Mint report. I now give what it is reported to be by the census, and I suppose the Census Bureau made a very careful investigation into this whole subject. I will briefly state what the table shows.

It gives the tons of ore produced in the five great silver-producing States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Montana, and Utah; the yield of gold, silver, and lead in the ore. It credits the account by sales of the gold at $20 per ounce and the lead at $60 per ton, and deducts from the whole sum the total cost of mining and milling the ore.

The average cost of producing a fine ounce of silver in these five States is found to be 37$\frac{5}{10}$ cents.

Mr. President, this is not an isolated case, let me say to the honorable Senator from Nevada. This estimate is based upon the product of 41,703,527 ounces, or more than four-fifths of the entire product of silver in the United States for that year—1889—which is given by the same census report at 51,354,851 ounces.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him now?

Mr. McPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I have examined that report. I advocated an appropriation for the purpose of gaining and collecting mining statistics, but I was sorely disappointed at the examination which was made. The gentleman who made that report took the paying mines; he did not take into account the millions spent in establishing plants.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let me say to the Senator, as this matter is to be an appendix to my remarks, I can not very well submit to an interruption now.

Mr. STEWART. Just one word more. He did not take into account the vast expenditure of opening the mines, of sinking shafts. He did not take into account the outside expenses of the men engaged in the work. He took into account nothing but the actual extracting and milling of the ore, gathering the crop, which probably would not be more than 10 per cent of the real cost of the whole business. I complained of it to the Superintendent of the Census. He said that he was very sorry the report had no reference to the actual cost; that it was very misleading. I told him the use that would be made of it, taking the mere harvesting of the crop and leaving out at least nine-tenths of the average expense of getting to that point.

That is the report the Senator has here. It takes a paying mine and then adds the cost of milling while the mine is paying. He does not take into account the continuous year-after-year labor trying to find more paying ore, but after the paying ore is found, when the shafts are sunk, when the drifts are run, when the plant is established, then he tells us what it costs to work the ore, which is no criterion of the cost of mining at all. It is a travesty on the subject altogether. The report is misleading, and the man who made it admitted it was no criterion, and he told me he would put in a note explaining that it referred only to the harvesting of the crop.

Mr. McPHERSON. It is proper, however, in this connection, to state that the officers and agents of the Mint employed to gather mineral statistics give the silver yield for 1889 at 56,452,625 ounces, and if this estimate be accepted it will reduce the cost to 35 cents per ounce.

When we consider the extent and character of new discoveries in mines, and in the methods of cheapening the cost of production, surely no Senator will for a moment contend that the cost of procuring silver in 1893 compared with 1889 has not been greatly reduced.

In the absence of later (1889) official reports, and in the presence of a rapid annual increase in silver production, accompanied by a constant fall in the value of silver, its future use as a chief monetary metal must necessarily be influenced by the cost of production; therefore, I deem it important and proper to give attention to the views expressed by others not unfriendly to silver, and which are entitled to respect in the solution of this vexed question. To this end, as additional and more recent testimony in support of the estimate I have made touching the cost of silver production in the United States, I ask that the following alleged facts be printed as an appendix. [See Appendix B.]

I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], relying as we must very largely upon information other than official touching the cost of the production of silver in the United States, about the standing of the Denver Mining and Scientific Review, and also the Denver Mining Exchange Journal. Are they considered reliable papers in regard to the silver product?

Mr. TELLER. I never heard of the paper. It may be printed in Denver, but I do not know anything about it. I never saw a copy of it. If the Senator will give me leave I should like to say to him and to the Senate that all statements as to the cost of precious metals are misleading and deceptive, and as a general thing are intended to deceive; and if I can get the floor at some time I will explain why.

Mr. McPHERSON. I know of no way in the world to reach a decision upon this question in the absence of official reports later than 1890, and when every estimate that is made is disputed by those who represent the States where the industry is largely conducted, I know of no way except relying upon such information as can be gathered from outside sources.

I find published in the Washington Post, January 1, 1893, a statement speaking of Colorado's mining output for 1892 as follows:

COLORADO'S MINERAL OUTPUT.

DENVER, COLO., December 31.

The astonishing figures $41,865,134.23 is the total mineral production for Colorado for 1892; giving totals of $2,012,002.92 in copper, $6,683,478.44 in lead, $28,161,121.96 in silver, and $5,665,898.42 for gold, as against $38,548,934 for 1891.

Mr. TELLER. That includes coal and iron, does it not?

Mr. McPHERSON. No, silver alone.

Mr. TELLER. Forty-one million dollars in silver?

Mr. McPHERSON. Twenty-eight million one hundred and sixty-one thousand one hundred and twenty-one dollars and ninety-six cents is given as the silver output of Colorado in 1892. This is coinage value. The dispatch to the Post also says:

This does not include one smelter in Colorado, and Colorado ores reduced at Omaha and Grant smelter at Omaha.

I now turn to the Daily State Mining Journal of Denver, of January 3, 1893, a paper, I am informed, of high authority upon these mining matters, to find how much the Omaha and Grant smelter smelted for the State of Colorado. That paper puts Colorado's output at 7,475,277 ounces, and the coinage value at $9,643,107.33; hence, sum total for Colorado, $37,804,229.29, equal to 29,305,604 ounces of pure silver.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not suppose the Senator desires unnecessarily to make the amount fictitious. I suppose the Senator is aware that the Omaha and Grant smelter smelts 99+ per cent of its silver ore at its own smelter in Denver, and in the figures which the Senator has read as the product of the Omaha and Grant smelter it was all smelted in Denver, and has been included in the overestimate the Senator has stated of $28,000,000.

Mr. McPHERSON. Admitting all the Senator says, I will accept his statement, for I know nothing about this matter except as I find it in reliable prints—admitting all he says, there remains a most gigantic increase in silver production in the State of Colorado between the years 1891 and 1892.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the Senator take into account the estimated cost of the plant?

Mr. McPHERSON. No; nor should you take into account the cost of the plant.

Mr. DANIEL. If silver miners were furnished with free plants by the Government, they could then produce silver at that rate.

Mr. McPHERSON. Do the farmers in Virginia take into account, when they are considering whether it will pay them to produce wheat or tobacco or cotton, the cost of their plant?

Mr. DANIEL. Of course they do.

Mr. McPHERSON. The plant is there and it is useful for no other purpose but to produce wheat and cotton and tobacco; and they will be grown on the land even at the risk of failure in crops and in price.

Mr. DANIEL. The reason why they are losing money is because they do not take into account the plant.

Mr. McPHERSON. So long as you are trying to determine what the probable output of silver is going to be in the world, because it is due to that very largely, and the cost of producing it, whether we are to have a silver currency or a gold currency in the world——

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me ask him a question? Does the merchant take into account the cost of his goods when he puts a price upon them to sell them?

Mr. McPHERSON. If that could be used as a parallel case I should be very glad to answer the Senator that I expect they do take that into consideration.

Mr. DANIEL. Does the farmer take into consideration the cost of his land and the tax he pays on it in estimating the value of his production to ascertain whether it is profitable or not? I do not know about the farmers in New Jersey; but I have always understood that the merchant took into account the rent he had to pay, the taxes he had to pay, and the farmer the taxes on his land and the cost of his land in order to estimate whether his labor was profitable or not.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, it is a universal principle, which admits of no change whatever, that as to that which is more cheaply produced than usual is more plentifully produced than usual, and its purchasing power will be less. This is true of all things, including silver.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. McPHERSON. No; I should like to get through.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to say a word?

Mr. McPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. This day was by unanimous consent of the Senate agreed to be devoted to the consideration of the quarantine bill, with the single exception of which the Senator from New Jersey gave notice that he desired to submit some remarks upon his joint resolution. Of course I desire the Senator from New Jersey to conclude his remarks, but I beg to appeal to the Senate not to undertake to enter upon a general discussion of the silver question to-day, for this is probably the last day that I shall have for the consideration of the quarantine bill, and I am exceedingly anxious to proceed with it at the earliest moment possible; but if these interruptions and debate are to be continued this discussion will consume the whole day.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee I regret very much I have occupied the floor so long, and if I had not been interrupted I should have been through some time ago. Now, I hope no Senator will consider it discourteous for me to say that I will not be interrupted and I shall not take five minutes longer.

I will give some further testimony as to the cost of producing silver in the United States. I read from the report of the president, Lewis M. Rumsey, of the Granite Mountain Mining Company, for the year 1889, pages 6 and 7.

Mr. TELLER. What company is that?

Mr. McPHERSON. The Granite Mountain Mining Company, of Montana, 1889. The report is made by its president. I will read just a short sentence from the report. He says:

From October 8, 1880 (the date Mr. McClure first sent the tools to the mine), to July 31, 1889, the total gross sum of expenditures of every kind by our company has been $4,092,512.29. This includes the purchase of property, erection of buildings and permanent improvements, the amount paid for supplies and labor, expended in litigation, and for express and refining charges on smelting, ore and bullion, etc.; in short, as stated above, every expenditure of every nature and kind, during the same period our mines have produced and sold 10,989,858.98 ounces of pure silver and 6,521.569 ounces of pure gold, realizing the gross sum of $10,988,800.24.

The total product of our mines at Government standard value, 1.29\frac{29}{100}$ per fine ounce, has been $14,335,135.38, while our total receipts were, as stated above, $10,988,800.24, showing that the demonetization of silver by our Government had cost our company to July 31, 1889, $3,346,334.14, or over 30 per cent of our gross income.

In four years, from April 8, 1885, to July 31, 1889, we have paid in dividends $7,600,000, or $19 per share on our capital stock of 400,000 shares of the par value of $25.

The same report for 1889 gives the mining and milling cost of a ton of ore at $17.23. The average yield of the ore is 10$\frac{7}{4}$ ounces of silver and gold per ton—at a net cost of about 18 cents per ounce—to produce without allowing for the gold it contains, which would reduce this cost considerably more.

The report further says:

We are gradually realizing the immensity of our property, the stupendous quantity of the work yet to be done before the ore bodies shall have been thoroughly developed, much less exhausted.

In short, after they had paid $7,600,000 on an absolute cost for everything of $4,000,000, covering the period of nine years, the demonetization of silver had prevented them from adding $3,000,000 more to it.

Mr. President, I have here all these papers [exhibiting]. I will not read any of them, but I want to put the whole in the RECORD (see Appendix C). These are principally extracts from newspapers, like the papers I have quoted, as to the cost of the production of silver; and I want to say that, in my opinion, if any Senator will take the trouble to read these statements of reports from mines and elsewhere he will come to the conclusion that I have overestimated the cost of producing silver.

APPENDIX B.

The Denver Mining and Scientific Review of October 22, 1891, editorially says:

"Mining as an industry is the safest and most profitable business on earth. Failures in legitimate mining are less than in any commercial business. Many of our mines are paying 25 to 40 per cent per annum on the capital stock. Most of these stocks were purchased at from 25 to 50 cents on the dollar, making an investment of from 60 to 100 per cent per annum. Stock deals in mining are a thing of the past, and mines are now worked for the money they produce."

The Denver Mining Exchange Journal, October 28, 1891, asks editorially:

"Does mining pay? For the past twelve years the North Star Mine, at Silverton, Colo., has been worked at a profit by the owners on the 'day-work' plan $3.50 to $4 per day. The management cut down expenses, decided to try the leasing system, which we have so strenuously advocated in the past. The general supposition was that the North Star was in a decline, but we learn that practical miners offer from 35 to 75 per cent of all the ore mined for the privilege of taking out and selling the balance, and contract to timber and leave the portions of the mine in good working order. If the worked portions have produced a better profit than from 35 to 75 per cent, truly the answer to the above must be that mining does pay."

Mining and Scientific Review, of Denver, Colo., of November 12, 1891, quotes from Eagle County Times:

"Dodsworth & Co., lessees of the 'Red Cap' mine in Eagle Canyon, shipped a carload of ore. The ore assays $400 per ton. Also No. 3 shaft in the 'Ben Butler' mine returns 1,470 ounces of silver."

The same Denver paper quotes from the Silverton Miner:

"The 'Bandora' mine has struck it richer than ever. In the shaft they are sinking there are 18 inches of ore running 500 ounces of silver to the ton. This property was sold this summer for $100,000; now a cool million could not touch it."

The Denver Mining Exchange Journal of January 8, 1892, says:

"The Centennial-Eureka Mining Company has declared dividend No. 20, or 50 cents per share. The Centennial-Eureka has immense reserves of rich ore in sight and could pay $3 dividends as easily as 50 cents, but the management has wisely decided not to break down and ship any more ore than is necessary during the present low price of silver."

The Denver Mining and Scientific Review of the 26th of November, 1891, quotes from the Silver Plume Standard, of Clear Creek County, Colo., as follows:

"Ore from the Seven-Thirty mine milled recently by James Griffin returned 209 ounces of silver and 480 pounds of lead to the ton."

The same paper quotes from Register-Call as follows:

"Three tons of ore shipped from a recent location made in Vermillion district to the Globe smelters netted the owner at the rate of $98 per ton. This speaks well for a prospect not yet 40 feet deep."

The Denver Daily Mining Exchange Journal, of December 5, 1891, comments thus editorially:

"The Ontario mine has produced $12,000,000 on an original investment of $30,000, and yet this sum was neccessasy to make this mine a producer, and the returns have been kingly."

The same paper quotes from the Boulder County Miner thus:

"Mr. P. P. Miller, owner of the Morning Star, says that recently the leasers shipped 5 tons of ore that netted them $1,500, and was the work of four men eight days."

The Denver Daily Mining Exchange Journal of December 28, 1891, quotes from the Silver Plume Standard thus:

"Thomas Hooper's lease on the Terrible mine still continues to turn out good ore. A recent mill run returned 471 ounces of silver and 720 pounds of lead to the ton.

"The Brown mine, a mill run assayed by Frank Pope, returned 390 ounces of silver and 820 pounds of lead to the ton.

"Coughlin & Co., on the same property, had a run that returned 456 ounces of silver and 460 pounds of lead to the ton."

The Daily Denver Mining Exchange Journal of January 13, 1892, says:

"At Pay Rock mines the ore averaged 1,000 ounces of silver per ton, except in two instances. From this shaft levels have been run both east and west in the vein, all of which are in ore that will run from 600 to 1,000 ounces to the ton."

The Denver Daily Mining Exchange Journal of January 27, 1892, speaking of the Crede mines, says:

"The Last Chance is the great mine. Mr. E. H. Crawford, an old Leadville miner, is the superintendent, and is working 70 men on this property. The lower level is in 200 feet. The vein between walls is strong 5 feet, averaging over $135 per ton. The shipment is limited to 85 tons per day."

(Remark: Seventy men at $3.50 per day, $245 per day; shipping 85 tons per day at $135 per ton, $11,475 per day.)

The Nevada Eureka Sentinel of January 23, 1892, says:

"The Eureka Consolidated Mining Company has paid in dividends $5,500,000, over $100 per share, and in excess of the capitalization of the company."

The Denver Daily Mining Exchange Journal of January 26, 1892, says:

"Judge A. W. Rucker has won his famous suit for the recovery of one-sixth interest in the famous Aspen mine. The amount of this recovery aggregates over $2,000,000, as the product of this mine since November, 1884, amounts to over $12,000,000."

The same paper, of January 20, 1892, says:

"Maj. A. J. Pickrell, manager of the Grand Union Mining Company, states that to his great surprise the ore runs over 700 ounces of silver to the ton. Out of nine assays the lowest run was 149 ounces to the ton."

The Aspen correspondent of the Denver Scientific and Mining Review, under date of January 21, 1892, says:

"The property of the 'Best Friend Mining Comppany', exposed a body of high-grade ore from 6 to 9 feet thick and 3 feet wide, which runs 750 ounces of silver to the ton, the remainder of the ore body running 100 to 150 ounces to the ton. Your correspondent picked a few specimens, and had them assayed to satisfy his curiosity. One from near the bottom of the incline assayed 1,850 ounces of silver, and another fine specimen 4,000 ounces to the ton. But the mill dirt taken from the breast of the Houston mine gave me the average. I took a sample every 6 inches across the 7 feet of mineral and put them all together, and my return was 750 ounces of silver to the ton.

"The Puzzle mine, owned by the Puzzle Mining Company, but now under lease to Mr. Lovett, is producing some very fine ore, assaying as high as 3,700 ounces of silver to the ton."

The Rico Sun, published in Dolores County, Colo., says:

"A chunk of ore was brought down to the First National Bank from the Enterprise mine. An assay was made which ran 958 ounces of silver and 480 pounds of lead to the ton."

The editor comments on it thus:

"This is not an isolated specimen, the streak of this character of ore is regular, and is being mined and hoisted to the surface every day."

The editor of the Red Cliff Comet, in Eagle County, Colo., says:

"The Horn Silver mine had assays taken which showed 343 to 470 ounces of silver to the ton."

The Denver Mining Exchange Journal of January 18, 1892, editorially states the following:

"Fortunately for the mining industry the wildly-speculative era is past, and mining to-day stands upon as legitimate a basis as any other great industry. Thirty mining companies in the United States, which made public statements of their earnings, paid last month dividends amounting to $1,500,000, and for the year 1891 about $18,000,000, or an excess of nearly $5,000,000 over the amount paid by the same companies in 1890. When it is remembered that these figures represent the dividends paid by public companies only, and do not represent the earnings of private concerns and close corporations, some idea of the profits of mining by corporations may be obtained."

The Aspen Daily Times of February 3, 1892, says editorially:

"The Mollie Gibson mine is without doubt the richest mine. Recent developments have disclosed a body of ore 9 feet thick that runs $10,000 to the ton, and that a streak 18 inches thick is 80 per cent pure silver."

The Aspen, Colo., correspondent of the Daily Denver Mining Exchange Journal, under date of February 3, telegraphs:

"A very rich strike has been made in that portion of the company's property known as the Silver King mine. About three weeks ago the company laid off about 70 men, to enlarge the shaft into three compartments. Work was started a few days ago which discloses the great ore chute from the Sagnets mine. It shows that the rich ore is continuous for over 400 feet in the sixth level. The chute is over 12 feet thick, and will average 2,500 to 3,000 ounces of silver to the ton. In addition to this, there is a rich streak about 10 inches wide on the hanging wall which will run over 20,000 ounces to the ton."

Mr. W. B. Jacobs writes to the Georgetown (Colo.) Courier that he went to investigate the Creede Camp ores. A brownish-black friable mineral contained 234 ounces of silver to the ton, and a white mineral, consisting in part of sulphate of lead, carries 556 ounces of silver and 440 pounds of lead to the ton.

The editor of the New York Financial and Mining Record, January, 1892, said: "Rich copper ore has been found in Ouray, Colo. The J. I. C. mine is the lucky property in which the strike was made of a rich body of gray copper ore, running $1,000 per ton in silver."

The editor of the Denver Mining and Scientific Review, January 7, 1892, giving an account of the sale of the King Solomon mines to ex-Senator T. M. Bowen, of Colorado, for $21,000 for the whole group, states:

"They carry a large amount of galena, some carrying 1,480 pounds of lead, and from the ores thus far shipped the silver runs from 50 to 800 ounces to the ton."

In the same paper he quotes from the Boulder News:

"Mr. Voorhees in making a cross cut in the Cash mines struck ore that run $400 to the ton. Twelve hands are employed and he says that they are taking out $2.50 for every dollar put in.

He quotes from the Gilpin County Observer in the same issue:

"The National mine is looking well and yielding $87.30 to the ton."

In the same paper he quotes from the Red Cliff Comet thus:

"The strike in the Horn Silver mine continues and Charles Linsey has made another lucky move in the Little May; the ore is worth all the way from $5,000 to $10,000 to the ton."

In the same paper he quotes from the Arizona Prescott Courier thus:

"Frank Kuhne is in from the Sunny South mine and has just sampled a carload of ore from that property, which went 225 ounces of silver to the ton."

The editor of the Denver Mining Exchange Journal, January 9, 1892, speaking of the mines about Ouray, editorially states:

"The great Sheridan mine, in the Marshall basin, is shipping 100 tons of ore daily that averages $100 to the ton. At the present price of silver, and what silver should be, par value, it makes a difference of $350,000 a year in the values of the Sheridan, ore. No wonder we want free coinage!"

The Daily Aspen Times of February 17, 1892, states:

"The working assays from the Little Annie yesterday ran as follows: 96, 47, 1150, 200, 65, and 330 ounces of silver, respectively, to the ton."

Editorially in the same paper:

"For the past year the ore shipped from the Mollie Gibson mine averaged over 400 ounces of silver to the ton."

The editor of the Daily Denver Mining Exchange Journal of February 16, 1892, has an editorial headed "As to profits in mining." He says:

"The general public east of the Missouri River has a very faint and indefinite knowledge of the extent to which legitimate mining is carried on. A list of seventy-five mines shows as profits paid to the stockholders since incorporation the enormous amount of $132,000,000, besides which there are hundreds of small mines not incorporated, being worked as private ventures, of which product no note is taken."

In closing his editorial he says:

"Mining pays better as now conducted, gives better returns, larger profits, than any other form of everyday business. Take an equal amount of capital and put into each, and let the results at the end of the year show which is safest and pays best."

(Remarks: Considering that silver in 1891-'92 has been as low as 86 cents per ounce, this admission is very significant.)

APPENDIX C.

COLORADO MINES.

[From the Denver Mining Review of January 7, 1892.]

Holy Moses, Last Chance, Solomon, produced 74 per cent of lead and from 50 to 800 ounces of silver per ton. Cost of mining and reducing, $42 per ton. Average, 74 per cent of lead, equal to 1,480 pounds of pure lead, which sold at $51.80, leaving net profit of $9.80 on each ton or on the cost of production of 23 per cent, and the 50 to 800 ounces of pure silver are the by-product, realizing on the spot from $40 to $640 net.

The Mollie Gibson mine, at Aspen, Colo., from April 1, 1891, to January 1, 1892; some carloads returned as high as $64,100 and the average for that period was $900 per ton. The cost of production is given at $30 per ton for mining and $40 per ton for reduction and refining; total, $70; net profit, $530 on each ton of ore mined.

The Georgetown Courier says:

"The Brown mine in Clear Creek County produces 456 ounces of silver and 21 per cent, or 420 pounds, of lead to each ton."

The correspondent of Denver Mining Review from Gunnison County, Colo., under date of December 31, 1891, writes:

"The Black Queen mine, at an incline of 280 feet, is a drift of a body of ore of 6 feet thickness, with a streak of 12 to 18 inches near the center which is worth $1 a pound or $1,000 to the ton. The balance of the ore body runs from 100 to 500 ounces of silver.

"The Ouray mine, near Breckenridge, Summit County, Colo., assayed 1,650 ounces of silver to the ton. The vein has been opened from 2 to 8 feet deep for a distance of 1,300 feet without a break in it or any depreciation in its value.

"The Snow Drift, also near Breckenridge, assayed 2,000 ounces per ton."

The correspondent of the Denver Mining Journal, January 9, 1892, writes from Aspen, Colo.:

"The Best Friend has declared its eighth regular monthly dividend. In the Houston part of the company's property is a 7½ feet ore that will mill 145 ounces to the ton. Two men took ore enough out in three days to pay all expenses of the mine and the regular dividend."

WORLD'S COST OF PRODUCTION OF SILVER.

AUSTRALIA.

The cost of production of pure silver is given by Prof. Austen, of the British mint, in the returns of the British Commission Report, volume 1, page 328, as follows:

"The report for the year 1886 of the Broken Hill mines, Barrier Ranges, New South Wales, states that during that year the smelting of 10,397 tons of ore yielded 1,991 tons of lead and 871,665 ounces of pure silver, at a cost, including mining charges, etc., of £4 12*s.* ½*d.* per ton of ore, or at the rate of 1*s.* 1*d.* per ounce of silver, equal to 26 cents per ounce, if the lead be considered of no value; but the lead sold at £12 or $58.32 per ton. Total cost of mining 10,397 tons at £4 12*s.* ½*d.* ($22.44), equal to $233,308.68; lead, 1,991 tons, sold at $116,115.12, leaving the cost of production of the silver, 871,665 ounces, $117,193.56, which is equal to 13⅓ cents per ounce."

The editor of the Money Market, a daily London financial paper, gives the production of the Broken Hill mines for 1889 at 10,000,000 ounces, at 16 cents per ounce, if the production of lead be considered of no value. As he gives not the amount of lead produced, and what it sold at, no exact cost of production of the silver can be stated. Still, when compared with 1886, when the cost of silver, barring the lead, was 26 cents, the decline is considerable, nigh on to 40 per cent.

MEXICO.

According to the report of Mr. Stewart Pixley, of the firm of bullion dealers, of Pixley & Abell, in London, given before the royal select commission on the depreciation of silver (see Appendix of first report of the royal commission, 1886-'87, page 325), the cost of production in some of the mines is 1*s.* 6*d.* per ounce of pure silver, or 36 cents per ounce.

Prof. Austen, in his report, page 325 to the British commission, gives the average at 1*s.* 8*d.*, or 40 cents per ounce.

SOUTH AND CENTRAL AMERICA.

Prof. Austen, in his report published by the British royal commission, on page 328, gives the cost of production of pure silver at 1*s.* 5*d.* per ounce, or 34 cents per ounce.

GERMANY.

From the product of the Mansfeld copper mines, according to Prof. Austen (see same report, page 328), 6,500,000 ounces of silver from the copper ores were obtained at 9¼*d.*, or 19 cents, per ounce of silver. He also states in the same article that by the improved process of Mr. Claudet 328,000 ounces were recovered from the copper ores at 5*d.*, or 10 cents, per ounce.

Mr. ALDRICH. I give notice of my intention to offer at the proper time a substitute for the joint resolution of the Senator from New Jersey, which I ask to have read.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that it may appear in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to have it read. I will not take over five minutes of the time of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment to be proposed to the joint resolution (S. R. 126) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend all purchases of silver bullion as provided in the act of July 14, 1890.

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

"That the United States hereby reaffirms its purpose to maintain a parity in the value of its gold and silver coins and of the United States notes and United States Treasury notes issued under authority of law; and to insure the maintenance of such parity an adequate reserve of gold coin shall at all times be held in the Treasury of the United States; and if at any time in the opinion of the President the amount of such reserve shall be insufficient, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, shall forthwith sell the bonds of the United States in such amounts as may be necessary to restore the adequacy of such reserve, such bonds to be of the form and sold in the manner prescribed in the third section of the act approved January 14, 1875, entitled 'An act to provide for the resumption of specie payment,' payments for such bonds to be made in gold coin. The President of the United States is further authorized, if in his opinion such action is necessary, to secure a continuance of the parity in value aforesaid, to suspend from time to time the purchases of silver bullion required to be made by the act approved July 14, 1890, entitled 'An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes.'

"SEC. 2. That unless on or before the 1st day of January, 1894, an international agreement shall be entered into between the Government of the United States and of the leading commercial nations of Europe by which gold and silver shall be given equal mintage rights in the mints of their respective countries at an agreed ratio, then the purchases of silver bullion provided for in the first section of the act approved July 14, 1890, above referred to, shall cease."

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, there undoubtedly exists in all——

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am compelled to ask for the regular order. If the Senator from Rhode Island is permitted to go on and debate his amendment there are half a dozen Senators in the Chamber who will want to reply to him, and if I fail to call for the regular order now I shall have to yield to the gentlemen whom he provokes to reply.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. I demand the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is called for.

Mr. ALDRICH. Can one Senator take another Senator off the floor in that way? I can of course make the request I am about to make when the Senator's bill is before the Senate, but would prefer to make it now. I shall not take three minutes of the time of the Senate. I simply desire to make a request in regard to the pending joint resolution that will facilitate the business of the Senate, and I certainly shall not claim more than three minutes of its time.

Mr. HARRIS. I should yield to the Senator most cheerfully the few moments he wants, but I know there are other Senators who entertain conflicting views, and if I yield to him I shall be compelled to yield to them, and the result will be that I shall yield the whole day.

Mr. ALDRICH. I propose to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that a vote be taken on the joint resolution, and if I fail to secure this I shall have nothing more to say in regard to it.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the Senator propound his proposition for unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what I was about to do, and I should have concluded the request if the Senator had not interrupted me in the midst of my remarks.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Tennessee does not regret having interrupted the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to say that there exists in all the financial and commercial circles of the country a deep-seated apprehension and fear of evil results to follow the considerable exports of gold and the continued purchase of silver under the act of July 14, 1890. In view of the very able, interesting and I presume authoritative, exposition of Democratic opinions to which we have just listened from the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], I am led to believe that an agreement can be reached in the Senate with substantial unanimity in regard to the character of a remedy for these anticipated evils. While there is a suspicion on this side of the Chamber, which is not entirely removed by the explicit statements of the Senator from New Jersey, that the Democratic party are simply masquerading——

Mr. HARRIS. What is the unanimous consent that the Senator asks?

Mr. ALDRICH. Masquerading, I was about to say, as the friends of honest money in their present attitude, I should be glad to test the sincerity of their pretensions, and I ask that the joint resolution and the pending amendments be taken up to-morrow morning at the conclusion of the morning business, and that at 2 o'clock a vote be taken upon them without further debate. I appeal to the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber. I ask the Senator from New Jersey to accept the opportunity to carry out the views expressed in the Democratic platform, and I hope they will with unanimity agree to this proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. DANIEL. I object to any time being fixed for a vote on the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The regular order is called for.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to yield five minutes to the other side. I shall ask of his courtesy to yield that time to me that I may place on record certain questions.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall yield five minutes to the Senator from Virginia as gracefully as I did to the Senator from Rhode Island. [Laughter.]

Mr. DANIEL. We all know that however it may be in other things the grace of the Senator from Tennessee can only be surpassed by his generosity. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, we have had a specimen from the Senator from New Jersey of the cooked statistics by which this country is periodically alarmed upon the silver question and by which it is sought to make the people believe that the silver question in their dogma is not what it purports to be. We have the remarkable confession from him (and I am glad that if his speech produces no other results it has recorded that confession) that in the gold cookery of silver statistics no estimate of the capital employed in its production is entered into as an element of its cost. In other words, the cost of the mine, the cost of the skilled genius that discovers the mine, the cost of the expensive and elaborate plant in the calculations of his statistics are completely eliminated from the cost of production. A new species of political economy is being interjected to estimate the value of silver by which no other element or material is estimated in the minds of men upon the face of the earth.

I wish to put to the Senator, that he may answer at his leisure, as he can not now, these questions: What took gold away from this country; and would it not have gone whether there was free coinage, partial coinage, or no coinage of silver; and did it not go to fill a gap in European finance made by a succession of foreign pecuniary troubles?

In the next place, the Senator states that supply and demand, independent of law, regulate the value of silver. Why does he seek, then, by law further to depreciate it if the law has nothing to do with it? The whole predicate of his case is that he wants further to depreciate silver by the action of this Senate, in order to put a panic in Europe, which some day or other, in "the sweet by and by," America will correct to the advantage of the silver which it now seeks through him to destroy.

Let me ask the Senator further if gold has not already been hoarded, and let me ask him if the gold men have not so put it upon the statute book that the poor man of this country can not hoard it, but the capitalist can? It is provided that gold shall not be coined in one dollar, so that a poor man can not get it; and it is already hoarded in the hands of a few, the rich and the powerful.

In the next place, if we continue to use silver, the Senator laments with tears in his voice how the poor will suffer in having to take the silver dollar. As he does not propose to discontinue the circulation of nearly $500,000,000 of silver which we now have, and as the law has provided that gold can not take its place in gold dollars, because it does not make them, and as the purpose of this bill, deliberate and avowed, is further to depreciate the value of silver, let me ask the Senator what is to become of the poor people who will be obliged to take at a discount the $500,000,000 we now have because it is impossible in the nature of law to get others, and why should he not weep a few tears, imported from Wall street, for the benefit of that class who are to have this depreciated and degraded mass of metal thrust into their pockets?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Would the Senator from Tennessee prefer that I should answer all the questions of the Senator from Virginia now?

Mr. HARRIS. I would prefer that the Senator should not answer them now, and I am very indifferent whether he ever answers them or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. I know the Senator from New Jersey never can answer them.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 118) for the relief of the estate of Isaac W. Talkington, deceased; and

A bill (S. 3623) to amend the act of March 3, 1873, for the relief of the Columbian University in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10038) making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 317) granting an increase of pension to John M. Roberts;

A bill (S. 2592) granting an increase of pension to William C. Tarkington;

A bill (S. 2990) for the relief of George W. McKinney; and

A bill (S. 3314) for the relief of E. Darwin Gage, late lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and forty-eighth New York Infantry.

ADDITIONAL QUARANTINE POWERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire whether the regular order is before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has placed the regular order before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TELLER. I do not intend to make a speech on the quarantine bill, nor do I intend to make a speech on the silver question, but I shall be perfectly in order if I take five minutes or fifty on this bill.

The very remarkable statement made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] shall not go into the RECORD without at least an expression of dissent on my part. He has made an estimate of the cost of silver—and that is the way it was made by the Census Bureau—exactly as if he had made the estimate of the cost of cutting a field of wheat and the thrashing of it, and stated that that was the total cost of the product. I said it was misleading and deceiving, and I say that all these attempts to fix the cost of an ounce of silver or an ounce of gold are misleading.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] said he had seen gold produced at 10 cents an ounce. I have seen it produced in large quantities, millions of dollars, at a rate very much below the mint rate. I have seen it frequently produced at 5 per cent of its value and from that up to 50 per cent. A profitable mine, unless remarkably large, in order to make a fair profit, should not produce gold at over 70 or 80 per cent of the mint value. The most successful mines usually produce gold at about $12 an ounce, and $20 is the mint value.

I have seen a miner take out of a mine $3,500 in two hours. I have known miners to get $100 of gold day in and day out, when labor could be hired in that community at $5 a day. Does anybody pretend to tell me that that was the cost of gold? A man who attempts thus to deceive the public is either dealing unfairly with them or unfairly with himself. Proper attention to this question will prevent any fair-minded man from making such a statement here or anywhere else.

Do you suppose, Mr. President, that the miners of Nevada and of Colorado and of Montana would be in arms on this subject if they could make more than 100 per cent on every ounce of silver they mined? Does the Senator from New Jersey suppose that the capital of this country would not make haste to go to that Western country to mine silver at 35 cents which they could sell in the markets of the world for 84 cents? Senatorial courtesy and Senatorial propriety prevent me from expressing my opinion of such statements in such a way as I should outside of this Chamber. They are made generally—not referring to them when made here—for the purpose of deceiving.

Mr. MCPHERSON rose.

Mr. TELLER. I do not say the Senator from New Jersey; and I decline to be interrupted by him, as he declined to allow me to interrupt him at any time.

No man living can tell the cost of silver. It will be $5 an ounce in some mines and 50 cents in others. The telegraph to-day reports the fact that one of the greatest and richest of the groups of mines in the State of Colorado has closed because of the low price of silver, at 84 or 83 cents or whatever it may be. They have been closing mines in Montana and Nevada and in other sections of the country with the present price of silver. Under these circumstances, to have a Senator stand here and tell us that we are mining silver at an average price in the United States of 35 cents will hardly be tolerated without at least a protest.

I am asked, how much did it cost to mine gold when we produced in California $60,000,000 worth a year? Why, Mr. President, gold was coined there at 10 cents an ounce. Did that fix the price of gold? Did anybody in the world pretend that that had anything to do with its purchasing power? I know it has been said that the great output would render it too cheap for money; but it has been reserved for modern times and modern political economists to assert against a money metal that it was unfit for use because by accident here and there it could be produced at a mere nominal rate. Does the Senator remember that a miner, in traveling in Australia from one camp to another, stumbled on a nugget valued at $30,000 in the forenoon, upon which he had expended no labor at all, and does he suppose that gold should have gone into the markets of the world as absolutely worthless because it had cost nothing?

Mr. President, at the proper time, when I can do so without imposing upon the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], I propose to discuss the question not only of the cost of the product but some other things concerning it.

There never was a more senseless and ridiculous cry made by any people than that which has been made by the advocates of the single gold standard in this country, or the pretended bimetallists, who are bimetallists only in name and not in fact, and who, if they are bimetallists, have never shown the slightest interest in bimetallism. Every movement they have made in financial legislation has been against bimetallism.

There never was, I repeat, a more senseless cry of alarm than the cry which is made about the export of gold from this country at this time. When the time comes and the proper opportunity is presented, I shall demonstrate that no thinking man need be alarmed about the export of gold, and I shall demonstrate, above all, that there is no export of gold occasioned by distrust of our financial standing in this country; I shall show where the export of gold has gone for the last three years, and I charge now that the men who are howling about this matter are not alarmed. They do not fear that we are going to a silver basis; they know that there are no signs of our going to a silver basis. They think that the export of gold, smaller this year than it has been during many others, and less threatening now than it has been at other times, can be used as an engine, as a method, as a means of repealing the so-called Sherman act of 1890.

I wish to say to them that they may butt their heads against the wall as much as they choose; but they have not the votes either in this House or the other to repeal that law, and it will not be repealed in this Congress; that is morally certain. They may as well arrange their financial affairs and their financial views with a full understanding that they are impotent to touch that law between now and the 4th of March, and, in my judgment, they will be no more likely to do it after the 4th of March than before.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, certain amendments to the pending bill were passed over at my request, which I ask may be now acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to section 3 of the bill. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 1, before the word "Marine," it is proposed to insert the words "Supervising Surgeon-General of the;" so as to read:

That the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital shall coöperate with, etc.

Mr. PLATT. I wish the attention of the Senator from Tennessee for a moment. It seems to me that if these words are to be inserted in section 3 and in section 4, so that those two sections, as they commence, shall read:

That the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, etc.—

there ought to be another amendment of section 3 to make it correspond with the language of section 4, which reads:

That it shall be the duty of the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, etc.

The words "under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury" ought to be either stricken out of section 4 or inserted in section 3.

Mr. HARRIS. I think they ought to be inserted in section 3 after the word "shall." Let them be there inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified to that extent, and stated.

Mr. HARRIS. The first amendment to the section is before the word "Marine" to insert "Supervising Surgeon-General of the."

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 1, before the word "Marine," it is proposed to insert "Supervising Surgeon-General of the;" and after the word "shall," in the same line, to insert "under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to read:

That the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service shall, immediately after this act takes effect, examine the quarantine regulations of all State and municipal boards of health, and shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health, etc.

Mr. PLATT. No; the words "Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service" are put in the wrong place.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment I offered was to come in after the word "shall," in line 1 of section 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 1, before the word "Marine," it is proposed to insert "Supervising Surgeon-General of the;" and after the word "shall," in the same line, to insert "under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to read:

That the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service shall, immediately after this act takes effect, examine the quarantine regulations of all State and municipal boards of health, and shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health, etc.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the mistake arises from the fact that there has been a previous amendment made in section 3, so that it will be necessary for the Senator from Tennessee to modify his amendment. Will the President direct the Secretary to read the first clause of the section as it now stands?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The clause will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill, I think, is right. Perhaps the idea is repeated where it is not absolutely necessary; but the bill is perfectly clear as it stands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to hear it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend at the beginning of section 3 so as to read:

That the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service shall, immediately after this act takes effect, examine the quarantine regulations of all State and municipal boards of health, and shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 1, before the word "Marine," it is proposed to insert "Supervising Surgeon-General of the;" so as to read:

That it shall be the duty of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to perform all the duties in respect to quarantine, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. If the chairman of the committee will excuse me a moment, I have an amendment which I should like to offer as soon as I can prepare it.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] is preparing an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Louisiana will allow me, I will make a brief statement while he is preparing his amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the question as to the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service having been disposed of, I take occasion to make a statement in reference to my allusion on Friday last to the organization known as the Gridiron Club. After I had stated that the press of the United States was wholly represented in this city by the Gridiron Club, I was informed that I was mistaken, and that out of some 150 or 175 representatives of the press in this city only about 30 or 40 belong to that club. The criticism is made of me that, having been informed on this point, I did not correct my remarks before they appeared in the RECORD. I preferred to let them stand as they were uttered, and to make this correction in open Senate in justice both to the Gridiron Club and the many other members of the press.

I have no doubt that the fact which has been stated to me is true, and that the press of the country is not wholly represented in this city by the Gridiron Club, but only by some 30 or 40 out of 150 or 175 members of the press here. I do not know whether an apology is due from me to any one, whether the members of the press not belonging to the club wish me to apologize to them because they do not belong to it, or what their sensitiveness, if there be such, is; but inasmuch as I made no allusions to the Gridiron Club, which were intended to be other than complimentary, I have, of course, no apologies to make.

Mr. WHITE. In line 11, section 3, after the word "Columbia," I move to insert the words which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 11, after the words "District of Columbia," it is proposed to insert "all such rules and regulations shall operate uniformly and in no manner discriminate against any port or section."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. The main object of this bill is to secure a uniform quarantine system throughout the United States. If the Senator from Louisiana has the slightest doubt that it does not, without his amendment, I will most cheerfully accept his amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Tennessee does not think that there might have to be specific rules for the quarantine at specific ports which would not necessarily be required at other ports?

Mr. HARRIS. I can hardly conceive the possibility of such cases; but I think the rules ought to be absolutely uniform, and that there should be no discrimination between ports or places.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not learn exactly where the amendment was proposed to be inserted.

Mr. HARRIS. After the word "Columbia," in line 11, of section 3, on page 3.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] to the fact that in the first part of this section the State rules and regulations are referred to and are connected by the conjunction "and" with the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury. Of course the rules and regulations of the States can not be uniform. I suggest whether the word "such," in line 4, ought not to be changed to the "rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. WHITE. I have no objection, although I considered it when I drafted the amendment. I considered that this clause only qualified the rules and regulations to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, but for fear I may be mistaken, if the Senator will be good enough to suggest a correction of my amendment to meet his view, it will satisfy me completely.

Mr. HARRIS. After the words "rules and regulations" insert "made by the Secretary of the Treasury." The Senator will modify his amendment to that extent.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 11, after the word "Columbia," it is proposed to insert:

All rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury shall operate uniformly, and in no manner discriminate against any port or section.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator to use the word "place" instead of "section," as it follows the other language.

Mr. WHITE. That will satisfy me.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment read "port or place."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified as suggested. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I have another amendment, to be inserted in line 5, section 8, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 8, on page 9, the following:

All the provisions of this act shall ipso facto expire on the 1st day of January, 1895.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. If that amendment is to be agreed to, I think there is very little reason why we should spend another minute upon the bill, as we have consumed a good deal of time with it now. Even if there were no alarm in respect of cholera in Europe, no summer comes when we are not threatened with the fatal epidemic of yellow fever. There is no season of any year that our ports ought not to be carefully guarded against cholera and yellow fever and other contagion. It is as necessary at one time as another, and it is always necessary. If the majority of the Senate chooses to vote that amendment upon the bill, I confess that I shall very largely lose my interest in it and feel that it is a matter of very small importance whether the bill passes at all or not.

Mr. WHITE. I had not intended to enter into any extended discussion of the provisions of this bill, but I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee, in charge of it, that this amendment practically propounds my objections to the bill, and as I understood the bill is not to be finally voted on to-day, I suggest that this amendment be reserved and that we go on and carry it over until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, I prefer that the amendment should be disposed of now. It is true I have agreed with the Senator from Louisiana that if we could perfect the bill and reach the point of the question, Shall the bill pass? I would consent to accommodate him and ask that it go over until the conclusion of the routine business of Wednesday morning provided we can get the consent of the Senate to take the final vote then. If, however, this amendment is to be voted on the bill, I shall not trouble the Senate by asking for the consideration of it so far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to ask the Senator from Louisiana whether he desires to speak to this amendment?

Mr. WHITE. This amendment practically formulates my objection to the entire bill. Of course, in addressing myself to this amendment I shall address myself to the entire subject-matter of the bill as seen by my mind. I am ready, if necessary, to undertake that this evening, but I should prefer doing it to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. I had hoped that the Senate might be able to act upon this bill at last, giving a full hearing to every Senator who desires to be heard. I know that constituents of the Senator from Louisiana, representing some of the public bodies in that State, are coming here and wish to be heard before this bill is disposed of, and I think it no more than fair that the Senator should have the privilege, which the Senator from Tennessee says he proposes to accord to him, of having the final vote upon this bill postponed until Wednesday. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that he postpone his remarks upon this amendment, inasmuch as the amendment embodies what he has to say of substance against the bill, until all the other amendments are disposed of, and then, after taking a viva voce vote upon this amendment, or not taking it, that the bill go over until Wednesday morning, if the Senator from Tennessee has no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. If I can get a unanimous-consent agreement that the Senator from Louisiana may offer this single amendment, that no other amendment shall be offered upon that occasion, and that there shall be no debate except upon this amendment on Wedneseay morning, I shall very cheerfully consent to agree that the bill may go over after other Senators have had the opportunity to offer such amendments as they choose to offer.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator understands, of course, that the debate upon this amendment will take in the whole bill. When he says "debate on this amendment" it may lead to a misunderstanding; and I do not want to have any misunderstanding about it.

Mr. HARRIS. So far as the debate of the Senator is concerned upon this amendment, of course it may relate to the entire policy. He is not limited to any strict line.

Mr. WHITE. That will be very agreeable to me if it is agreeable to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not wish the matter considered as open for general debate. It is open to-day for general debate, and I am willing to stay here as long in the hours of the day time and the night time as any Senator may desire to stay, in order that every Senator may have an opportunity to offer any and all amendments he chooses, and to debate them to any extent desired: but I want to fix a time so that there shall be a vote sooner or later.

Mr. CHANDLER. I made the suggestion in justice to the Senator from Louisiana, because I know he wishes to consult his constituents who are coming here on this subject, and I also made it because I believe that by such a course really the debate will be shortened. I hope that after the Senator consults with his Louisiana friends, who are to be here to-morrow or the next day, he will find that he does not desire to make serious opposition to the passage of the bill. I therefore made my suggestion in the hope that I should thereby shorten the speech of the Senator rather than with a view of postponing it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HARRIS. If that arrangement is satisfactory to the Senator from Louisiana, I am willing, if the Senate will consent, that immediately after the completion of the routine morning business on Wednesday morning the Senator may offer his amendment, but that no other amendment shall be in order, and there shall be no general debate of other amendments to the bill, so as to come to a vote before we reach the conclusion of the morning hour at 2 o'clock, when the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] will be entitled to the right of way.

Mr. MORGAN. What will be the status of the bill in the mean time?

Mr. HARRIS. The bill will be laid aside.

Mr. MORGAN. That will cut off all amendments and all debate.

Mr. HARRIS. To-day the bill is open to all amendments and all debate, according to my suggestion.

Mr. MORGAN. It would not defer the bill now?

Mr. HARRIS. By no means. We go on with it to-day.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to interpose an objection to the proposed arrangement. I very good-naturedly gave way on Friday and Saturday last for the discussion of this bill, on the most solemn assurance that it would be closed up in those two days, but the discussion seems to have run on, so that it was impossible to reach a vote upon it, and I have taken no exception to to-day being set aside for that purpose; but I do feel that I should not be doing justice to the bill, which I to some extent have in charge, if I consented to have next Wednesday fixed for the further consideration of the pending bill. I will agree, however, to this, which it seems to me is entirely fair, that the speeches which are to be made shall be made to-day, and that a time shall be fixed on Wednesday at which the vote shall be taken. With that understanding, I should interpose no objection to the arrangement.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say to the Senator that my own idea was that we should progress as far as possible to-day. I should have insisted upon completing the bill to-day, but for the fact that there is a committee on their way here from New Orleans, of the constituents of the Senator from Louisiana, and he desires to give that committee an opportunity to confer with him before final and definite action is taken.

Mr. WASHBURN. It was in that view that I assented to the vote being taken on Wednesday; but I do not presume that the constituents of the Senator from Louisiana are to bring with them the speech that he is to make, and, therefore, it might as well be made to-day and the time consumed now instead of Wednesday.

Mr. HARRIS. My request was limited to the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURN. That I shall not object to.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course, when we get into it in the morning hour, it is perfectly frank to say to the Senator that I think he will yield then to allow it to be concluded, if it overruns the morning hour; but my request does not now extend beyond the morning hour.

Mr. TELLER. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado desires the Senator from Tennessee to restate his request.

Mr. HARRIS. My request was that we progress with the bill; that is, complete its consideration by the offering of all amendments and acting upon them, but reserving the right to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] on Wednesday morning immediately after the routine business to offer the amendment he has now offered and to debate it, but the debate is to be limited to that amendment, and we are then to come to a vote.

Mr. TELLER. That is, on Wednesday morning?

Mr. HARRIS. Wednesday, immediately after the routine business of the morning hour.

Mr. WASHBURN. And that the vote shall be taken at 2 o'clock?

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Louisiana can get through and has not forced some Senator to say something in reply.

Mr. WASHBURN. By opening that door, of course you will consume the whole day.

Mr. HARRIS. My request does not extend beyond 2 o'clock, but if 2 o'clock catches us in the midst of a debate which the Senate thinks can be closed in thirty, forty, or sixty minutes, the Senator would probably very cheerfully yield to what he would not be willing to yield to to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WASHBURN. I feel that I have been more than generous and liberal in giving way in the last three days.

Mr. HARRIS. I acknowledge the Senator's generosity and liberality.

Mr. WASHBURN. The pending bill is a matter of supreme importance to the health of the country, and there was so much interest manifested in it that I did not feel that I could interpose any objection; but it seems to me that the matter has already gone too far. If we can agree here upon some reasonable time when a vote can be taken on the antioption bill, then I should not be so anxious about the time to be consumed. I understand there are only a few more speeches to be made on the antioption bill, and I ask unanimous consent that some time be fixed this week for voting upon the bill. I think it is no more than just and fair that such an arrangement should be compassed. I ask unanimous consent that on Friday, at 3 o'clock, the vote may be taken on the antioption bill and its amendments.

Mr. WHITE. I can not possibly give that consent. The two Senators from New York are both absent and both have declared that they intend to speak against the antioption bill. I therefore could not now possibly give the consent asked by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WASHBURN. Is it to be expected that the Senate is to be held here all winter for those Senators to return?

Mr. WHITE. I do not care about stating my expectation. I state the fact. Whether it would be courteous to them to say that we expected them to be absent all winter, is a question into which I prefer not to enter.

Mr. WASHBURN. Is the Senator prepared to name any reasonable time?

Mr. WHITE. I am not prepared to fix any time.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not understand that this floor is the exclusive property of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], or the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE], or any other Senator. I apprehend that there is an opportunity for other Senators to share and participate in matters which are going on in the Senate without having to call upon the Senator from Minnesota or anybody else for permission, or without the Senator from Minnesota being compelled to tell us how generous he has been in permitting a measure as comparatively unimportant as the quarantine bill to take precedence upon the floor of the Senate; but if it is in order, the bill being now the special order, I move that this measure be made the special order for Wednesday next.

Mr. BUTLER. What measure is that?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The measure of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I move that it be taken up on Wednesday next. I apprehend if an amendment is offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] he can not be cut off by saying that at such a time he must stop talking; if any Senator objects to his amendment, he shall not have the right to comment upon it; and that we must vote at a certain time, whether we are ready to vote or not. I apprehend that it is within the province of this body, if in its wisdom it shall so determine, to go on with the discussion until it is finished decently and in order.

Mr. HARRIS. Let me suggest to the Senator that every Senator must agree, and hence the unanimous consent of the Senate was asked to this agreement.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand the Senator from Tennessee to ask consent that nobody shall say anything after the Senator from Louisiana gets through, unless he chooses to say it upon that amendment; and that he shall limit himself in point of time to such an extent as not to unnecessarily offend the Senator from Minnesota, who has the antioption bill in charge. [Laughter.] I apprehend that that would not be essential to a proper discussion of this question. If my motion is in order, I renew it, that the quarantine bill be made the special order for Wednesday next, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not quite understood to what extent that motion will go. Do I understand the Senator from Colorado that the consideration of the bill shall be terminated on that day?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not necessarily. I take it that it will be terminated when it gets through. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. My reason for making the inquiry is, that I have just received a dispatch from the chairman of the board of health of the city of Charleston, saying that that board desires to send a committee to Washington for the purpose of being heard in regard to this very quarantine bill. If the consideration of the bill is to be determined on Wednesday, I shall telegraph them not to come. If, on the other hand, it is to be left open to discussion, I should be very glad that those gentlemen should have an opportunity of being heard by the Senate. I do not understand then that the bill is to be disposed of on Wednesday.

Mr. WASHBURN. Of course the effect of the adoption of this motion would be to displace the present unfinished business, and I shall ask the Senate that that shall not be done. I should very gladly assent to the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee if I felt that the quarantine bill, which it was supposed would have been voted upon on Saturday, could be voted upon early in the day on Wednesday; but to displace the antioption bill at the present time would, I think, be very wrong. I hope the motion of the Senator from Colorado will be voted down.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to inquire as to the status of the bill if this motion should prevail. I see that we have some four special orders now on the Calendar. If this bill is to be made the special order for Wednesday next, would it take its place at the foot of the special orders already on the Calendar?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It would take its place at the foot of the special orders heretofore made.

Mr. DOLPH. We can not proceed to the consideration of this measure therefore, until we dispose of the other four bills which have been made special orders?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand there is a very general concurrence in the Senate in favor of disposing of the quarantine bill before any other business is done. It is an emergency measure; and I think it is not to be put off many days more on any pretext. I certainly trust the Senator from South Carolina [Mr.

BUTLER] will succeed in getting the representatives from his State here immediately, if they desire to confer with him. It was expected that this bill would be disposed of in the Senate on Saturday. It is now going over until Wednesday before final conclusion to accommodate the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE]. If it is to go over still further so that persons may come here from South Carolina we shall not get that speedy action which it is vital should be secured for the bill.

I understand the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] not to take this bill from consideration to-day, but to be in effect to give it consideration to-day and on Wednesday. I suggest to the Senator to add to his motion "to the exclusion of all other special orders for that day." If he makes that motion, and that is to be the understanding, I shall vote for it, although I do not wish to displace the antioption bill. I do not wish to lose to-day, because I believe that we can finish the bill practically to-day, and then if we postpone the vote until Wednesday morning, the situation will be satisfactory. Otherwise it will not be.

Mr. WASHBURN. Why not vote down this motion and go on with the consideration of the bill to-day?

Mr. HARRIS. I am constrained to call for the regular order as we do not seem to be coming to a unanimous consent agreement; but I will state to the Senator from Colorado that his motion, if made at this time, would only have the effect to make the pending bill a special order for that day, and the unfinished business would take precedence of the special order. His motion would be in order on that day if he chose to make it, if this bill remains undisposed of.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I apprehend—and upon this I would ask the counsel of the Senator from Tennessee—that if the motion were to the effect that the quarantine bill be made a special order for Wednesday to the exclusion of other special orders and all other business, it would take precedence, but that can be only done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Tennessee were in the chair he would answer that question, but he prefers not to do it on the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that it would require unanimous consent to displace special orders already existing and the unfinished business.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withdraw my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado withdraws his motion. The regular order is called for, which is the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. I desire to modify my amendment by striking out the words "ipso facto" where they occur.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, it is proposed to add to section 8, the following:

All the provisions of this act shall expire on the 1st day of January, 1895.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I am very much disinclined to ask any further continuance of this discussion; but I should be very glad, unless there is some very great exigency or urgency, that the request of the Senator from Louisiana should be complied with. I understand that he is expecting a committee from Louisiana. I have only received the dispatch to which I have referred recently, and I am frank to say that I telegraphed at once to the chairman of the board of health at Charleston that it was too late for the committee to have any effect in the city of Washington, but upon more recent information I was about to advise them that they might come with a view of pressing their views. If the bill is to go on now until a conclusion I shall not send the dispatch.

Mr. HARRIS. I would say to the Senator from South Carolina and to the Senator from Louisiana that I have tried in every way possible to accommodate the wishes and views of every Senator in respect of this matter. I desire that we shall proceed, and that every Senator shall have to-day an opportunity to offer all the amendments he proposes to offer. When they have all been disposed of, when the bill has been reported to the Senate, the amendments concurred in or rejected, and we are ready to vote upon the final passage of the bill, if the Senate shall give unanimous consent to let that vote go over until Wednesday, I shall be very ready to agree to it; but I am not willing to waste to-day with the doubt and uncertainty as to whether I can get another day for the consideration of the bill. I prefer to proceed with the regular order now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana as modified.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I dislike very much to be called to the discussion of this bill without putting my thoughts in order, so that I may state them more clearly than I necessarily shall be able to do when speaking in a desultory way.

The question of the power invested by the Constitution in the National Government on the subject of quarantine is not a new question. It is a question which arose almost coeval with the birth of the Government, I think in the Fourth Congress, when the ravages of yellow fever, just preceding the session of that Congress, had produced very much the same sense of consternation which is in the minds of the country to-day on the subject of cholera. An effort was made to establish a national quarantine, and the question of the power of the Government to do that was then discussed, and was defeated. Subsequently the same opinions prevailed, and no less a person than Mr. Adams, of Massachusetts, seems to have considered that the very nature of the quarantine power required the presence of locally appointed officers, and the attempt to legislate was frustrated.

After the frustration of this attempt thus to legislate, when yellow fever had again ravaged the country from one end to the other, invaded all or nearly all the northern and eastern cities, the attempt was renewed, was again resisted not only on constitutional grounds, but upon the broader ground that the very nature of quarantine required, in order that it should be efficaciously exercised, that it be lodged in the local authorities. That struggle led to the enactment of the act of 1789, which simply provided that it be the duty of the officers of the National Government to aid the States in the enforcement of their quarantine regulations.

Thus coeval with the Government this question arose, in the early Congresses, filled with the men who had helped to frame the Constitution, and who were imbued in every fiber of their being with the principles which had given that Constitution life. So the act of 1789 was kept on the statute book. The decision in Gibbons vs. Ogden, wherein Judge Marshall, whom certainly nobody can accuse of not being Federalistic in his tendencies, declared that the quarantine power was lodged in the States, and not in the Federal Government; therefore that the States could legitimately exercise it.

Now, the jurisprudence crystallized around that dicta in Gibbons vs. Ogden, down, I think, to a case from my State, the Morgan Louisiana Steamship Company case. In that case the court, undoubtedly arguendo, said that the quarantine power is vested in the States, like the bankruptcy power, subject only to nonaction on the part of Congress; that the authority existed in Congress to step in and assume the quarantine power, and necessarily with the stepping in of the Federal power the State power ceased. But such statement in the case is pure dictum, not at all necessarily connected with the decision of the case, which involved only the question of whether the State quarantine charge imposed in that case was a tax on tonnage within the intendment or purview of the Constitution.

Therefore, if we look at it solely as a question of authority, the greater weight and the great burden of authority, including the voices of many of the fathers of the Constitution, is that the quarantine power is a State and not a national power.

But the objection I now make to the pending bill is not a constitutional one. That is not the objection which causes me to now oppose it. I could rest content perhaps in my own mind with the dictum in the Morgan Louisiana Steamship case, and the authorities which support it, and admit the Federal powers. I concede for the purpose of what I propose to say that the quarantine power is one which rests in the States only so long as Congress does not act, and the moment Congress acts the States' power ceases to be. From the point of view which I take I want to place myself right in the spirit and mind of everyone who believes in the extreme of the exercise of the quarantine power by the Federal Government, and it is from this point of view that I wish to discuss the bill.

Certainly if we believe that the power should be exercised by the National Government we believe it should be wisely exercised. None of us think that it should be unwisely exercised. The magnitude of the power goes beyond my tongue to describe. The quarantine power reaches out to every port in this land. It stretches from the lowest point on the Gulf to the highest point on the Atlantic. It circles the Pacific coast with a grasp of iron. It reaches along the Great Lakes. This bill provides for interstate quarantine. It goes everywhere in this land, into every home and every village, because the power which it asserts is a power to go everywhere where disease or pestilence prevails.

I say if we are going to bring these great powers into play, let us bring them into play at least with some of those safeguards which have been thrown around them in every civilized country where they are invoked. Does this bill do that? Sir, it does nothing of the kind. I read last night the English quarantine legislation. With sedulous care it defines the limitations of what the general power shall be and it confides to the local authorities those things that are necessary to be done locally. They give to all the local ports in Great Britain their voice and control within just limits. They put their limitation as to what can be done by the privy council.

What does this bill do? Now, let us see. If there be a crying necessity for national quarantine; if we all start with a full admission that our purpose is to adopt a national quarantine, and that our duty is to do it, let us adopt one and not adopt a hybrid system which is neither fish, flesh, fowl, nor good red herring, and which delegates the powers that it does delegate by subterfuge and evasion.

Now, let us look at it. What does the bill provide? Is it a bill to create a national quarantine? Look at its title. It is entitled "A bill making an additional grant of power to the Marine Hospital Service." Is it contended that the national quarantine exists to-day? No. If this is to be an act creating the national quarantine why does not the title say so? What does it do? Its first section delegates to the Secretary of the Treasury the supreme power to make rules as to quarantine—the power to make regulations for merchant vessels coming in.

Its second section compels these vessels to comply. Its third section (and here comes the trouble in this proposed act) says what? That it shall be the duty of the Marine Hospital Service to enforce the regulations of the States where they are proper regulations, and to make regulations where there are none. They are to be the judges, or the Secretary of the Treasury is to be the judge whether the State enforces the regulations, and, if not, then the power exists to step in and enforce them.

I asked the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] a question the other day which I think was a significant question, whether from the foundation of the Government there had ever been a power conceded to the Federal Government, even questionably, where the immediate and necessary resultant has not been that the Federal Government assumed the authority—whether every claimed infraction has not been decided in favor of the exercise of the Federal power and against the State power, thereby making the Federal power absolutely dominant.

It is of the essence of quarantine that local autonomy should exist, regulated, if you please, by uniform rules, but not lodging the power in any distant executive officer to destroy local rules at his volition. This bill is not an act of legislation at all. It is a delegation to an executive officer of the Government of the great power to determine as he pleases as to all the quarantines in this land, to determine the time of detention, to determine the nature of disinfection, and to follow that power up by all the great powers which are necessarily consequent on it embraced in it in its very terms.

It reaches out, as I have said, not only to the extraterritorial quarantine against the invasion of foreign pestilence, but the bill says "from State to State." So to-morrow, if in any village or town an epidemic of diphtheria occurs and the national authority considers that the existence of diphtheria in that town threatens another State, the municipality can be wiped out of existence and the Federal power step in; thus the whole autonomy is absorbed and destroyed.

If we are going to do this stupendous and awful thing, if we are going to make this mighty change in the fabric of our Government, let us at least do it as reasonable men, and throw around it the safeguards and the limitations which necessarily must be thrown around every quarantine power in order that the power may be wisely exercised. Are we here in the performance of our legislative functions to give them up, to confess our ineptitude, to say we propose to legislate for the whole country and make a revolution greater than has been contemplated from the foundation of the Government; and we will make it not by exercising our judgment and providing what shall go in the bill, but we will make it by delegating our legislative responsibility upon this great issue to a ministerial officer?

Mr. President, that is what my amendment means. If we are to make this temporary makeshift, if the origin of the bill is the dread of incoming cholera, then let us take the time to legislate wisely upon the subject in future.

Mr. BUTLER. Would it disturb the Senator from Louisiana if I put a question to him?

Mr. WHITE. Not at all.

Mr. BUTLER. He has examined the bill with very much more care than I have. Do I understand him to say that his construction of the bill now before the Senate, is that if the city of New Orleans, or New York, or Norfolk, or Galveston, should establish local rules and regulations for the exclusion of an infectious disease, the regulations made by the Marine Hospital Service under the bill would set those regulations aside?

Mr. WHITE. Unquestionably and unhesitatingly. The bill says so in terms.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to join in answering the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WHITE. I should rather answer the Senator myself, as the question was addressed to me.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Louisiana has answered the Senator from South Carolina, and answered him incorrectly, as I conceive.

Mr. WHITE. I will hear the Senator from Tennessee, and then I will respond to his reply.

Mr. HARRIS. The third section of the bill provides that at ports and places where there are no quarantine regulations the Federal authority may make such as are deemed absolutely necessary to prevent the importation of contagion, and at ports and places where there are quarantine regulations, if deemed insufficient, the Federal authority may make additional rules and regulations.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Tennessee will permit me to interrupt him right there, I beg to differ with him as to the answer given to me by the Senator from Louisiana, because I think he answered my question correctly according to the Senator from Tennessee's own interpretation.

Mr. HARRIS. It does not interfere with any rule or regulation of the State board, but it makes additional ones under the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I submit, with the permission of the Senator from Louisiana, that with the power vested by the bill in the Marine Hospital Service they could practically set aside and do away with any local regulations made by State authority.

Mr. HARRIS. So far from it, it does not interfere with them, and proposes to aid them in all their quarantine operations.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. WHITE. I thank the Senator from South Carolina, and I am very much obliged to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, because his answer affords me an opportunity to do now what I intended to do this morning. In the course of my remarks day before yesterday I said that the bill by its provisions does by indirection what it proposes. When I said that day before yesterday the distinguished Senator from Tennessee in the course of debate took occasion to say that he repelled it. I had intended this morning to meet that remark of his by the statement that of course there never entered into my mind the possibility of a conception that there could be any indirection in the purposes and motives of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, and therefore the repelling of what I said seemed to me an unnecessary repulsion.

But his statement on the floor to-day makes it perfectly clear to me that the difference between himself and myself is the difference of the vision with which we look at the subject. We stand in the position of the knights, one of whom saw a shield of gold and the other of silver. We stand in the position of an Irishman and a Frenchman who quarreled. The Irishman being in France met a Frenchman and he asked, "Can you tell me where I can get a drink of whisky?" The Frenchman said to him, "Monsieur, me demande?" "Ah!" says the Irishman, "you say 'be damned?' Be damned to yourself," and he knocked him down. [Laughter.] They were arrested and taken to the lock-up, and when it was explained that there was only a misunderstanding of the terms used there was no quarrel whatever. I am quite sure that is the case between the Senator from Tennessee and myself.

But nothing can bridge over the mental chasm which lies between himself and myself in the conception of the provisions of this bill. If the bill does not do what I say it does, then the English language has been written in vain. Let me take it up and see if this is not perfectly plain:

That the Supervising Surgeon-General shall coöperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards and in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, and into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia; and at such ports and places within the United States as have no quarantine regulations under State or municipal authority, where such regulations are in the opinion of—the Secretary of the Treasury, necessary to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and at such ports and places within the United States where quarantine regulations exist under the authority of the State or municipality which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, are not sufficient to prevent the introduction of such diseases into the United States, or into one State from another—

Then the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury shall prevail, and he may assume the enforcement. That is the bill. It says they shall enforce the rules of the State boards, and they shall supplement such rules as in their judgment are necessary, and when in their opinion the State rules are wrong, their opinion dominates over and controls. If that is not the lodging of the power in them to exercise the whole sum of the confided power, then I do not know what the English language means.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Federal authority shall decide that the rules and regulations of the State board do not go quite far enough and shall supplement those rules by additional rules, does it operate as a repeal of any of the existing insufficient rules?

Mr. BUTLER. It nullifies them.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from South Carolina says, ex cathedra, it nullifies them.

Mr. BUTLER. No, I beg the Senator's pardon, I did not say it ex cathedra.

Mr. HARRIS. He did not pronounce that phrase, but I say it.

Mr. BUTLER. I said it sotto voce.

Mr. HARRIS. That perhaps is a better term.

Mr. WHITE. Suppose the law said to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, "You shall carry your pocketbook in your pocket; it will be yours unless in the opinion of the footpad whom you meet on the street he shall have a right to take it," where would the Senator's pocketbook be? I repeat, and I ask this question, Where, from the foundation of the Government, can the distinguished Senator from Tennessee point to a lodgment of a power in the Federal Government wherein, in the opinion of the Federal Government, their power was to exist according to their judgment of its existence, has the Federal Government failed to dominate?

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator another question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. Assume that the State board has imposed by regulation half a dozen restrictions upon the entry into that port, and the Federal authority shall decide that all of the half dozen restrictions are not quite sufficient to give absolute security to the health and well being of this country and add one other restriction, does the adding of that one other restriction repeal the half dozen the State board has provided, especially when the act authorizes the State board to enforce each and every one of its regulations as well after the passage of this proposed act as before it?

Mr. WHITE. I will settle that question between the Senator and myself by the colloquy which took place in the Senate a while ago as to the postponement of this bill. The Senator, with his usual kindness and consideration, proposed that the bill should go over with limitations. If the rules of the Senate had provided that it should go over as my opinion chose (and I reckon that my opinion would have chosen to carry it over to the end of the session), I submit the question whether the exercise of my opinion would have been a repeal of his opinion or not. That is an answer to the question he put to me. I say it with the greatest respect, in the domain of discussion, in my judgment it is not a question at all.

I call the attention of Senators, I invoke their careful consideration, to the awful consequences which are going to flow out of this bill. I beg them to pause and not to be carried away by any temporary hue and cry of cholera. Our forefathers were not carried away in the Fourth Congress when the yellow fever raged from one end of this land to the other and an attempt was made to usurp all these great local powers and lodge them in the Federal Government.

I say this misconception—and I use it as a word of discussion, full of respect for the distinguished Senator—this misconception on his part of the very terms of the bill which he is advocating on this floor with so much zeal and so much devotion should strike the death knell of the bill, because if he does not understand the necessary consequences of the English language in the bill why should we put it upon the statute books without limitation permanently?

What follows in the bill? Read the language put in day before yesterday, which says that the Marine Hospital Service shall be the judge of how the rules are enforced after their rules are made. In other words, if here and there and anywhere these local boards, when a question arises, say, "Well, I think the enforcement of the law is this," and they act upon their judgment eo instanti, there arises in this bill the creation of a power authorizing the Federal board to say, "Your judgment is wrong; we represent the sum of all the local powers in the country and exercise them ourselves."

What could be more appalling in danger to the people of this country? Admit (and I am not controverting that view) the necessity for a national quarantine; admit its constitutionality; admit its wisdom, admit its expediency; are we going to adopt a national quarantine, bringing in it provisions which are fatal to local self-government from one end of this country to the other, when those provisions are not necessary for national quarantine, are not found in the quarantine laws of any civilized country in the world? Why not write a bill drawing broad lines, putting power in a nationally created board, regulating their relations to the local boards, and giving each their share of authority necessary to uniformity and for safety, but not creating this machinery, which by subterfuge or some indirect language reaches out its arms to put the hand of death upon the local rights of all the people of this land?

I ask any Senator here if to-morrow (let me take the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] in his city of Jackson) twenty cases of diphtheria should occur, and the State board of health says, "I make a rule about this that provides so and so." The Marine Hospital Service comes in and says, "I think so and so, or Mr. Local Board of Jackson you will not enforce your regulations as I think they ought to be enforced. I send my inspector to your town and take possession of it, because the contagion which is germinating here may fan into a conflagration and reach out into the State of Tennessee."

Therefore, as was said by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] the other day, the power to stop infection is the power to go into the house and home of every man in this land from one end of it to the other. That is the power which this bill gives, and I raise my voice of warning here. It is the power which, if the bill passes, is going to be exercised. It is a power which is going to follow every man here in his home for the rest of his days. It is a power which is going to sow the dragon's teeth of centralization. Cholera is the nightmare and the bugbear held out to frighten people out of their elementary conceptions of liberty—to invade their rights. That is the truth.

Now, Mr. President, what does my amendment provide? What objection can there be to my amendment? I say this is not a complete national quarantine act. No man contends that it is. Its very title shows its infirmity. Its every provision shows its infirmity. The great influence of the Marine Hospital Service and the many places which this bill creates causes the purpose to stifle liberty to speak out of every line of the bill. The statement was made on the floor day before yesterday that the rules which were to execute this proposed law were prepared by the Marine Hospital Service before the bill had been brought up.

Let us admit that the bill just as it is drawn up is necessary; I am discussing my amendment. Let us admit that it be absolutely necessary that we pass the bill to-day; that unless we pass the bill to-day stalking all over this land will be cholera, carrying misery and suffering and pestilence into every home, and therefore that we must pass it. Will we not pass it with regret? Will we not pass it with reluctance? Will we not say we would rather have taken the time and matured this great legislation, as every other country has done, so as to make a uniform and concordant and coherent system, measuring the responsibilities and rights all over the land? We have not the time to do it, because we see coming on us this dread pestilence and we will pass the bill. We make all the sacrifices necessary.

Does my amendment hurt the bill? Does my amendment take out of the bill a single provision in it that makes it efficacious? No, sir; my amendment simply provides that the bill shall last until 1895, and then it shall cease and determine unless Congress chooses to continue it. If I am wrong in the awful experiment which the bill makes, if I am wrong in the mighty concentration of power which flows out of it, what harm does my amendment do? In the earlier and better days of the Republic, in many of the Congressional and other acts, such a provision was inserted.

If I am right, then from this bill will come the mighty brood of Marine Hospital doctors, spread into every hamlet and every port and foreign ports under salaries; you are going to sow the wind in order that you may reap the whirlwind. When you come to repeal the law the lobbies of this Capitol will be full of a host of employés imploring and pressing and pulling wires, and it will be very difficult to repeal it; yes, nearly impossible. That is why the wisdom of our fathers in the earlier and better days of the Republic breathed into so many of their legislative acts such a provision. It was because they knew that to give birth to a power gave birth to the influence and struggle to succeed to make that power continuous and perpetual.

If, on the other hand, this bill is the merciful child of the providence of God, which its authors state, what harm will this proposed amendment do? I should fancy if all the blessings which the distinguished Senator sees concealed in the bill are by it to be poured out upon this people, we would have to tear down the arch of this door and make it wider in order that the legislators might rush into these halls to continue that mercy which the bill would have bestowed upon the country.

In whatever way you look at it my amendment does good. If the bill is bad it saves the people of the country from the consequences of a struggle to frustrate its repeal. If the bill is good it does not prevent them from continuing it.

Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of Senators on this floor to a fact. I am not left to conjecture about this matter. One ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure, and one iota of experience is better than oceans of theory. What admission have we had upon this floor? We have had the admission that years ago in these halls a national quarantine law was passed, and that the appropriations to carry it out never could be obtained because of the jealousy of the Marine Hospital organization, which came into these halls and rendered that national quarantine law inoperative.

I say, with that statement recently made on this floor, where is there a Senator here who will not say that if such was their power without a quarantine bill in their favor, when you have multiplied their official functions and extended them all over this land with strength and power and official influence in their hands, they would not be able to accomplish that which they succeeded in accomplishing when they had neither of them?

I say if necessary in your opinion make the experiment. If you are determined on it, make it, but make it in such a way as to build a breakwater against the consequences which I see lurking in the provisions of the bill, and which will leave you without, perhaps, the ability of altering and changing in consequence of the great influence exerted when the disaster which the provisions of the bill contain will have worked themselves out.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, there is scarcely a sanitary organization in the United States that has not, year by year, and for several years, urged the absolute necessity of an efficient and uniform quarantine system throughout the United States. The only exception that I know of to the absolute uniformity and unanimity of that recommendation comes from a few local boards of health jealous of their positions, jealous of their authority, and perhaps somewhat devoted to the income that results from the execution of their regulations. Some of them have always opposed any attempt by the Federal Government to interfere at all.

Now, what is the plain and unmistakable question for the Senate to decide? The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] will not differ with me in the assertion of the power in Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. Every power granted in this bill is the exercise of that constitutional power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. I defy any Senator to point out a single power granted by the bill that does not legitimately fall within that clause of the Constitution.

The plain, practical question for the Senate to decide is, Shall we have one uniform and efficient system of quarantine regulation throughout the whole country, or shall we have forty-four different systems of commercial regulations? For if the Federal Government does not exercise the power to regulate commerce in respect to this question of quarantine, the courts have decided, and I think properly decided, that the States may exercise it. The whole theory of the argument of the Senator from Louisiana is that the Federal Government should ignore its power to control these questions and allow the forty-four States each to form its own system of commercial regulations.

I have a somewhat sad experience, which accounts in some degree for any enthusiasm I may have in support of this measure. I chance to live at the head of deep-water navigation of the great Mississippi River. New Orleans rests at the mouth of that great channel of commerce. It is the New Orleans board of health that speaks here to-day through the Senator from that great State, protesting against any exercise of the powers of Congress to regulate commerce in respect to this matter of quarantine. Efficient, and great, and able, and patriotic as the board of health of New Orleans may have always been and may be, I chance to know that the city in which I live has been under my own eye decimated as often as twice by yellow fever, which was allowed to slip through the quarantine regulations of New Orleans either because of the fact that their rules were not sufficient in themselves or not enforced with sufficient vigor.

Memphis has suffered to the extent of the decimation of her population as often as twice, and I have sat there and looked out my window for week after week during the epidemic of 1873 when not a door was opened except the door of the drug store, the doctor's office, and the undertaker's shop. I have walked the street, sir, from my house to the post-office, day by day, to get my mail, and have found not a single door open in that city for weeks except those that I have named. There was not a family in the city which could venture to aid its neighbor because the patients in its own house were so numerous as to demand the attention and the nursing of every member of the family. There was not an object moving on the streets except the hearse, followed by perhaps one carriage or a buggy with the surviving members of the stricken family accompanying the remains of the last victim to the grave. For weeks at a time I have witnessed scenes like those in 1873, and it was worse in 1878.

Are we to be compelled to rely now and always upon the wisdom and the zeal and the energy of a board of health and quarantine authorities which allow things such as these to occur year after year? I protest in the name of the people who are my neighbors, I protest in the name of the whole people of the valley of the Mississippi, against a failure to exercise the power that we unquestionably have, and that they have a right to demand we shall exercise for the security of their lives and their health, even though it may be distasteful to the New Orleans quarantine authorities.

The people of New Orleans are acclimated. There are very few if any adults who reside there who are not exempt from yellow fever, having once had it. Hence they have little or no fear of it, and naturally are not so vigilant in excluding it as the security of the people in the interior demands.

New Orleans has a large and profitable trade with Havana and Vera Cruz, where yellow fever always exists.

If the theory of the Senator from Louisiana prevails, the whole people of the interior States are compelled to rely upon the sufficiency of the regulations made by cities on the seaboard, and the sufficiency of their execution by authorities over which they have no control. It is the duty of this Government to exercise its constitutional powers to protect the whole people and not compel the people of interior States to rely entirely upon the States upon the seaboard for their protection, when we know that if a single gate is left open, through which contagion may enter, the whole country must suffer the disastrous consequences of an epidemic.

This bill does not propose to interfere with State quarantines in any way except that where their rules and regulations are not sufficient to protect the people of the country the Federal authority shall step in, in the legitimate exercise of the power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce, and make rules and regulations which will strip that commerce of contagion and protect that people; that is all.

Now, Mr. President, I want to dispose of the pending bill. I think it important to the whole country that it should be promptly passed, and therefore will not consume more time in debate; but I will ask to have the report read, and I will put into the RECORD the action of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, sent to me yesterday, in respect to this matter, which I will have put into the RECORD without reading at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read in the absence of objection.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to discuss this measure, but as I propose to vote for it——

Mr. HARRIS. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report submitted by the Senator from Tennessee was about to be read in the course of his remarks.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon; I thought he only wanted to print it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRIS January 4, 1893:

The Committee on Epidemic Diseases, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service, submit the following report:

The committee is satisfied that an effective and uniform system of quarantine regulations vigorously enforced at all ports and places having commercial intercourse with foreign countries is absolutely necessary as the only means of preventing the importation of contagious and infectious diseases into this country from other countries, and that a perfect and uniform system is equally necessary to prevent the importation of such diseases into one State from another.

Some of the States have adopted systems of quarantine regulation which, in the opinion of the committee, are sufficient, so far as treatment at the port of entry is concerned; but many others have no quarantine regulations whatever, and if a single gate is left open to the introduction of such diseases the whole country may suffer the disastrous consequences of fatal epidemics.

Scientific investigation has asserted that neither yellow fever nor cholera originates in this country, but that if either is imported under certain atmospheric conditions they will take root and spread with disastrous rapidity and fatality.

The most important of all considerations is to keep them out, and in the opinion of the committee the only means of effectually preventing their importation is a thorough system of national quarantine, which shall be uniform and enforced with vigor at every point of intercourse with foreign nations, and equally uniform and equally enforced as between States.

State quarantine authorities have been jealous of any interference by national authority with their quarantine regulations, and those of New York and New Orleans have heretofore steadily opposed any national control of the subject.

The quarantine regulations of these States give a large revenue to these States or to their boards of health, and for that reason, if for no other, they may be expected to oppose national control.

Now, however perfect their systems of regulations and the systems of other States may be, they are but the systems of a small proportion of forty-four States.

The forty-four States need, demand, and are entitled to protection from this importation of disease.

The eighth section of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States provides that—

"Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes."

The regulations proposed by this bill are strictly regulations of foreign and interstate commerce and nothing more.

The transportation of a person or any article of merchandise from any foreign country to this country, or from this to any foreign country, is an act of "commerce with foreign nations," and the transportation of persons or property from one State to another is an act of "commerce among the States."

This bill proposes to so "regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States" as to strip it of contagion and infection.

Under this power to regulate commerce, Congress has from the beginning of the Government made large annual appropriations to remove snags, bars, and other obstructions from the navigable waters of the country.

Under the same power it has established and maintains a system of lighthouses and life-saving service, for the maintenance of which annual appropriations of about $3,500,000 are made, and, as the committee believes, wisely made.

So it appears that under the power to "regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States" Congress appropriates in the aggregate from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 annually, and in what interest? The only interest it subserves is to facilitate the single interest of commerce and give greater security to the lives and property of that very small proportion of the American people who chance to be afloat upon our waters.

But the whole American people, 65,000,000 in number, are directly and deeply interested in the establishment and maintenance of such perfect and uniform system of quarantine regulations of commerce as will effectually prevent the importation of contagious or infectious diseases into this country from foreign countries or into one State from another.

The entry of one case of yellow fever or one case of cholera into this country, neither of which ever originate here, may result, and in times past has resulted, in widespread epidemics, costing the country hundreds of millions of dollars in money, to say nothing of the thousands of lives and the other thousands of citizens whose health have been impaired by imported diseases, that should have never been allowed to enter this country.

The national conference of State boards of health, an organization of the sanitarians of the United States, Mexico, and Canada, and the committee may safely say, all other organizations of sanitarians and physicians in this country recommend, some of them a board, some a bureau, and some a department of health composed of sanitary scientists, but they all concur in recommending a sanitary organization located at the capital, which shall organize a perfect quarantine system and shall have control of all quarantine regulations and other quesrions affecting the public health so far as the Federal Government has constitutional power to deal with such questions.

The committee is in full sympathy with these recommendations, and is of opinion that a national board of health (in the Treasury Department), composed of sanitary scientists, should be established and maintained.

But in the light of the legislation of the last thirteen years it is compelled to adopt, not what it regards as the best policy, but the only policy which it thinks can be made successful.

Additional powers should be lodged in some Federal authority with regard to the treatment of vessels, their crews, passengers, and cargoes at foreign ports before sailing to any American port, and a method of promulgation abroad which will stand the test of judicial investigation in this country.

These powers are, in the opinion of the committee, not only important, but absolutely necessary to the security of this country from the importation of contagious and infectious diseases, and fearing that Congress could not be induced to support and maintain a national board of health, much less a bureau or department of health, the committee recommends that the powers conferred and the duties imposed by this bill be conferred and imposed upon the Marine Hospital Service.

There exists now upon the statute a National Board of Health, created by the act of 1879, which Board, while in operation, performed its duties efficiently and well; but for many years Congress has failed to make the appropriations necessary to enable it to perform its duties, and for that period the Treasury Department has subjected the contingent fund annually appropriated to prevent the introduction and spread of epidemics to the control of the Marine Hospital Service.

While the committee believes that it is not the safest and best policy to lodge these powers and duties with the Marine Hospital Service, it thinks it is better to place them there than not to enact them at all; and as it believes that this is the only policy at all likely to succeed in Congress, it adopts it.

So far from proposing to interfere in any way or to any extent with State or municipal boards of health or their quarantine regulations, it proposes to aid them so far as it constitutionally can in the execution of their own rules and regulations; but it asserts the right and imposes the duty upon the national authority to make rules and regulations where they are deemed by the Federal authority necessary and where none exist, and to make additional rules and regulations where they do exist but are thought by the national authority to be insufficient to prevent the introduction of these diseases.

But when these rules and regulations shall have been made, the bill provides that the State authorities may execute them if they will; but in cases where the State authorities fail or refuse to execute their own rules and the rules made under this act, it is made the duty of the President to detail or appoint an officer to execute them. The reason why any State board of health should oppose this bill the committee is at a loss to see.

The committee recommends the adoption of the amendments and the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The other paper will, at the request of the Senator from Tennessee, be inserted in the RECORD in the absence of objection. The Chair hears no objection.

The paper is as follows:

NEW YORK BOARD OF TRADE AND TRANSPORTATION,
BRYANT BUILDING, 55 LIBERTY STREET,
New York, January 7, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for your information, in advance of printing, a proof copy of the report of the special committee of this board on quarantine, which was adopted at the special meeting held yesterday.

Very respectfully,

FRANK S. GARDNER,
Assistant Secretary.

Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

A NATIONAL QUARANTINE ESSENTIAL TO THE SAFETY OF OUR PEOPLE.

NEW YORK, January 6, 1893.

To the New York Board of Trade and Transportation:

At the October meeting of this board the undersigned special committee was appointed pursuant to the following resolution, viz:

"Resolved, That the question of the establishment of a national quarantine be referred to a special committee of five members to report at the next meeting by resolution, bill, or otherwise, their conclusions in the matter."

The question thus presented for investigation and consideration is: Do the safety and welfare of the people of this country and the interests of commerce demand the establishment of a uniform system of quarantine in the United States, under the management of the Federal Government?

This question is not a new one, but renewed interest attaches to it by reason of the experiences of the past year and the dread of the threatened invasion of cholera during the coming spring and summer. The obligation of government to protect the people, by the best means it can command, from the ravages of pestilential and infectious diseases is fully recognized by all enlightened nations, and no apparent conflict between a national and a State system should be allowed to interfere with a proper discharge of the duties which such obligations and the exigencies of the times demand.

Eliminating from the question the consideration of all local and political interests, the committee has sought information from every available source that would throw light upon the subject and disclose the true condition of the defenses of the country as a whole, as they now exist, against the threatened invasion of cholera and other epidemics and infectious diseases. The committee has not investigated the existing administration of quarantine at this port, and presents to you no testimony relating thereto or criticism thereon. New York is but one point in the line that needs defense; it is immaterial from the point of view of this investigation, whether New York can be protected under the State system as fully as under a national system, if other points are left weak and defenseless. The question concerns the country as a whole and every part thereof.

In the public discussion of quarantine the subject of immigration has been somewhat involved with it, to the confusion of both questions. The very consideration of quarantine implies the continuance, within safe regulations, of international commerce and the migration of the world's population. The more perfect we make the system of quarantine under scientific regulations, with ample facilities to enforce them, the less will be the restrictions and the burdens upon commerce. The purpose of quarantine is to eliminate the elements of danger, and to confine the restrictions within those limits. In corroboration of this position we quote from the report of the international quarantine inspection commission, after a thorough examination of the quarantine establishments of the St. Lawrence and Atlantic coast, in September last:

"A quarantine of exclusion should not be necessary at a port properly equipped, and it is not to the credit of a country like ours that we are forced to resort to it. With preparation safety can be had with little interference with commerce and travel."

The general question of immigration, and whether it has the same value for our country as in past decades, is foreign to the subject, and care should be taken that under the pretense and cover of quarantine laws the opponents to immigration, as such, be not permitted to effect their purpose contrary to the will of the majority of the people of the several States.

What classes of immigrants shall be admitted to this country is one question; what system of quarantine and sanitary inspection of vessels, cargoes, and passengers shall be adopted is another question, and it is the opinion of this committee that the best results will be attained by separating the two subjects in legislation.

The first step taken by the committee was the preparation of a circular, which is submitted as Appendix A to this report.

This circular, with a personal letter, the committee sent to the governors of all the States; to the mayors of the principal cities on the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards and on the Great Lakes, and those of the larger interior cities, seventy in all; to the principal officers of the United States Marine Hospital Service, and surgeons of the Army; to the boards of health of all the States and the officers thereof individually; to the boards of health of the principal cities, and to a selected number of other persons who were supposed to have had practical experience with sanitary affairs in the United States and Canada or who by reason of special knowledge upon the subject were able to give valuable opinions.

To this circular the committee has received 64 replies. Of these 41 recommend the adoption of a national quarantine system, 5 are opposed to a national system, 5 are doubtful, and 13 express no opinion. As these letters were received, the committee, learning that the newspapers were willing to publish them, furnished duplicate copies which were reproduced from day to day in the columns of both the morning and afternoon papers, in many cases in full. By this liberal and public-spirited policy the papers have laid before the country many valuable contributions to the literature and information of the subject.

To make an analysis of these communications or to print extracts from them would so largely detract from their value and importance, the committee deem it essential, if the greatest good is to be derived from the inquiry, that they be put in permanent form. Those favoring a national quarantine are therefore submitted as Appendix B to this report.

The communications which oppose a national quarantine are few, and although contrary to the conclusions the committee has reached, are submitted in Appendix C as probably embracing the strongest arguments which can be urged in support of that side.

Several letters received which expressed no decided preference are nevertheless interesting and instructive, and are submitted in Appendix D.

Enabled as we are to place before you these intelligent opinions, with the data they contain, of scientists, physicians, and experts in sanitary affairs, it is not necessary for this committee to discuss the question in detail.

The findings of the committee are:

First. That quarantine in times of danger is of equal concern to the entire country—to the people of the interior States as well as those on the seaboards—and it is not just to the latter to throw the whole expense and responsibility of the defenses upon them; nor is it just to the former to deprive them of a voice as to the method and degree of protection along the seaboards.

Second. That the line of defense to be effective must be fortified at all points where the invasion of disease is threatened or possible, and it is not wise or safe to trust the defenses to chance or to a quarantine system exhibiting varying degrees of efficiency or deficiency as now existing under the separate regulations of the several States and of local authorities.

Third. That the testimony presented shows quarantines maintained by the National Government to be more uniformly efficient than those maintained by the State and local authorities, and that the means employed and apparatus necessary and available are superior, and usually such as are approved and meet the requirements of sanitary science.

Fourth. That State and local quarantines are largely, if not wholly, supported by fees and taxes levied upon ships, immigrants, or commerce; that State and local authorities are reluctant, except in the presence of imminent danger and then often unable, to provide, in addition to these imposts, the means necessary to render quarantine efficient; that many points are wholly uncovered and open to invasion.

Fifth. That State and local quarantines, as at present maintained, are unequal and often unjust burdens upon commerce, and their regulations, imposts and fees lacking uniformity are disadvantageous. That no power exists short of Congress to maintain and perfect uniformly safe defenses against the invasion of disease and thereby adequately protect all the States and the people of the entire country.

The conclusion of your committee, therefore, is that it is essential to the safety of our people and the protection of their lives that a national quarantine system be established in the United States at the earliest possible day.

We believe that to be effective the system adopted must be national, and that any systems maintained at ports of entry under State or local control should not be allowed to conflict with or hinder the national system.

Respectfully submitted.

AMBROSE SNOW,

APPENDIX A.

ROOMS OF THE NEW YORK BOARD OF TRADE AND TRANSPORTATION, 55 LIBERTY STREET,
New York, December 5, 1892.

A special committee of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation has been appointed, pursuant to resolution, and is seeking information, data, and opinions touching quarantine, and the advantages, if any, of establishing a uniform system in the United States, under the management of the General Government; the intention being, if the weight of opinion and evidence favor the proposition, to prepare suggestions for Congressional legislation on the subject.

The members of the committee are: Chairman, Hon. Oscar S. Straus (ex-United States minister to Turkey), of L. Straus & Sons, importers of china, glass, etc.; Mr. Jeremiah Fitzpatrick, of J. Fitzpatrick & Co., importers and manufacturers of plate glass, looking glass, etc.; Mr. Edward H. Cole, of the Eaton, Cole & Burnham Company, well machinery and brass goods; Mr. Elias S. A. De Lima, of D. A. De Lima & Co., foreign commission merchants; Mr. Ambrose Snow, of Snow & Burgess, shipping and commission merchants.

The committee have adopted the following line of inquiry, and invite such suggestions and opinions thereon as they may be willing to make public, from experts and professional men having practical experience of sanitary affairs and from others having opinions on the subject:

First. Quarantine administration in foreign countries as furnishing precedents for the United States.

Second. The present status of quarantine in the United States: A. National. B. State.

Third. The existing system of quarantine administration in the United States: A. Cost. B. Restrictions imposed on commerce and travel. C. Security afforded.

Fourth. A national quarantine: A. Would it lessen the existing imposts upon commerce? B. Would restrictions on commerce and travel be less injurious? C. Would it afford increased security to the country?

Persons writing the committee are requested to affix to their names their professional or special titles, if any, and to address their communications to Hon. Oscar S. Straus, chairman, 55 Liberty street, New York, N. Y.

Respectfully, etc.,

DARWIN R. JAMES, Secretary.

Mr. CALL. I should like to have the pending amendment read. It is the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE], I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the last section of the bill:

All the provisions of this act shall expire on the 1st day of January, 1895.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it is not my intention to enter into a discussion of the constitutional questions which have been brought in view in connection with the bill. It is admitted by the Senator from Louisiana that under the law as now expounded by the Supreme Court in the case of the Morgan Louisiana Steamship Company the Federal Government may enact a quarantine law which shall wholly supersede State regulations on the subject, and therefore the Senator confines himself at this time to arguing from the standpoint of those who desire a national quarantine law that the bill is incomplete and unsatisfactory; that if a national quarantine law is to be enacted it ought to be one specific in its terms, carefully and prudently and wisely going over the whole subject of quarantine.

In effect he says it ought not to be a measure so general in its terms as this; that the powers conferred by this proposed law ought not to be conferred in such general terms upon the Executive, but that a law might be drawn more satisfactory in its details, and indeed in its general outline, than the present bill. Therefore the Senator proposes that we shall insert a provision of law which shall make it temporary in its character, so that it shall expire by its own operation on the 1st day of January, 1895.

I hope that the amendment will not be adopted. I do not argue that it ought not to be adopted, because I do not expect a more satisfactory law will be placed upon the statute book within the next two or four years. I do expect further legislation upon this subject; but I submit that if it is wise to enact this proposed law at this time it is better that it should remain upon the statute book until some other law supersedes it than that it should expire by its own terms two years from this time, leaving us then perhaps on the verge of an incursion of cholera in precisely the condition in which we now find ourselves.

Mr. President, this proposed law is a compromise measure, as has clearly appeared hitherto in the course of the debate. It was perfectly evident, as I stated on Friday last, that it would be impossible to carry through the Congress of the United States at the present session, and between now and the 4th of March a national law which should supersede the State quarantine establishments; and therefore it was thought best by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, represented by the Senator from Tennessee, not to undertake to do that. From the investigations which I had the honor to make into the subject in connection with that Senator and from my reflections upon the subject, I was convinced that that conclusion was right. The bill has been carefully framed. It will not destroy the Louisiana State quarantine; it will not destroy the Massachusetts State quarantine, and above all it will not at this time destroy the New York State quarantine.

The distinction which the Senator from Tennessee has drawn may be somewhat fanciful as between the powers of the State and the national governments. The scheme which he has invented here, by which the State authorities are, if they choose to do so, to perform the duties which may be imposed upon them by national law, and the Federal Government shall not interfere with their performances of those duties so long as they perform them satisfactorily and well, may not be in all respects what we shall wish for a permanent system.

I am free to concede it. I am free to agree to many of the criticisms which the Senator from Louisiana has made upon this method of adapting the legislation of Congress to the present situation and giving us for the coming exigency (and there is an exigency) that national power, that national regulation, and that national supremacy on this subject which are indispensable to the people of Mississippi, which are indispensable to the people of all the States of this Union.

Mr. President, this being, it is true, compromise legislation; this bill being, it is true, not a bill logically constructed either upon the theory that there shall be an exclusively national quarantine or that there shall be an exclusively State quarantine, but an endeavor to meet the constitutional difficulties, and the practical difficulties in a sensible and in a practical way, why should we not allow the bill to remain upon the statute book until it is superceded by something better? Why can not the Senator from Louisiana concede that if within the next two years we do not adopt a better bill, then this bill shall remain upon the statute book until a better bill can be devised?

It seems to me that there is no sensible, no wise argument in favor of making this proposed law temporary in its character, even if every Senator here believes it is to be temporary, because we ought all to concede that, if during the next two years we are unable to frame a better law than this, this ought to stand as the national law until a better law can be framed.

Mr. WHITE. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not at all.

Mr. WHITE. I had it in my mind when I made some remarks a few minutes ago, to make some reference to the Senator's Gridiron Club speech, and the influences which he thought resulted from interest. Does not the Senator think it will be a great deal more difficult, if his ideas about the Gridiron Club the other day were at all accurate to work out the perfection of a proper bill with the great influence of the Marine Hospital Service, interested in maintaining this bill as it stands, installed in power than it would be without it?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not see much force in the Senator's suggestion. If we have all these influences against the present bill, shall we not have them against another bill? It seems to me so. If it has taken all this trouble and has taken the labors of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] for the last ten years to construct a bill, which, even if it is only temporary in its character, does organize a quarantine system, which consistently with the State system gives us national supervision and national control, how can we expect that within the next two years we can construct even a better bill?

Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana has shown a most excellent disposition in reference to this legislation. He has shown a disposition not to embarrass the passage of this bill, whether it is to be a temporary measure or a permanent measure. Now, having reduced his formal objections to a motion that the bill shall terminate by its own force on the 4th of March, 1895, I ask him to go a little farther, and to persuade his Louisiana friends to go a little further, by conceding that although we may need additional legislation, although we may need other legislation, yet if we shall not happen to succeed in framing a better bill in the next two years, then this bill, which is the matured judgment of the Senator from Tennessee, shall remain upon the statute book until we shall have brought to the task of framing a new bill such wisdom that we may be able to enact a law which will, in fact, be better than the present one.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, whatever this bill may be, it can not justly be characterized as a compromise bill, that is, if it is intended to assert that the bill is a compromise between those who believe that Congress possesses the power to adopt a general quarantine law, and those who believe that Congress has no right to interfere as between the States, for the bill distinctly asserts the power of Congress to establish a quarantine, not only externally, but as between the States. The bill, out of courtesy to the States, does authorize the acceptance or adoption of the quarantine regulations of the States, but that is left entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

I have no doubt in the world about the right, nor, under the present circumstances, do I doubt the duty of Congress to pass a quarantine bill. I should maintain that if there was nothing on the subject in the Constitution the National Government inherently possesses the power to protect our people from contagion from abroad, and so far as this bill proposes to establish a quarantine system to protect the people from disease from abroad I admit that, whatever I may think of some of its provisions, it is within the constitutional power of Congress.

A second and more important question is, has Congress the power to establish a quarantine as between the States? Is not that proposition just as distinctly asserted in the bill as the other? I do not take the trouble to discuss the claim made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] that under this bill the Federal authorities may supersede, abrogate if you will, all the quarantine regulations adopted by our cities, our counties, or our States. The power to do so is distinctly asserted, and the power to supplement or substitute the rules adopted by the States, or to adopt rules where none exist, is as clear and distinct an assertion by Congress of the power in question as if the State law or the State regulations were declared by the bill to be null and void.

The bill asserts the power of the Federal Government to establish or modify or change, with permission to adopt, if the officers may think proper, such provisions of such quarantine regulations as may be in the judgment of the authorities satisfactory or sufficient, but the power is distinctly asserted. It is a mere matter of grace, and I think idle grace. I think the mere direction to adopt local regulations is idle, because if they are wise, the Federal authorities would adopt them, and if they are unwise or insufficient, the Federal authorities may reject them.

The bill then does contain, though not in the frank, plain, clear, and precise language which ought to be employed if the power is to be asserted, an assertion of this power. Is that the intention of this body in the passage of the bill? If so, then we have the inconveniences pointed out by the Senator from Louisiana, because the determination of the necessity for such regulations is devolved entirely upon the officers of the Treasury Department or the Marine Hospital Service. It will present the case of which the Senator gave an illustration.

If a disease should exist in any town, in any State, or in any locality, it would be within the power of the health officers of the United States to establish a quarantine line between any two States. The necessity for that action is to be determined by the health officers of the United States. Indeed, the bill proposes to give to the authorities of the United States complete control over the whole subject of the public health; and if Senators will look at the bill, they will see that it is a pervading influence; that it extends everywhere, and if the Federal authorities do not investigate epidemics which may prevail in single localities, it will be because they do not choose to do so. The power is given.

It is the subversion of all the health regulations in the United States to the authority of the health department of the Federal Government, because the power to determine whether quarantine regulations shall be established as between the States implies a power to make inquiries as to the condition of the public health in the States. Those inquiries may be prosecuted to any extent and by any means, be it ever so close, and the extent to which the powers may be carried no mortal man can at present anticipate.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to suggest to him that the act of 1890, to which his attention has not been called, gives to the General Government complete authority for the establishment of quarantine between the States.

Mr. PALMER. It may be; and if I felt bound to acquiesce in everything which has been done in the past, that would be a sufficient answer to me; but we are called upon to take this particular step, and there may be a precedent for it. Bad precedents are found everywhere. Let me remark that hard cases make shipwreck of the law, as has been declared by one of the fathers of the profession, and fear is a bad counselman.

We are legislating here under the influence of apprehension, which prevails everywhere; we are not consulting so much our reason as our fears. I therefore repudiate the authority of any past precedent as governing me, because, whatever others may have done, it can not be said that I did it, and it shall not be said that I did it. I will not be controlled by the acts of others. Legislation is a progressive science, and we are learning that the rights of the people require not the surrender of all the liberties which were taken with their rights when popular rights were more clearly appreciated than now, but we are sometimes called upon by new conditions to throw new protections around popular rights, and refuse to take an additional step, being convinced of the fallacy, the error of the step which has been pointed out as a precedent.

I most distinctly declare that, in my judgment, the United States Government as a sovereign may protect its coasts, its towns, from disease by all appropriate means. The Senator from Tennessee mentioned the fact that by the presumed carelessness of the quarantine officers at New Orleans yellow fever reached and devastated Memphis. Mr. President, that may be true; but it may be that no human vigilance could have protected Memphis. I am not prepared, because that incident happened or exists, to assume that new precautions are required; and I shall be happy if some Senator will assure me that all the precautions which may be adopted by the Federal or State governments will protect us from contagious diseases.

I have no well-founded expectation that they will, because pestilence walketh in darkness. Pestilences come and human skill and human care do not always protect. I am not willing, therefore, that any officer of the Federal Government, nor any officer not appointed by myself or by those whose interests are like mine, shall be permitted to make domiciliary visits to ascertain the conditions which exist in the community where I live.

If this bill, therefore, were strictly a national quarantine measure, intended to protect our coasts against disease, it would meet my cordial and earnest support; but inasmuch as it proposes to go beyond that, I can not be brought to support it unless the propositions of the Senator from Louisiana shall be adopted.

I believe it was said, to the reproach of one of the great lovers of English liberty, Lord Erskine, that he said on some occasion that a particular act or order was only a forty days' despotism. It may be that we ought to submit, in the perilous condition in which we are placed, to this despotism, to this subversion of sound principles. If the sacrifice must be made, let us limit the sacrifice to the necessity. If we act from the influence of fear, let us, by limiting the operation of the statute, find time at least to discover whether our fears were real or unreal, and in the mean time let the operations of this bill of doubtful policy, this bill of doubtful construction, be so limited that we can see what the result will be.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, it is my purpose to submit some observations upon the pending bill. Before doing so, however, I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection to it, a letter from a very distinguished physician in the State of Florida, who is thoroughly familiar with the operation of quarantine, and is a man of high promise and of scientific attainments. He has sent me a copy of a letter addressed to a Mr. Strauss, the chairman of a committee in New York, and I will ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the request of the Senator from Florida will be granted.

The paper referred to is as follows:

PENSACOLA, FLA., January 2, 1893.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I inclose a copy of an article written by me at the request of the New York Board of Trade, and would like for you to give it a few moments of your attention. It seems to my mind that there is an unwarranted attempt on the part of the advocates of a centralized government to interfere in matters of public health which now more closely affect the interests of our people than any other subject. If such interference was justified by impending danger or if there was a guarantee that the National Government could operate our quarantine system more efficiently than the State, then I would be in favor of yielding a point, but as the matter stands I must deny the correctness of both propositions.

These well-meaning people fail, in their impetuous zeal, to recognize two facts that can not be disputed. The first is, that under any management of quarantine which attempts to keep out disease and at the same time to conserve our commercial interests, epidemics will be an occasonal probability, until our sanitary conditions are brought to the highest state of perfection; then only can they be defied. The other fact to which I would direct your attention is, that it is only within the past decade that our people have studied the subject of maritime sanitation at all, and in that time we have not had an epidemic of any disease, save the one in this State, and that occurred before the creation of our State board of health.

The Marine Hospital Service, acting as an advance guard to the coast defense, is a most valuable auxiliary to local quarantine measures, but I can see no good reason why it should be vested with powers higher than those it already possesses, and I believe it would be unwise to enlarge its authority save in foreign countries (at the largest seaports), where, in connection with our consular agents, its officers could personally superintend the immigrant or passenger and his effects, that they may not act as carriers of infective material.

It occurs to me also that the usefulness of this branch of the Government might be increased by placing under its control the Revenue Marine Service, which could then, in conjunction with its present duties, act as a coast sanitary patrol. But I believe that our safety is best secured by a concert of action between the State and General Government—in other words, just as the system works to-day—so far as the right of authority is concerned; but let us go on and perfect both without destroying either or in any way impairing the usefulness of the one without the positive knowledge that the fullest measure of safety lies alone in the success of the other.

I remain, very sincerely yours,

WARREN E. ANDERSON.

PENSACOLA, FLA., December 12, 1892.

SIR: Your communication of the 5th instant to hand.

In answer to inquiry 1, "Quarantine administrations in foreign countries as furnishing precedents for the United States," I would say that I do not know of any foreign country the size of ours, furnishing such varieties of climate and diversities of business interests likely to be affected by quarantine, where a uniform system is in practical operation, and, of course, no comparison can be made unless similar conditions existed in both cases.

We are probably too close to tropical neighbors who do not thoroughly appreciate the benefits of sanitation to secure us in adopting the enlightened quarantine system of Great Britain, and we are, on the other hand, too jealous of our business interests to permit of our accepting the exclusive nonintercourse system of Spain. The liberal quarantine policy of England might be adapted to the needs of New York or Massachusetts, but put in operation in Florida and Louisiana it might be as disastrous to the public health of these States as would the rigorous policy of Spain be to the commerce of our Northern States. This proposition will remain true not only until we have ourselves arrived at a higher state of sanitary perfection, but until science removes the dangerous sources of infection to the south of us. No one foreign country could furnish us with a safe precedence for our guidance in matters of public health.

Second. "The present status of quarantine in the United States: A. National; B. State."

In my opinion the rivalry existing between these constituted authorities has been productive of great good to the country, and has succeeded in increasing the security on the one hand by the application of scientific methods, and on the other materially lightening the burden on commerce by shortening the days of detention to a few hours of inspection and cleansing. I am sure that the condition of both our national and State quarantine systems is improving each year, and I believe it to be a matter of only a short time when it will be little less than perfect.

Third. "The existing system of quarantine administration in the United States: A. Cost; B. Restrictions imposed on commerce and travel; C. Security afforded."

A. Under the national system of quarantine, as it now exists, the entire cost of maintaining the different stations is borne by the General Government, or, in other words, by taxation levied upon our people. In this connection it might be interesting to know that in his recent report the Secretary of the Treasury says:

"At smaller seaports, where local quarantine provision is sufficient, and where cholera-infected vessels might seek entrance to avoid the greater restrictions at larger ports, the authorities have been invited by circular to apply for such aid from the Marine Hospital Bureau as may be required for their defense."

I should like to ask if this does not appear as a general invitation to all foreign commercial powers to send their vessels to our shores, preferably to the smaller ports, when they are in need of sanitary repairs, as such work will be done gratis? What magnificent generosity, but how appalling to the mind of the already overburdened American taxpayer. On the other hand, the different States of the seaboard collect the revenues for the support of their quarantine stations by charges upon commerce (generally foreign), thus relieving us of all expense in the matter. The justification for this plan, if it needs one, seems to my mind to lie in the fact that those who are instrumental in the importation of epidemic diseases should bear the burden of the cost of their ignorance or carelessness, as the case may be, and no tax should be collected from those who are merely the victims of the criminal stupidity or negligence of others. That this expense upon the shipping interests is not unjust I believe to be true; nor do I think that in many instances it is in excess of the benefits derived by the owners of vessels which are in need of being placed in a sanitary condition.

B. The restrictions upon commerce and travel are being reduced to a minimum, and under improved methods of rapid disinfection and cleansing they will shortly be removed altogether. In support of the truth of this statement I will cite you the fact that under an enlightened system of quarantine this State has carried on safely and uninterruptedly for the past three years its commercial relations with the neighboring island of Cuba, whereas before that time, our quarantine laws while interdicting commerce, were yet unable to prevent the introduction of yellow fever. If so much has been accomplished in such a short space of time, what may we not hope for in the very near future?

C. The security afforded has been greatly increased of late years, and is, no doubt, due to the same causes which have operated to remove the restrictions on commerce and travel; that is, instead of detention, scientific sanitary measures have been substituted.

Fourth. "A national quarantine: A. Would it lessen the existing imposts upon commerce? B. Would restrictions on commerce and travel be less injurious? C. Would it afford increased security to the country?"

A. Possibly it would, but by placing a tax upon those who are in nowise responsible for the conditions necessitating the resort to quarantine measures, and this I would consider unjust.

B. No. I can see no reason why the principles of quarantine executed by the intelligent hands, of the State or community whose health and prosperity are both at stake, should not be more successful than when operated by an official at a distance who may be totally ignorant of the conditions and requirements of such State or community.

C. No. There is nothing in all the history of quarantine to justify the opinion that health matters are safer in the hands of the General Government than in those of communities directly or likely to be affected. In substantiation of this statement it is only necessary to recall the fact that very recently the health authorities of a commonwealth of this Union succeeded in averting an epidemic of the terrible disease which had baffled the best efforts of the compact and centralized powers of Russia and Germany. When the citizen knows that much depends upon his individual efforts towards sanitation, and that he has a voice in the practical operation of all systems devised to prevent diseases, he becomes a most zealous and intelligent factor; but let him understand that the General Government has charge of all matters of public health and he at once loses his interest and looks only to that Government for protection and safety.

Sanitation and not quarantine should be the aim of the modern scientist, and in order to attain this end, it is absolutely necessary to have the hearty coöperation of every individual in every community in the country. This can not be done by the supervention of the General Government, and I believe the attempt at such interference would result only in a disastrous failure.

Very truly, yours,

WARREN E. ANDERSON.

Hon. OSCAR S. STRAUSS, Chairman,
No. 55 Liberty Street, New York City.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I am in favor of the provisions of this bill in the main, although I should have preferred a different bill. The fact of an addition to a condition prescribed by a State board of health for the entrance of a vessel into a port of a State or for the disinfection of its passengers or its freight, can not in anywise affect or destroy the obligatory force of other conditions. In that respect, the distinction taken by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] is certainly well founded, and the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] is, I think, in error upon that point.

To say that the United States through any of its officers may prescribe an additional condition, obligatory and paramount, for the entry of a vessel or for the examination and disinfection of its passengers and its freight, can not in any wise abrogate the force of other conditions, is, I think, clearly incorrect. It may be in that respect that this bill may fail to accomplish the beneficial results it might otherwise do by imposing an additional restriction upon commerce to those created by State authority.

Mr. President, the course of modern scientific inquiry and conclusion has been to do away with an extended quarantine and to exhibit the inefficiency and the absence of any beneficial effect from a long detention of either vessel or passengers. Maritime sanitation has taken the place of the old barbarous system of a quarantine and detention of either vessel, passengers, or freight. I have here a pamphlet from a very distinguished physician and scientist of the State of Louisiana, Dr. Joseph Holt, investigating that subject, and he makes some remarkable and forcible statements. He says:

No casual observer can realize the amount of inconvenience, anxiety, deprivation, and actual suffering occasioned by the futile but oppressive measures of the "old system." The history of quarantine in Louisiana, extending through a period of sixty-four years, 1821–1884, furnishes a singularly clear demonstration of this entire question. It is a chronological record of pestilential appearances and epidemics, along with inflictions upon commerce, destructive of extensive branches of trade and associated industries; it is a long chapter in the history of yellow fever and cholera, furnishing the only explanation why New Orleans, strategically located, with its soft and delightful climate, varied and abundant food supply, so exceptionally desirable as a home, is not to-day second only to New York in population and as a commercial and manufacturing center. It is an epitome of quarantine operations, from its inception, 1184, to the beginning of its end, 1884, the date of the inception of the "new system."

In the reports of the Marine Hospital Service, which I venture to say are full of valuable instruction, if the members of Congress would study them, and which give a clear guide as to the measures which should be adopted by the National Legislature, will be found a complete investigation of the effect of quarantine and the improved methods of maritime sanitation. Their efficacy in preventing the spread of disease is a demonstrated fact, and the necessity that they should be under some central authority is, in like manner, clearly exhibited in the reports, and I say the admirable reports, of the Marine Hospital Service under its former and its present distinguished head.

The abstracts which are published by that Bureau and distributed throughout the whole country have given as much information and practical knowledge to the profession and the health authorities throughout the United States as to the best and proper methods of preventing the recurrence of these great scourges of cholera and yellow fever as any and all other means.

Mr. President, the State which I represent in connection with yourself [Mr. PASCO in the chair] has a seaboard of about 1,400 miles in proximity with the West India Islands. At some of our ports the commerce of the Gulf of Mexico touches or passes almost daily in sight of them. That State, with her comparatively small population, is required to maintain a most extensive and expensive system of inspection, sanitation, and disinfection. It is done not in the interest of the people of Florida alone so much as in the interest of the people of the United States.

Shall we not be allowed the assistance of the Federal Government, of the whole foreign and interstate commerce, to aid us in protecting that commerce against infectious and contagious diseases? More than once, several times, contagion has made its appearance in some of the principal cities of the State, and has temporarily destroyed their business and their population. They have adopted a system of maritime sanitation which has been efficient, but it needs the aid of a larger expenditure. In this connection it is proper that I should mention the name of Dr. I. Y. Porter, of Key West, Fla., formerly a surgeon in the United States Army, to whom the people of the United States are largely indebted for their security during the last few years from the spread of contagious and infectious disease from Cuba and the West Indies.

So I am in favor not only for the State of Florida, but elsewhere, of legislation which will enable and require the National Government to extend its assistance to all the States in maintaining a proper system of quarantine and maintain sanitation.

What as to the authority? The same authority exists to regulate foreign commerce as to regulate interstate commerce.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Florida does not care to conclude his remarks this evening, I think we may as well adjourn.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to an adjournment at this time.

Mr. SAWYER. I will ask the Senator to change that to a motion for an executive session.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to an executive session.

Mr. HARRIS. Allow me, before either motion is put, to say that I do not think it probable that we have a quorum here at this time, so that we shall probably not be able to dispose of the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] this evening. Feeling that it is very important that Congress shall dispose of this matter in whatever way it proposes to dispose of it, I think it very important that this bill, or something containing powers such as this bill confers, should be passed very promptly.

I shall ask the Senate to-morrow morning immediately after the routine morning business to continue the consideration of the bill at least up to 2 o'clock. I shall go no further than 2 o'clock at this time. If the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] objects, then I shall not interfere with him; but I am very anxious to come to a final vote upon the pending measure at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. TELLER. The McGarrahan case was made the special order for to-morrow after the routine morning business, but to accommodate the pending bill, if I can have an order for the consideration of the McGarrahan case for Wednesday morning, instead of to-morrow morning, after the routine morning business, I shall not object. Preparatory to making the arrangement proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, because this seems to be a bill of national importance, I ask that the McGarrahan bill may be taken up on Wednesday morning immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]?

Mr. HARRIS. I am greatly obliged to the Senator from Colorado, and hope there will be no objection to his request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado, and it is granted.

Mr. HARRIS. I now ask unanimous consent that immediately after the routine business to-morrow morning the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN. I give notice to Senators that I shall call up the antioption bill at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. My request extends only to the morning hour at present. I do not know what I shall ask to-morrow.

Mr. WASHBURN. I hope the Senator will not ask anything further to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 10, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 9, 1893.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Pay Department.

Lieut. Col. Charles M. Terrell, deputy paymaster-general, to be be assistant paymaster-general with the rank of colonel, January 6, 1893, vice Gibson, retired from active service.

Maj. James P. Canby, paymaster, to be deputy paymaster-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, January 6, 1893, vice Terrell, promoted.

Subsistence Department.

First. Lieut. Guy Howard, Twelfth Infantry, to be commissary of subsistence with the rank of captain, January 7, 1893, vice Woodruff, promoted.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate January 9, 1893.

FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Henry Clay Evans, of Tennessee, to be First Assistant Postmaster-General.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 9, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

EXPENSES OF COMMITTEE ON AWARDS, WORLD'S COLUMBIAN COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with a favorable recommendation, an estimate of appropriation submitted by the president of the World's Columbian Exposition to defray the expenses of the committee on awards of the World's Columbian Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY ENCAMPMENT AT CHICAGO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, with inclosures, relating to the passage of an act by Congress to provide for an encampment of 100,000 United States and State troops to be held at Chicago on the occasion of the World's Columbian Exposition; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House copies of the findings of the Court of Claims in the following-named cases; which were severally referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed:

A. M. Cartmell and George Leonhart vs. The United States; and Betty A. Aldrich vs. The United States.

RELIEF OF COLUMBIAN UNIVERSITY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 3623) to amend the act of March 3, 1873, "for the relief of the Columbian University in the District of Columbia."

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be taken up and considered at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WHITING, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota, for two weeks, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. OHLIGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 317) granting an increase of pension to John M. Roberts;

A bill (S. 2592) granting an increase of pension to William C. Tarkington;

A bill (S. 2990) for the relief of George W. McKinney; and

A bill (S. 3314) for the relief of E. Darwin Gage, late lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and forty-eighth New York Infantry.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE HIAWASSEE, TENNESSEE, AND CLINCH.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday last I asked the House to consider the bill (H. R. 10015) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiawassee, Tennessee, and Clinch Rivers. It is drawn up in the usual form of bridge bills and has the approval of the Secretary of War. My friend from Kansas [Mr. OTIS], under a misapprehension of one of its provisions, objected to the consideration of the bill. He now withdraws his objection, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. This bill was read in full on Saturday, but objection was made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. OTIS] to its consideration. The Chair is informed that the gentleman withdraws the objection. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Has the bill been reported from a committee?

The SPEAKER. It has.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVERETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ESTATE OF ISAAC W. TALKINGTON.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 118) for the relief of the estate of Isaac W. Talkington, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the estate of Isaac W. Talkington, deceased, late of Pope County, in the State of Arkansas, $200, erroneously paid to the United States for the north half of southeast quarter of section 21, township 7 north, range 18 west, of the fifth principal meridian, out of any moneys in Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read the report of the Senate committee, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred Senate bill 118, have had the same under consideration, and report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass.

For the facts concerning the bill the committee refers the House to House Report 481 on bill H. R. 801, which is identical with this bill.

Mr. BURROWS. The report just read does not disclose the merits of the bill. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will make some statement of the matter.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. The report just read is the report on the Senate bill, and it refers to the Senate report previously made on the House bill. I send the latter report to the desk.

Mr. BURROWS. Let it be read, reserving the right to object.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 801) for the relief of the estate of Isaac W. Talkington, deceased, for money erroneously paid to the United States for certain lands, having had the same under consideration, report the same back with the recommendation that it pass.

For the facts reference is made to the report made in the Fifty-first Congress, as follows:

"The facts on which this claim is based are found in two decisions by the Secretary of the Interior, involving the land for which it is alleged double payment was made, and out of which the right to repayment grows.

"These decisions are Talkington's heirs vs. Hempling, reported in vol. 2, Land Decisions, p. 46, and the case of the heirs of Isaac W. Talkington, vol. 5, Land Decisions, p. 114.

"It appears that Talkington made homestead entry No. 3886, February 15, 1870, of the north half of the southeast quarter of section 21, and that the entry was canceled December 1, 1876, for alleged relinquishment. It having been shown subsequently, however, that Talkington had commuted his entry and paid $2.50 cash per acre for the land, receiving therefor duplicate receipt No. 7419, dated August 20, 1872, and had died April 20, 1874, and that the relinquishment was fraudulent, the same bearing date June 5, 1876, more than two years after Talkington's death, his entry was reinstated April 5, 1878, and the heirs made new commutation proof, and paid $200, the purchase money, for said land.

"Talkington made commutation proof and paid $200 for this land, and received a duplicate receipt under date of August 20, 1872, issued at Dardanelle, Ark., No. 7419, and signed by John C. Austin, receiver, the same being payment in full for the tract in question at the double minimum valuation; and that across the face of said receipt is noted, "Commuted from homestead entry No. 3886, dated February 14, 1870." And it also appears from the affidavit of one David Beasley, a neighbor of Talkington's, who was cognizant of all the circumstances of the case, barring the alleged relinquishment, that he accompanied Talkington to the local office, and was one of his witnesses in making his commutation proof; that the other witness is deceased; that he saw the usual papers in such case made by the proper officer, and saw $200 in cash paid to the receiver; and that the affiant furnished Talkington with a portion of the said sum.

"It was for this sum that the heirs applied for repayment.

"This application was finally rejected by the Secretary of the Interior by his decision of August 31, 1886, found in Land Decisions, vol. 5, page 114, above referred to, on the ground that the power of repayment by the Secretary of the Interior is limited and defined by a statute to repayment of purchase money of land erroneously sold by the United States when from any cause the sale can not be confirmed. (Sec. 2362, R. S.)

"The proof of double payment in this case is direct and positive.

"The fact that the receiver made no return of this money, as he is required by law to do, does not contradict the fact of payment.

"The receiver is a bonded officer, and the United States has a remedy against his bondsmen for the misappropriation of the money received for the sale of this land.

"For the foregoing reasons your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage."

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Would it not be proper now that the House bill corresponding in its provisions to the Senate bill just passed be stricken from the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, House bill No. 801 will lie upon the table.

There was no objection.

JAMES STEWART.

Mr. STORER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6497) for the relief of James Stewart.

The bill was read.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Is there a report accompanying this bill?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

The report was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, as Friday is appropriated under the rules for the consideration of the Private Calendar, I shall have to call the regular order against these bills.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is equivalent to an objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now desire to call up the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is first the call of committees for reports.

VIOLATION OF COMMERCE LAWS.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1933) concerning testimony in criminal cases or proceedings based upon or growing out of allegal violations of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889, and February 10, 1891; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WAGON BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. GEARY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10063) to amend an act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa, etc.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL QUARANTINE, ETC.

Mr. RAYNER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 9757) to provide for the better protection of commerce and for the general welfare by the establishment of a national quarantine, etc.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The call of committees was completed, no further reports being presented.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT EXHIBIT BOARD.

On motion of Mr. DURBOROW, by unanimous consent, the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition was discharged from the further consideration of joint resolution (H. Res. 169) extending the powers of the United States Government Exhibit Board, and it was referred to the Committee on the Library.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its Secretaries, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment the bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now call up the District appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10038) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: Has not the regular order been called for?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. And is not the regular order the second call of committees?

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Missouri calls up this general appropriation bill. The rule, if the Chair recollects aright, omits the provision for the second call of committees on District day.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I call the attention of the Chair to paragraph 4 of Rule XXVI:

After the morning hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees (or the call completed) the Speaker shall again call the committees in regular order, etc.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey to the fact that there is no second morning hour to-day, this being District day.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. The gentleman begs the question; that is the very point I am raising.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey to paragraph 2 of Rule XXVI.

The second and fourth Mondays in each month shall, when claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee.

The Chair thinks it has been held that on District of Columbia day there is no second morning hour, as it is commonly termed.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. My recollection is, although it may be faulty, that the question was raised in December last, and was decided otherwise. However, during the consideration of this bill I will look the matter up.

The SPEAKER. This bill, as the gentleman is aware, is a general appropriation bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. And could be interjected at any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri now calls up the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and the Clerk will again report the pending motion of the gentleman from Missouri to recommit the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the pending bill be recommitted, and the committee instructed to report back in lieu thereof two bills, one appropriating money out of the revenue of the District of Columbia solely, the other appropriating money out of the revenue of the General Government, the money appropriated out of the revenue of the General Government not to exceed a sum equal to one-fourth of the amount carried by the pending bill.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Before the vote is taken, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an explanation in regard to the vote cast on this subject on Saturday. I am recorded as having been absent from the House. I was in the committee room engaged in work there under an arrangement with a member on the floor to send for me when the vote was to be taken. It was omitted, not intentionally, of course. If I had been present I should have voted in the affirmative, on the motion to recommit with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to recommit the bill with instructions, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 61, nays 153, not voting 115; as follows:

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. WHITING with Mr. SWEET.

Mr. CAMPBELL with Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. WEVER.

Mr. BLANCHARD with Mr. DOAN.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. FITHIAN with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. WASHINGTON with Mr. SANFORD.

Mr. GOODNIGHT with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. ELLIS with Mr. MORSE.

Mr. BRYAN with Mr. HOPKINS of Pennsylvania.

For this day:

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. RIFE.

Mr. CARUTH with Mr. VINCENT A. TAYLOR.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi with Mr. QUACKENBUSH.

Mr. GANTZ with Mr. GRISWOLD.

Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. TURPIN with Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. COVERT with Mr. HUFF.

Mr. CROSBY. I was paired on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of last week on all questions with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT.]

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the demand of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] for the previous question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a motion to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER. That motion would not be in order. But one motion can be submitted to recommit with instructions. That motion has been offered, pending the demand of the gentleman from Missouri for the previous question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Do I understand that but one motion can be made on that question?

The SPEAKER. But one.

The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the demand for the previous question ordinarily would cut off all motions, but there is an express provision in the rule that pending a demand for the previous question a motion to recommit may be made with or without instructions, which motion would be amendable unless the previous question were ordered upon it. After that is disposed of no other motion can be submitted, as the gentleman will see that unless there was some limit the motions to recommit could go on indefinitely.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Then I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If the motion for the previous question is voted down, would a motion to recommit be in order?

The SPEAKER. The bill would then be before the House for such action as was proper to be taken with regard to it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If the motion is voted down I desire to offer a motion to recommit with instructions——

Mr. DOCKERY. I object to debate, having demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was ordered to be laid upon the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he was in error a few moments ago with respect to the second morning hour on District day. The present occupant of the chair having previously decided the question, the Clerk will read the decision.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. This day, being the second Monday of the month, is set apart under the rules for the consideration of business presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia if that committee desires to claim the day.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We will claim a part of it.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the morning hour been dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. It has not. The attention of the Chair was not directed to that subject when he announced the Order of Business. The second morning hour will now be had in accordance with the second clause of Rule XXIV, which provides that on all days other than the first and third Mondays of the month the Speaker shall call the committees for the second morning hour. Several committees were passed over without prejudice. The Chair will not call those unless some gentleman representing one of them asks to have his committee called. The regular call rests with the Committee on Naval Affairs. The second morning hour begins at twenty-one minutes past 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at 1 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Do I understand the Speaker to rule that we have a second morning hour to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so holds.

The Committee on Indian Affairs was called.

The SPEAKER. That committee has a bill pending.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that the Committee on Indian Affairs had a bill pending when the morning hour expired, it being a bill to refer the claims of the New York Indians to the Court of Claims. I ask unanimous consent to pass our committee without prejudice: the gentleman who is in charge of the bill has just come in, and having been confined at home by sickness in his family, has not been here and has had no time to get ready. I ask that our committee be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] asks unanimous consent to pass the Committee on Indian Affairs without prejudice, that committee having a bill pending before the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Committee on the Territories was called.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have that committee passed without prejudice, the chairman of the committee not being present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] asks that in view of the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Territories, that committee may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE MILITIA.

The Committee on the Militia was called.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7318) to promote the efficiency of the militia.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. LANE. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7318) to promote the efficiency of the militia, with Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the militia shall consist of every able-bodied male citizen who is of the age of 18 and under the age of 45 years, and shall be divided into two classes, the organized to be known as the National Guard, the unorganized to be known as the Reserve Militia.

That the National Guard shall consist of such regularly enlisted troops as are or may be organized in the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in pursuance of their respective laws, not in conflict with the provisions of this act, and the organization shall conform as closely as possible to that prescribed for the Army.

SEC. 2. That the Reserve Militia shall not be subject or liable to any military duty to the United States except when called into service by act of Congress passed for that purpose; that the National Guard shall not be subject or liable to any military duty to the United States, except when called into service by act of Congress passed for that purpose or by the President of the United States, as is hereinafter provided; and every officer and enlisted man of the National Guard called into service of the United States who shall refuse to obey such call shall be subject to trial by court-martial.

With an amendment, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Vice President of the United States; the officers, judicial and executive, of the Government of the United States; the members of both Houses of Congress, and their respective officers; all custom-house officers, with their clerks; all postmasters and clerks employed in the transportation of mail; all ferrymen employed at any ferry on post-roads; all inspectors of exports; all artificers and workmen employed in the armories and arsenals of the United States; all pilots; all mariners actually employed in the sea service of any citizen or merchant within the United States; and all persons who now are, or may hereafter be, exempted by the laws of the respective States, shall be exempted from militia duty, notwithstanding their being above the age of 18 and under the age of 45 years.

SEC. 4. That there shall be an adjutant-general in each State and Territory, who shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the laws of each State and Territory, respectively, and who shall make returns and reports to the Secretary of War at such times and in such form as he shall from time to time prescribe.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War shall, in his annual report each year, transmit to Congress an abstract of the returns and reports of the adjutants-general of the States and Territories, with such observations thereon as he may deem necessary for the information of Congress.

SEC. 6. That the national guard shall be instructed in the same system of drill and tactics that may from time to time be prescribed for the Army.

With an amendment, as follows:

SEC. 7. That whenever the United States are invaded, or are in imminent danger of invasion, from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, or of rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States most convenient to the place of danger, or scene of action, as he may deem necessary to repel such invasion, or to suppress such rebellion, and to issue his orders for that purpose to such officers of the militia as he may think proper.

SEC. 8. That when the militia of more than one State is called into the actual service of the United States by the President he may, in his discretion, apportion them among such States according to representative population.

SEC. 9. That the militia, when called into the actual service of the United States for the suppression of the rebellion against and resistance to the laws of the United States, shall be subject to the same rules and articles of war as the regular troops of the United States.

SEC. 10. That whenever the President calls forth the militia of the States, to be employed in the service of the United States, he may specify in his call the period for which such service will be required, not exceeding nine months, and the militia so called shall be mustered in and continue to serve during the terms so specified, unless sooner discharged by command of the President.

SEC. 11. That the militia, when called into the actual service of the United States, shall, during their time of service, be entitled to the same pay and allowances as may be provided by law for the Army of the United States.

SEC. 12. That whenever the militia is called into the actual service of the United States, their pay shall be deemed to commence from the day of their appearing at the place of battalion, regimental, or brigade rendezvous.

SEC. 13. That the expenses incurred by marching the militia of any State or Territory to their places of rendezvous, in pursuance of a requisition of the President, or of a call made by the authority of any State or Territory and approved by him, shall be adjusted and paid in like manner as the expenses incurred after their arrival at such places of rendezvous, on the requisition of the President; but this provision does not authorize any species of expenditure, previous to arriving at the place of rendezvous, which is not provided by existing laws to be paid for after their arrival at such place of rendezvous.

SEC. 14. That courts-martial for the trial of the militia shall be composed of militia officers only.

SEC. 15. That the sum of $600,000 is hereby annually appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of providing for issue to the States and Territories, for the use of the National Guard, such military stores and supplies, including such blank forms, tactics, regulations, and other books as are furnished by the various bureaus of the War Department for the use of the Army. The purchase and manufacture of such stores and supplies shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of War, in the same manner that they are manufactured or otherwise provided for the use of the Army. Such stores and supplies shall remain the property of the United States, and shall be receipted for, accounted for, and when unserviceable disposed of in such manner as the Secretary of War may direct.

SEC. 16. That the amount of the appropriation for furnishing stores and supplies for the national guard shall be apportioned by the Secretary of War pro rata among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, according to an allotment based upon the number of regularly commissioned and enlisted National Guard which shall have appeared for muster in the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia between the 1st day of March and the 30th day of April of the fiscal year immediately preceding that for which the allotment is made; and the Secretary of War may detail, in his discretion, officers of the Army to properly verify the presence of the men; and the allotment of the appropriation shall be made only upon the certificate of the army officers so detailed, or in such other manner as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

SEC. 17. That any State or Territory may purchase for the use of its National Guard stores and supplies from any department of the Army in addition to those issued under the provisions of this act, and such stores and supplies may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be sold to States and Territories at the price which they are listed for issue to the Army, and funds received from such sales shall not be covered into the Treasury, but shall be used to replace articles thus sold, and shall for this purpose be available until used.

SEC. 18. That the Secretary of War is authorized to receive from the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia any ordnance and ordnance stores which on June 30, 1887, were unsuitable or unserviceable, and to credit them with the same, so as to balance their respective accounts on that date under the law for arming and equipping the militia.

SEC. 19. That each State and Territory furnished with stores and supplies under the provisions of this act shall require every organization in its National Guard, not excused by the governor of such State or Territory, to go into camp of instruction or to be quartered at a United States fort for instruction in heavy artillery at least five consecutive days in each year in their respective States or Territories, and to assemble for drill and instruction not less than twelve times in each year, and shall also require an annual inspection of each organization in its National Guard to be made by an officer or officers thereof.

SEC. 20. That, upon the application of the governor of any State or Territory furnished with stores and supplies under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, detail one or more officers of the Army to attend any encampment of the National Guard of such State or Territory, and such officer or officers shall inspect such camp and make a report to the Secretary of War, who shall furnish a copy thereof to the governor of the State or Territory, on the condition and efficiency of the troops assembled.

SEC. 21. That, upon the application of the governor of any State or Territory furnished with stores and supplies under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, detail one or more officers of the Army to report to the governor of such State or Territory for duty in connection with the National Guard. The governor may, in his discretion, commission such officer in the National Guard during said detail with such rank as he may deem proper. An officer so assigned shall receive no pay or emoluments from the United States, except those of his rank in the Army. All such assignments shall be revoked at the request of the governor of the State or Territory or at the pleasure of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 22. That all existing laws relating to the militia are hereby repealed.

SEC. 23. That this act is to take effect immediately upon its passage.

During the reading of the bill

Mr. LANE said: I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill and that it be read by sections for amendment, and that general debate on the bill be considered as closed.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, general debate will be considered as closed and the bill will be taken up for consideration by paragraphs.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read section 1.

Mr. LANE. I offer an amendment to that section, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting between the word "citizen" and "who," on line 4 of the first section of the pending bill, the words, "of the respective States resident therein."

So that the section as thus amended will read—

"That the militia shall consist of every able-bodied male citizen of the respective States resident therein, who is of the age of 18 and under the age of 45, and is and shall be divided into two classes, the organized to be known as the National Guard; the unorganized to be known as the Reserve Militia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offerred by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE].

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry: Do I understand that the bill is now open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is now open to amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. We are certainly entitled to have some explanation of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate was closed by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Then that was done while I was out of the Hall for a moment. I should like to have some explanation of the object of this bill. It may be a very proper bill. I have not had time to read it.

Mr. LANE. What was the request of the gentleman?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I would like to have the bill explained by the gentleman who is in charge of it.

Mr. LANE. The committee accepted the amendments to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] asks the gentleman in charge of the bill to make some explanation.

Mr. LANE. Of the bill itself?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Since I made that request I have been informed by the father of the bill, or its sponsor, or perhaps its grandfather, or may be its father-in-law, of the character of the bill, and have no desire to take up the time of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is not understood; there is so much noise around here.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of endeavoring to gather from the gentleman who has the bill in charge an explanation as to some of its features and as to the occasion for their consideration by this House, and why it should pass a bill nationalizing the State militia. What is the occasion for making a national guard at this particular time? We have no war. We are threatened with none. Why this unnecessary and dangerous step toward obliterating State lines and making the militia of the States a national guard in time of peace when we have no war and are threatened with none and no pretense that they are to be called into the service of the United States? It may be that there are good reasons for passing this bill. It may be that there are reasons why it ought to be adopted, and it may be that there are reasons why we should organize the citizens of this country as an organized military force. They have not occurred to my mind, and I trust some gentleman who has examined the question and who is here to espouse the bill will enlighten us upon the subject.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, there is no purpose to change the law. They simply use the words "National Guard," as a part of the militia. It is simply a bill to reorganize the militia. It does not change the existing law materially, except so far as the existing law has become obsolete and inefficient. It is simply for the purpose of organizing the militia of the country, and not to put it on a war basis, but to leave it under the control of the States. It is to make it on a uniform plan if each State sees proper to organize a militia.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman please state to the House in what respect it has been found the laws are inefficient?

Mr. LANE. Well, the old law requires that they shall be armed with flint-lock guns.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. And that they shall carry a certain number of balls.

Mr. LANE. Yes; precisely. Now, that is the law on the statute book. I have not the statute with me, but the law itself is absolutely obsolete.

Mr. WATSON. That, of course, would naturally change with the change of weapons; but where is the necessity for consolidating the militia forces of the United States in the several States——

Mr. LANE. They are not consolidated.

Mr. WATSON (continuing). Into a national guard.

Mr. LANE. They are not consolidated.

Mr. WATSON. In what respect is the force itself or its organization inefficient?

Mr. LANE. It is left to the action of each State, as it sees proper, to organize a militia, and when organized it is called the National Guard; but it is under the control of State government. The militia proper, as organized, are made the National Guard, and the reserve is under the State organization.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. As I understand, it is simply to make a clear distinction between the organized and the unorganized militia. Those that are organized are called the National Guard, and those that are not organized are called the Reserve Militia; that is the distinction.

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman to the language in line 4 of the second page:

That the National Guard shall not be subject or liable to any duty to the United States, except when called into service by act of Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. That is all right.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Has the governor of a State no right to call these guards into its service?

Mr. LANE. Oh, certainly; it provides for that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Where does this bill provide that?

Mr. LANE. It provides that further on.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would like to have that shown.

Mr. LANE. This gives the governor of a State the right to call out the militia also.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You say that they shall not be called upon to do duty for the United States except when called into service by act of Congress?

Mr. LANE. That is for national service, and that is all that we have to deal with.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Every State has a law which enables it to call out its own militia, and not subject to a national call.

Mr. LANE. Oh, my dear sir, yes. There is a State law and a national law. The State law controls them in the State; this only controls them when called out into the service of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Is not this an addition to the State law?

Mr. LANE. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The State law gives control of the militia to the governor on all occasions in the different States, and this is simply an addition to that, giving additional authority to the United States.

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why not accept an amendment that they shall be called out for State purposes?

Mr. LANE. This does not change the State law.

Mr. HOAR. That is the law already.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not want the governors of the States prohibited from having control over the militia.

Mr. LANE. Oh, no.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You take the National Guard under the provisions of this bill and you will control them absolutely.

Mr. HOAR. We can now do that under the Constitution.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question. I see that the bill carries an appropriation of $600,000. What amount has heretofore been appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. LANE. I will say to the gentleman that the bill carries an appropriation for $600,000. I am instructed to offer an amendment to make it $400,000, which is the present law and has been since 1887.

Mr. McMILLIN. My impression is that this was an increase on the appropriation heretofore made.

Mr. LANE. It is, but the committee has instructed me to offer an amendment making the amount the same as the old appropriation, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following amendment recommended by the committee:

SEC. 3. That the Vice-President of the United States; the officers, judicial and executive, of the Government of the United States; the members of both Houses of Congress, and their respective officers; all custom-house officers, with their clerks; all postmasters and persons employed in the transportation of the mail; all ferrymen employed at any ferry on post roads; all inspectors of exports; all artificers and workmen employed in the armories and arsenals of the United States; all pilots; all mariners actually employed in the sea service of any citizen or merchant within the United States; and all persons who now are, or may hereafter be, exempted by the laws of the respective States, shall be exempted from militia duty, notwithstanding their being above the age of 18 and under the age of 45 years.

Mr. DICKERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 6, by inserting, after the word "all" and before the word "ferrymen," the words "locomotive engineers on post-roads and."

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that his amendment does not go far enough. To exempt engineers is all right, but what is an engineer to do without a fireman?

Mr. DICKERSON. Well, my friend can attend to the firemen. I am attending to the engineers. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will this committee amendment give any exemption that is not already given by the States?

Mr. LANE. This is the present law.

The amendment of Mr. DICKERSON was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was adopted.

The Clerk proceeded to read the next section.

Mr. DICKERSON. Mr. Chairman, have we passed from section 3?

The CHAIRMAN. That section has been adopted.

Mr. DICKERSON. I desired to offer another amendment to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the committee can return to section 3.

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKERSON moved to amend section 3 by inserting after the word "States," in line 11, the words "and all persons holding any civil office under the authority of States, counties, or municipalities."

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. Chairman, that amendment would have a very bad effect upon the bill, and I trust that it will not be adopted. Many members of the National Guard hold civil offices. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. DICKERSON. I can not do that.

Mr. CUTTING. As I have said, there is a large number of national guardsmen who hold civil offices, and it seems to me that if this amendment is carried, it will have the effect to disorganize the militia rather than to organize it, as we are seeking to do.

Mr. MCMILLIN. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, if the amendment is not adopted, it seems to me the bill will have the effect to force into the militia service, by United States statute, the very officers that are engaged in carrying on the governments of the States, a kind of legislation not to be entered upon here unless with the greatest caution. One trouble that comes from this system of legislation is that when you undertake to do everything in the way of organizing the militia of the States through the United States laws, it is impossible for you to proceed far without running counter so some of the laws of the States.

We have got along very well for one hundred years and more under the old system. The most fearful conflict, our civil war, that has ever overtaken this country came on under the old militia system and that system was found sufficient for the emergency. There is no military power on earth that could have coped either with the Federal Government or with the Confederate Government in one hundred and fifty days after they got their military machinery in effective operation. In our infancy we met successfully the war with Great Britain under the old system. Briton's veterans went down before our State militia seventy-seven years ago yesterday at New Orleans. We met the war with Mexico under the old system. Only two or three years ago was this kind of legislation entered upon. In this Hall a proposition was made to organize a national militia. Mr. Cleveland was then President of the United States, and the proposition was found by him sufficiently suspicious to induce him to let the bill become a law without his signature.

Now, we go further and propose to found a national militia. We have "national museums," "national parks;" we have "national banks," and now we are to have a "national militia"—"national" everything. It has got to be a common idea that the people will go to wreck and ruin unless you "nationalize" everything in which they are concerned. What has become of the States that they are no longer considered able or worthy to do anything? There may be meritorious features in this bill, but it seems to me that, whatever good there is in it, the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DICKERSON] ought to prevail. Then, sir, I am unable to see the great necessity for this legislation. I can not bring myself to conclude that all will go wrong or the country be in danger if we do not "nationalize" our militia. Do you expect by this mere statute to serve your country better than your fathers did when the people and the States rushed to the rescue of an imperiled country? You will never make those acquainted with your ancestral history believe it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that, by the provisions of this bill, all persons who are now, or may hereafter be exempted by the respective States, are to be exempt under this law, so that it is entirely within the power of the States to exempt their own civil officers if they desire to do so.

Mr. CUTTING. I desire to say further, Mr. Chairman, that this provision is simply the present law, which has been on the statute book since the year 1792.

Mr. DICKERSON. Mr. Chairman, I confess at the outset that I am very little inclined to strengthen the Army of the United States. If I had my way that Army should always be kept at the very lowest number, and have as little authority as it is possible to give it. I believe in always holding the civil authorities superior to the military, and in relieving the civil functionaries, even to the smallest in any State, county, or municipal government, from the influence of the Army in any way, directly or indirectly. I want every such officer to realize, in the execution of the law, whether his State has acted on the question or not, that however strong may the Army of the United States be, he is by the laws of the United States, under which that Army exists, independent and free from the influence of that Army. He ought not to be in fear of a court-martial; he ought not to be terrorized, under any state of the case, by any sort of process issuing under the rules or regulations of the Army.

It does not make any difference whether the officer be a constable whose duty it is to serve the people in some back woods district of the far West, or whether he be the chief executive of the metropolis of the country—the mayor of the city of New York; every such officer ought to be exempt under this law. These servants of the people in any state of the case, and in whatever capacity they may serve, ought to be exempted.

I do not approve of the purpose of this measure at any rate. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] has expressed my opinion better than I can express it myself upon this question of nationalizing the militia of the country.

Mr. CUMMINGS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DICKERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Do you not think it would be best to allow the States themselves to make the exemptions and not to have them made through the authority of the Federal Government?

Mr. HOAR. That is it.

Mr. DICKERSON. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] that it is right the States should make these exemptions. But in addition to that, I want what I am asking in this amendment. I am aware we have now in the bill (and if it were not in the bill it would be an outrage that we would not tolerate) a provision that the State may make exemptions; but in addition to that I want to have it provided in the bill that the various officers of the State shall be exempt, whether the State ever acts on the question or not. The people of any little community—any city, any county—whether the State acts on the question or not, ought not to have their officers wrested from them by the military authority of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want to call the attention of my friend to the manner in which the provision proposed would affect certain men in New York. The old colonel of the Seventh Regiment was Emmons Clark, who for twenty years was clerk of the health board of the city of New York. Would the gentleman exempt him by this bill from serving as a member of the National Guard?

Mr. DICKERSON. Yes, sir. If he wishes to hold a military position let him resign his civil office.

Mr. AMERMAN. This provision does not prevent him from serving in both capacities if he wants to do so.

Mr. DICKERSON. I do not think it does. But if he considers that his military service is not consistent with his civil duties and obligations, let him resign one or the other. I would rather he would resign, as it is not proper that military and civil functions should be combined in the same officer.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Why would the gentleman override the rights of the State? Why not allow the State itself to decide the matter?

Mr. DICKERSON. I am not undertaking to override the rights of the State. The form of the gentleman's question is unfair to me. I am a Democrat, and I would give the State every possible right it can exercise, not inimical to the general interests. This bill itself recognizes the right of the State to grant exemptions; but I insist that we should now insert an absolute exemption of all State officials, without regard to the question whether the State may act on the subject or not.

Mr. HOAR. Against the will of the State if necessary?

Mr. DICKERSON. Against the will of anybody and in favor of the people whom these officers immediately and directly serve.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of my friend from Illinois [Mr. LANE], who is in charge of the bill, whether we are not making here an assumption of power on the part of the Federal Government which we ought not to make. I refer to the provision which proposes to confer upon the States a power that they have always had.

Mr. LANE. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that this has been the law for nearly one hundred years.

Mr. HOLMAN. A part of the Federal statutes?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then why reënact it?

Mr. LANE. Because we are codifying the laws on this subject. They are now scattered in different volumes. We want to include them in a single act. We follow the language of the existing law.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Will some gentleman familiar with this bill please explain the necessity for this law? What is its object, and what is designed to be accomplished by it?

Mr. LANE. The object of the bill is to make more efficient the law of the militia of the country.

Mr. STOCKDALE. For what purpose?

Mr. LANE. Well, every man may have his own idea of the purpose. We have an idea that possibly we may be able to reduce the Army by rendering the military arm of the State more efficient.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why is not that the condition of affairs now?

Mr. LANE. Because the organization of the militia in some of its details needs modification.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Does not this, as a matter of fact, increase the Army?

Mr. LANE. No, sir; it leaves to the States to deal with the question as they see proper.

Mr. HOAR. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that there has been a national military law since about 1790?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir; since 1792.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, it must be perfectly obvious to those who have given attention to this bill that the real distinction between the present military organization—the law as it has existed for a hundred years—and the pending proposition is this, that heretofore all laws upon this subject have been based upon the general rule that the militia has yet been substantially, essentially, and vitally a State body.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill destroys that character in great measure and makes it a national body. It is another step in the direction of centralization. It is another engrafting of the spirit of consolidation upon our laws; and it is another imitation of the military systems of the Old World, and gentlemen who vote for this bill had best pause and study its character for a moment, for they can not fail to recognize the fact that they are making a distinct departure from the old military organization which was established and which has been in operation for a hundred years or more.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I saw in yesterday's paper a statement to the effect that certain parties favored the gathering together of an army of a hundred thousand armed men to be on exhibition at the Chicago Fair, and we are asked to take a million dollars of the people's money to make a display of this kind in the United States, so as to establish a kind of international rivalry on that subject, and to exhibit a spirit of competition with the other armies and naval powers of the world. It is a principle that the people of this country can not be reconciled to, and which, I apprehend, we can not justify.

This bill is entirely wrong in all respects, and the system of militia which has existed in this country for one hundred years, which has carried us through every peril, is surely good enough for us in this day when we are not confronted with any danger, and when we are not threatened with turmoil, national, State, or foreign. There has never been a time, I am proud to say, when the national spirit has not been sufficient to array the citizens under the old system and bring them around the colors of the country, to carry them forward to victory whenever there arose a demand.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WATSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to have the gentleman state in what section of this bill is found that provision which does away with the power of the States and tends to consolidate in the Federal Government this militia arm of the service?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I did not say that it absolutely did that. I said that it was a step in that direction.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Where is the step taken?

Mr. WATSON. By making the organization national and providing for the Government control of it as a national organization.

Mr. CUTTING. But under the laws of the State.

Mr. CURTIS. Where in the bill is there such a provision as the gentleman from Georgia seems to apprehend?

Mr. WATSON. Why, look at the second section of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Whence arises the authority over the militia, except under the Constitution? Instead of giving the organization the character the gentleman assumes, we are seeking simply to carry into effect the true intent and meaning of the law of 1795 and endeavoring to make perfect the organization under State control; and again I ask the gentleman to state where in this bill there is any provision which does not preserve intact the privileges of the States over the militia as they have existed in the past?

Mr. WATSON. I will answer the gentleman. From the opening section of the bill the gentleman will see, if he scrutinizes it, that whereas we have heretofore had a separate military organization, under the control of the States, that now we have, under the provisions of this bill, a national guard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will suspend until order can be restored upon the floor. Gentlemen on all sides complain that it is utterly impossible to hear a word of the discussion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman from Georgia state at what time in the history of this country the militia was anything but a national organization? And if he has any doubt on that subject——

Mr. WATSON. If the militia system was a perfect one, where is the necessity for this legislation?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Because no doubt the law was defective in some of its details.

Mr. WATSON. But why such a radical change if the law was not defective?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to a provision in the early law concerning the militia.

Section 2 of Article II of the Constitution of the United States provides:

The President—

That is, not the president of a State, but the President of the United States—shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States, when called into the actual service of the United States.

Mr. WATSON. Precisely. That is what I said.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That makes it pretty thoroughly a national organization.

Mr. WATSON. Not at all. We have had heretofore, as I stated, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOAR. I will ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] to read a little further.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Here are further provisions in regard to the power of Congress; that Congress shall have power not only to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, etc., but—

To raise and support armies.

To provide and maintain a navy.

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasion.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the gentleman to read the next section.

Mr. BOUTELLE (reading):

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively the appointment of the officers, etc.

Mr. WATSON. Well, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that section ought to relieve the apprehension of the gentleman as to the danger to the United States in this regard.

Mr. WATSON. I will answer the gentleman's question with frankness. The Constitution and these provisions which the gentleman reads are in exact accordance with what I said in the beginning: that the militia as it has existed for a hundred years has been a distinct and separate organization of the separate States; and it was only when called into action in the manner prescribed by law that the National Government had anything to do with it; but this bill proposes to make the militia itself a national guard, a national body. It makes it a national army on an immense scale.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I understand that the gentleman does not object to the constitutionality, but simply to the supposed impropriety of the bill.

Mr. WATSON. I make no point on its constitutionality.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I wanted to understand the gentleman.

Mr. WATSON. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that we are changing the law of the military establishment, and instead of having forty odd separate State militias we are now consolidating these forces and making them a national body.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman then to base his opposition simply on the ground of impropriety of the legislation and not upon the ground of its unconstitutionality?

Mr. WATSON. As I was saying, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask the gentleman to answer my question.

Mr. CUTTING. Will the gentleman from Georgia point out any provision in the bill which nationalizes anything.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Let me ask the gentleman from Georgia another question. Do you maintain that a State militia can exist without the authority of the Constitution?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly not.

Mr. HOAR. And of an act of Congress?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly not; but the point I make is that as it now exists it is a distinct, separate State organization.

Mr. CUMMINGS. But under the authority of the Constitution.

Mr. CURTIS. And under the act of Congress of 1795.

Mr. WATSON. Of course this subject is a matter upon which gentlemen may differ in their opinion. I state only my own view.

Mr. HOAR. Does not the gentleman know that the United States Supreme Court has already decided that the militia organization of the States can not exist except under an act of Congress passed in connection with the provision of the Constitution which has been read.

Mr. WATSON. I presume the gentleman is correct about that; but that is not the question. The question is whether this House thinks it wise to make, if we are making this bill—and that is the point I raise—a separate and distinct national guard, composed of these various State militias, which organization becomes by its name and its organization under this bill a distinct national body, a great national mass of armed men.

Mr. HOAR. Let me ask the gentleman still further if he can point out in that bill any provision which makes it a separate organization, different from the provisions of the law now existing?

Mr. WATSON. If the bill does not do that, then what is the necessity for it?

Mr. HOAR. Because this is a codification, and an amendment of existing law.

Mr. WATSON. But it changes the law. Why do you change it?

Mr. BOUTELLE. To improve it, probably.

A MEMBER. To improve the law just as you want to improve the law by your subtreasury bill, probably.

Mr. WATSON. But I deny that you do improve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask that that amendment be again reported. In this confusion it has been lost sight of.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken on the amendment; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DICKERSON. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 64

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LANE. I offer an amendment to section 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 4 by striking out all of said section after the word "make," in line 4 of said section, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Return of the militia of the State with their arms, accouterments, and ammunition, agreeably to the provisions of the law, to the President of the United States annually on or before the first Monday in January; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, from time to time, to give such directions to the adjutants-general of the militia as may, in his opinion, be necessary to produce uniformity in such return."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the amendment, and the change that has been made in the pending section, as well as that which is proposed by the pending amendment. In the old law there is no requirement that the adjutant-general of a State in the time of peace shall make any return to the Secretary of War, or be under his direction. This section provides that the adjutant-general of a State, a State officer, either in time of war or in time of peace, shall also be in the service of the National Government, and that he shall report to the national authorities, under the amendment, I believe, to the President of the United States, and under the section, as it stands, to the Secretary of War.

Now, if that is not a long step in the direction of taking from the States control of their militia in time of peace, and transferring it unnecessarily beyond the purview of the Constitution, and thus make a central power, I do not know what would be. We make this officer report to the Secretary of War, or to the President. Why compel a State officer by law hereafter to report to some other power than that from which he gets his power to act? The general scope of this bill, as I gather its meaning, is hidden. What is embodied in it is to destroy the distinction between the States with reference to the control of the militia, not leaving the control of the militia to the State in time of peace, but transferring it permanently to the central authority at the national capital—a very objectionable feature, I think. A bill containing such a provision, either with the section as it now stands or as it would stand as amended, ought to lead to the defeat of any bill.

Mr. BLAND. I move to strike out the section. I would like to inquire of the gentleman what is the meaning of that section?

That there shall be an adjutant-general in each State and Territory, who shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the laws of each State and Territory, respectively, and who shall make returns and reports to the Secretary of War at such times and in such form as he shall from time to time prescribe.

What power has Congress to dictate to the State that it shall have an adjutant-general? In other words, is not the logical conclusion of this section that the Federal Government shall appoint an adjutant-general to reside in each State who shall make reports to the Secretary of War. If that is not the meaning what authority has Congress to prescribe to a State what its law shall be?

Mr. LANE. I wish only to say to the gentleman from Missouri that the bill is now in substance what the law has been for one hundred years. I read this to the gentleman:

There shall be appointed in each State an adjutant-general, whose duty it shall be to distribute all orders from the commander-in-chief of the State to the several corps.

That is the old law.

Mr. BOATNER. That is the law of 1792.

Mr. LANE. No; that is the law of 1795—nearly one hundred years old. There is in every State a general law, under which there is an adjutant-general appointed, and he is the officer meant in that section.

Mr. BLAND. He is required by this law to report to the Secretary of War.

Mr. LANE. He is required by the present law to make such a report.

Mr. HOAR. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] let me point out to him that the sixteenth section of this bill provides for the distribution of certain arms and munitions of war to the National Guard by "an allotment based upon the number of regularly commissioned and enlisted National Guard which shall have appeared for muster in the several States," and that the report provided for by the section under consideration or by the proposed amendment is intended to furnish the National Government a basis upon which this distribution of arms and ammunition can be made, as it has been made heretofore, upon the basis of voluntary statements of the condition of the militia of the several States?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the present law authorizes or requires the State adjutant-general to make a report to the Secretary of War.

Mr. STEWART of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the old law provided that each State should have an adjutant-general who should make reports to the Secretary of War, and it prescribed the nature of those reports. This bill provides that the adjutant-general of the State shall make returns and reports to the Secretary of War at such time and in such form as he shall from time to time prescribe. I thought that the bill in that form gave too much discretion to the Secretary of War, gave him too much authority over the State officers, and the amendment which was offered by me which is now pending, is copied from the old law which has existed since 1792, specifying the nature of the reports to be made by the adjutant-general of the States to the Secretary of War. That, and nothing more.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read section 1634 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

There shall be appointed in each State an adjutant-general, whose duty it shall be to distribute all orders from the commander-in-chief of the State to the several corps; to attend all musters when the commander-in-chief of the State reviews the militia, or any part thereof; to obey all orders from him relative to carrying into execution and perfecting the system of military discipline established by law; to furnish blank forms of returns that may be required, and to explain the principles on which they should be made; to receive from the several officers of the different corps throughout the State returns of the militia under their command, and to make proper abstracts from such returns, and lay the same annually before the commander-in-chief of the State.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEWART] what substantial objection there can be to authorizing the Secretary of War to require uniformity in the form of the reports to be made by the adjutant-generals of the respective States.

Mr. STEWART of Texas. That is the object of my amendment; but this bill as it stands provides that the adjutant-general of the State shall make returns and reports to the Secretary of War, at such time and in such form as he shall from time to time prescribe. Now, that does not undertake to say what those reports shall contain, and it seems to me that such a provision gives undue authority to the Secretary of War over these officers of the State.

Mr. BOATNER. But wherein does it give undue authority?

Mr. STEWART of Texas. It gives the Secretary of War discretion, at his good pleasure, to require reports at any time he pleases about any subject connected with the State militia.

Mr. BOATNER. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. STEWART of Texas. Yes, sir; I think the States alone should control the militia, subject to the constitutional provision that it can be called out only in the emergencies contemplated by the Constitution.

The CHAIRMAN. The morning hour having expired, the committee will rise.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 7318) and had come to no resolution thereon.

NORFOLK AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 3591) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. ATKINSON. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINSON. This bill was before the House on a previous occasion, and the Chair then held that it should be first considered in Committee of the Whole. I make the point of order now that the bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole. The reason assigned when the point was made, and was sustained by the Chair, was that the bill granted a right of way over public property.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] if he desires to be heard on the question.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, the only question connected with the matter is, I think, whether the granting of a simple right of way over a street is an appropriation of public property The bill does not give this company any title to the street, and, as a matter of course, it does not appropriate any public money. The purpose of the bill is to give a simple right to construct a track along a certain street in Georgetown. It is a question for the Chair to decide whether that is an appropriation of public property in the sense contemplated by the rule. This is not a grant of an irrevocable right of way. The grant is subject to alteration or change at any time. Section 9 provides that Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time. The bill simply gives the road a right to pass over a public highway. That is all.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to cite authorities at this time, because I understood that the question had been closed. It has been already decided by the Speaker of this House that this bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole. I have not the RECORD at hand containing the decision to which I refer, but if the Speaker will send for it he will find the decision to be as I state. That decision was made by the present Speaker of the House at the last session. This bill does grant a right to public property which belongs to the Government. Having assumed that the Speaker would not care to reverse his own decision, I am not, as I have said, prepared at this moment to present authorities on the question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MONDAY, JUNE 27—Part 1, page 237.

Mr. HEARD called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 3591) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company of Virginia to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. ATKINSON made the point of order that the bill should receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole, inasmuch as it grants certain property of the United States, to wit, the right of way over the streets of Georgetown and Washington.

The Speaker sustained the point of order.

The SPEAKER. This question seems to have been decided by the Chair at the previous session of the present Congress.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then the Chair, as I understand, rules that this bill must be considered in the Committee of the Whole. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] whether we can not before we go into the Committee of the Whole limit the time for general debate.

Mr. ATKINSON. I really do not know now how much time may be desired. Probably we had better wait until we get into the Committee of the Whole, and after the discussion has begun we may agree.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We shall probably be able to agree then?

Mr. ATKINSON. I hope so.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3591) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company of Virginia to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I object.

Mr. ATKINSON. I think it had better be read.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made to the request, the bill will be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Chairman, I desire that the House shall understand by a very brief statement the position that this bill now occupies before the House. In the first place it may be necessary for me to say that the Norfolk and Western Railroad, chartered by the Legislature of Virginia, proposes under this permissive charter which it asks from Congress to enter the city of Georgetown, and starting from a point on the Shenandoah Valley Road, a branch of the Norfolk and Western, to come down through the counties of Fauquier, Loudoun, and Fairfax, in my own State and district, where every man, woman, and child desires the building of this road, opening up one of the grandest sections of my State, where in some places we have no railroad within 20 miles of the proposed line. The citizens of those counties have by mass meeting and by other public expressions in every conceivable form shown that they desire the passage of this bill. It is proposed to cross the river just above the Aqueduct bridge, to come into Georgetown, and to occupy territory there, upon which the owners, as appears by their petition to this House now lying upon my desk, desire that the roadbed shall be placed.

By mass meetings and by petitions of citizens of Washington and Georgetown, embracing every business man doing business on Pennsylvania avenue from Rock Creek to this Capitol, save one, the passage of this bill is asked, so that this road may have the right to enter that city of 18,000 inhabitants, which now has no railroad facilities at all.

Now, it would seem strange to me, under ordinary circumstances, as it must seem strange to members of this Committee of the Whole, that where the people in the section of the country through which a road proposes to pass desire its passage—that where the citizens of the city which a road proposes to enter desire it to enter—I say it must seem strange that under these circumstances there should be any objection, coming from whatever source it may. What is the objection in this case?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Have any remonstrances been filed from any quarter?

Mr. MEREDITH. Not a solitary one. On the contrary, one hundred of the best citizens of this city have been before the committee to-day urging the passage of this bill. And not a single remonstrance has come here. The public prints have charged that the only opposition to this bill comes from another railroad corporation—a corporation which has been granted more privileges in this city than all the rest of the railroad corporations here. So that the issue joined to-day will determine whether, upon a measure which is right and just, the great body of the people of the State and the city interested shall succeed, or whether they shall be defeated by a corporation which, as I have stated, exercises more privileges over the public domain of this city than any other corporation which has ever brought a railroad into it.

I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the opposition would be withdrawn if the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company could be forced to leave the course which it proposes to follow, and to come down across the Long bridge, the bridge at present spanning the river between here and Virginia, a bridge over which the trains of three or four railroad corporations have to pass daily.

And I desire it to be understood, for I know whereof I speak, that if by amendment this road is compelled to come down and pay tribute to another corporation, by passing over a bridge belonging to that corporation, the road will not be built. My people will not and can not have the advantages they hope to have of a through railroad line passing over that region of country.

Now, sir, I do not desire to impugn the motives of any man. I am not here for that purpose. I believe that gentlemen are actuated by high motives; but I believe, Mr. Chairman, that they are mistaken, and I desire the test to be made as to whether or not a great corporation, through its attorneys, through its agents, through its lobbyists, who have hung around this House day after day and week after week buttonholing members and endeavoring to secure their aid by every possible means, can defeat the legislation proposed and prevent the Norfolk and Western Railroad from simply having a permissive charter to enter the city of Georgetown. I say I desire to test whether or not a corporation using such methods shall be allowed to prevail in this House.

Mr. Chairman, I might show, sir, a petition signed by the members of the Virginia Legislature, which I hold in my hand, and which must contain, from the size of it, the name of nearly every member of that body, asking for the passage of this bill. I might hold up this petition, sir, and have the Clerk read it but for the time it would take; and you would find that the most prominent citizens of this city are in favor of the passage of this bill and the construction of this road. I might take resolutions which have been passed in the county of Loudoun, in the county of Alexandria, and in the county of Fauquier and bring them here, begging the representatives of the people on this floor to give them an advantage which they believe they would receive by the building of this road.

But, sir, I do not desire to take up the time of the House. I wish simply to state the position in which we are at this time. Here is a great interest started by a corporation which has done more to build up the interests of my own State, Virginia, than any other railroad, if not all the railroads within the limits of the State, an enterprise which proposes to furnish railroad facilities to a city of 18,000 inhabitants where they have no such facilities at the present time, and where the citizens have to pay heavy freights or else send wagons to Alexandria and haul merchandise between the two points, as I understand it costs about one-third more for through freights coming over the Long bridge and this little stretch of road leading to Alexandria than it costs to have the same delivered in that city.

Sir, we do not want to be placed in the position of having to pay exorbitant rates for our freights; we do not want to be placed in the position of having to pay tribute to another corporation; we do not want to be at the mercy of the Pennsylvania road, for we have been there; and I know whereof I speak when I say that it has been the most grasping corporation that ever was known. Its charges have been excessive, and the other roads have had to pay tribute to it, unjust and outrageous both in character and amount.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know from whence this opposition will come. I have believed that when the matter was understood, that when the members of this House understood that this was simply a request of the people of Virginia and of the people of the city of Georgetown, asking for what is reasonable, what is just, and what is right—I have believed that the members of this body who had been opposed to us would withdraw their objection and that without further discussion this bill would be passed. I do not desire to detain the House. I have stated the position occupied by this road, and I am here to say that wherever the objections may come from they can not be reasonable and they can not be just.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Will my friend permit a question?

Mr. MEREDITH. Certainly, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. It seems both roads have friends here and outside. Although no one has spoken to me or written to me against the bill, I have been written to and spoken to this morning in favor of the bill you represent. I want a little information for myself, as I was too busy this morning to investigate the matter.

Mr. MEREDITH. I will give the gentleman all the information in my possession with pleasure.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. If the bridge you refer to that is now used by certain corporations is used by this road, the Norfolk and Western——

Mr. MEREDITH. No, sir, it is not.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I say if it is so used, as an effort is being made to use it, will that enable the road to come into Georgetown?

Mr. MEREDITH. No, sir; it will prevent it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. They propose to build a bridge of their own?

Mr. MEREDITH. They propose to build a bridge of their own.

Mr. ENOCHS. Above the two bridges now spanning the Potomac.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Very well, then; to come over this bridge that is now used would force them into this city here.

Mr. MEREDITH. Instead of going into Georgetown.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. And prevent their getting into Georgetown.

Mr. MEREDITH. You have struck it exactly.

Mr. PICKLER. Where did this opposition seem to come from, as appears by the newspapers, on Saturday night at that inharmonious meeting?

Mr. MEREDITH. I would not like to call any names.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Perhaps there will be no opposition.

Mr. PICKLER. There was Saturday night an inharmonious meeting.

Mr. MEREDITH. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There was no opposition at that meeting. The opposition was that it was said some gentlemen had gone too far, and perhaps criticised some people too much, and that was the occasion of the difference; but every man there was in favor of this bill. Every man desired the passage of it, and the only difference was as to whether certain criticism ought to be made, all being agreed as to the general result.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I think there is a general impression that they went too far in their criticism. I think that the views and interests of the District can be fought for by men like gentlemen, and not by a lot of rowdies. I condemn the spirit of that meeting, although I am very strongly inclined to stand by the interests that were represented at that meeting. I want to say that much.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If there was a little bad blood at that meeting we will not have any at this. I want to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ENOCHS] for five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If my friend will allow me just for a moment at this point, I would like to ask a question. I am very much interested in this discussion because it is all new to me. I understand that one of the objections made to the proposition in connection with the other railroad was that it would bring the railroad into this city, and that the purpose of this bill is to bring the railroad into Georgetown. What do they want to get into Georgetown for?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not understand that there is any objection to their coming into this city, but the difficulty is in compelling them to come over the one bridge that they have here, which leads either into this city or into Georgetown, which is already crowded beyond its capacity.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood from the colloquy with my friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] that one of the difficulties here was that somebody was trying to force this railroad into Washington, while they wanted to get into Georgetown.

Mr. HEMPHILL. They want to get into Georgetown because that is the feasible plan, as I understand it; and it will give the people of that part of the District of Columbia some railroad facilities, whereas now they are a mile or two from the depots. At present Georgetown has no railroad.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The proposition is to have the road come into Washington through Georgetown.

Mr. DAVIS. It will come into Washington through Georgetown.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ENOCHS].

Mr. ENOCHS. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I understand the provisions of this bill, or proposed law, it is simply to grant the right of the public to certain streets in the city of Georgetown. No one will claim for a moment that it deprives the property-owners along the streets of their right to remuneration for damages caused by the occupation of the streets. As I understand, Congress occupies to the District of Columbia the position that a city council does in a city. It simply grants the right of way that the public has.

In Ohio our courts have said that a property-owner having property abutting on a street has as much interest and as much property in the street as the abutting lot itself. That being the situation, Congress occupies the same position to the city as a city council in granting the right of way to get into this city, and I know that city councils, without hesitancy, grant simply the right of way to the public streets, and expect the railroad company to compensate the private owners of abutting property.

Now, this is one of the most enterprising corporations I know of in this country. Its principal point is Norfolk, Va. They have recently built a bridge close to the line between West Virginia and Kentucky, across the Ohio River, and are to-day running trains from Norfolk to Chicago, Ill. They have also built a branch road to Bristol, on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia road, and have, consequentiy, provided for that part of the country, which is interested in having another line into the city of Washington. That is all there is of it. This is simply another line. This company has also built a branch road down to and connecting with the Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley Railroad, which connects them with the railroads all over North Carolina; and in a short time they will be connected with the railroads in South Carolina and Florida.

This connection with the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad connects with all that part of the country in Tennessee, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Texas, and Arkansas, which is interested in having this additional road into the city of Washington. Across the Ohio River, Ohio and Illinois are interested, as you have connection with Chicago. The whole of the South and Southwest are interested in this road. The Ohio Valley now has the Chesapeake and Ohio road to get into Washington. The Ohio Valley and the Mississippi Valley would have this additional line to get into Washington.

There is certainly nothing in this bill which goes beyond what is fair and reasonable to this railroad. It is simply granting the right to build a railroad to get into the city of Washington, another railroad enabling persons from all over the South and Southwest and from the Northwest to get into Washington over an additional railroad into this city. That is all there is of it, and anybody having property along the line of the road has his remedies. We do not grant away any right except the public right, the easement, to occupy the streets.

Now, it seems to me that everybody in the South, the Southwest, and the Northwest, everywhere except in the East, is interested, and directly interested, in having this additional line into the city of Washington.

This enterprising corporation has gone on, as I have said, and has reached all over the South, the Southwest, all over the West and Northwest, by its branches, and has bridged the Ohio River, and they are simply now asking that they may be allowed to build this 50 miles of road and get into this city. There certainly ought not to be any question about granting this right.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question or two.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ENOCHS. I should like to have sufficient time to answer the gentleman a question or two.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield time to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio says that all that this road requires is a right of way over some of the public streets. Now, I would like to ask him if any provision is made whereby the property-owner whose property abuts on the street, but whose land is not taken, can be compensated for the damage he sustains?

Mr. MEREDITH. Will my friend allow me to answer that question?

Mr. ENOCHS. The Constitution fixes that.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. One at a time, gentleman. I will take the gentleman from Virginia later.

Mr. MEREDITH. I happen to be familiar with the facts.

Mr. ENOCHS. The Constitution fixes that right, that you can not take property without just compensation therefor. Our courts have decided that. The Supreme Court has decided that a hundred times, I suppose.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That does not answer my question.

Mr. ENOCHS. Well, I beg pardon.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio that under the constitutional provision you can not take a man's property without paying just compensation, but the courts have decided that if you run a railroad along a public highway and do not take the man's property, that constitutional provision is not sufficient to guarantee him compensation for the damage to his property resulting from the running of a railroad along it.

Mr. ENOCHS. What courts have decided that?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the gentleman [Mr HOPKINS of Illinois] know any property-owner in this case who is raising that question?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I do not know whether anyone is raising the question or not.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. On the contrary, they are all asking for this road.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That is not the question at all. The question is this: When we are perfecting legislation here, not in the interest of the property-owners particularly, but in the interest of the public, we ought to see that it is limited and controlled so that no man can be injured.

Mr. ENOCHS. I understand that. Now, I want to answer the gentleman's question. The decisions in this country are uniform that neither a city council nor any other legislative body can give away the property of private individuals by granting a right of way. The courts of my State have decided that the ownership in the streets is as much property in the abutting lot-owner as the lot itself, and that therefore it can not be taken away by a city council or any other legislative body.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That does not answer my question precisely.

Mr. ENOCHS. If a railroad is built over the highway, compensation must be made for the damage caused thereby. That is the uniform decision of all the courts, as I understand, and I would like the gentleman to show me a decision to the contrary.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I can state to the gentleman that while his general proposition of law is correct, yet where the property-owner owns only to the middle of the street, if a railroad is put upon one side of the street it does not affect the property-owner upon the opposite side so as to entitle him to damages. That has been decided by the supreme courts of a number of States.

Mr. ENOCHS. Well, this bill provides for that case.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That is what I have been trying to get at.

Mr. MEREDITH. The property-owners do not raise that question.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But at the same time, when we are legislating upon the subject, we should see that provision is made for the protection of their rights, whether they are asking for it or not.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], if his mind is not at ease upon this subject, that the decisions in this District are that if a railroad injures the property along which it passes it is liable for damages. There happens to be a church down here that I know something about, and whenever they get a little out of funds they sue the railroad and get damages. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I admit the fact, but I deny the motive. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. No matter whether the motive is good or bad, the fact is as I have stated.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, I will ask the gentleman whether these District courts, which he seems to be so familiar with, have decided that the construction of a railroad is an additional easement or burden upon the public.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not know that I understand all the gentleman's big words. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. They are not big words to a lawyer, and I assume that the gentleman is a lawyer.

Mr. HEMPHILL. But I do know that the courts of the District have decided that if a railroad injures property along which it passes it must make compensation for the damage done.

Mr. PAYNE. That church case was a case of a nuisance, where the "tooting" interfered with public worship. That does not cover the gentleman's point.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not think there is any trouble about the point raised by the gentleman from Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is any opposition to this bill I would be very glad to know it. I think we are simply fighting the wind so far.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield the floor?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not ask for time from the gentleman from South Carolina. I am in opposition to this bill, and I claim time in my own right.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not propose to undertake to control the time in any manner further than to try to agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania upon some reasonable time for debate.

Mr. ATKINSON. I do not think there will be any difficulty about that. I do not care to be limited to any particular time now, because I do not know who may desire to speak.

Mr. HEMPHILL. How much time do you intend to occupy yourself?

Mr. ATKINSON. I really am not able to tell. I will demonstrate that later. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. Not more than fifteen minutes?

Mr. ATKINSON. Well, I do not care to be limited; but I shall not occupy very much time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] yield the floor?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to come to an agreement with the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the time to be occupied in this debate.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Before the gentleman gives out any more time I would like to ask him one more question. I am not so familiar with District matters as the gentleman from South Carolina, and I would like to ask him in whom is the fee of the streets of this city, in the city or in the property-owners?

Mr. HEMPHILL. In the United States Government.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Then if the fee is in the Government of the United States and we allow this railroad company to occupy the public highway how can the property-owner whose property abuts upon this highway, but whose property is not taken, maintain a suit for damages?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, sir, I do not know how that makes any difference. The gentleman will allow me to say that this is not a technical question; it is a practical question; it is a condition that we are confronting. It has already been decided, as I have stated, that the corporation is liable in such cases. The fact that the United States Government owns the street for street purposes does not warrant it in authorizing a great corporation to run steam cars along the street and thereby injure private property, and when a corporation does this it is liable for damages. That is common law and common justice.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I understand the common law to be that in the absence of some special provision damages can not be recovered unless property is actually taken; there must be something tangible upon which to maintain a suit. It is only by virtue of some special provision that consequential damages in such cases can be recovered. Now, I want to know whether there is any provision here by virtue of which a property-owner whose property is not actually taken will be able to obtain consequential damages.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Why, sir, I have stated as plainly as I possibly could that cases have actually been decided involving that very question; and the money has been paid. Now what more can the gentleman ask?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The cases to which the gentleman refers may have been actions for nuisance. The damages recovered in those cases may have been entirely different from the character of damages which would be sought here. It is no answer to me to say that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided a certain way on a church suit; that is not the proposition at all. The question is this: The fee of the street being in the Government of the United States, is there any provision in the bill by which consequential damages can be recovered by a property-owner whose property is not actually taken, but is damaged in consequence of the Government treating its property in the manner proposed in the bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I will say to the gentleman that there does not seem to be a particle of doubt upon that subject. This is one point upon which Democrats and Republicans in this House are unanimous. I have had lawyers on both sides come to me and say there is not a shadow of doubt about this question. As I have stated to the gentleman the point has been decided. I can not conceive how the Government of the United States can take property for a public street and grant its use to a corporation, and then say that if such a corporation runs a locomotive upon it the corporation is not to pay damages to the owner of the private property which is thus injured. Therefore I think that if the people along the route do not object to the bill, if the lawyers of the District do not object, if nobody else objects, my friend from Illinois might assume that we are correct in the position we take.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. If the gentleman decides the question upon assumptions he may be correct. My question was simply asked for information. I wished to know whether he could turn to any decision. I for one am desirous of granting the privilege asked for here; but I would like to have the gentleman cite the case to which he has referred.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not think there is a particle of doubt about the point. I never heard that objection raised to the bill by anyone.

Mr. BERGEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Does he state that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that where a bill does not have in it a provision under which damages are to be assessed, damages can be recovered? Certainly, I think the gentleman can not maintain that proposition; and I do not think that the decisions of the courts go to that extent. The gentleman may maintain, and the courts may have held, that when rights of way are thus granted over Government property, and the act provides a method by which damages of private property-owners may be assessed, such owners may recover damages, but not in other cases.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, lawyers, we know, never agree about anything.

Mr. BERGEN. I thought the gentleman stated just now that all the lawyers did agree.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I thought they did; but I find now that one very good lawyer differs; therefore, I have changed my view upon that point. I think we had better not spend any more time in the discussion of this legal question.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I would like to ask the gentleman a single question. This bill, I observe, provides that certain streets in this city may be occupied by this railroad company. It has been stated (and accurately, as I understand) that the fee simple of these streets is in the United States Government. I find nowhere in this bill any provision for the payment of anything to the United States for the property thus taken. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HEMPHILL. So far as my knowledge goes there has never been a charge made upon any corporation for the privilege of passing over the public streets of this city. Neither the street-car lines nor the Pennsylvania Railroad Company nor the Baltimore and Ohio have paid anything.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Is it not about time that the Government and municipalities should be taking some such steps?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, it may be, but it is a little hard that we should begin with a new concern. When we start the business we ought to begin with the great corporations already in existence which are making money, and not take one which is trying to get in and which has all of the uphill work yet to do. There is no such provision in any other bill that I know of.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. The gentleman answers my question "full pressed down and running over." [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if we can not agree on some time for general debate?

Mr. ATKINSON. Evidently, Mr. Chairman, in view of the time taken up with interrogatories to the gentleman from South Carolina when he was on the floor, it is obvious that we can not safely agree on the time now. If he will tell me how many questions will be asked by gentlemen around me before I leave the floor, and how long it will probably take to respond to them, then I will be better able to make a decision as to the time I require. But I do not know that myself. If gentlemen ask questions they are entitled to a respectful answer.

Mr. HEMPHILL. All the questions have been answered already, I think, with great satisfaction. [Laughter.]

Mr. ATKINSON. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. But all I want to get at is an agreement that there shall be some limit to the general debate.

Mr. ATKINSON. I think we will be able to agree upon that after I have concluded.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman says so, we will agree on forty minutes' additional time, of which I will allow him thirty minutes.

Mr. ATKINSON. Let me go on and get through with what I have to say first, and then there will be time enough to determine that question.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think the gentleman can certainly fix now some reasonable time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, whether or not it would not facilitate the consideration of this bill to take a recess until gentlemen can have an opportunity to consult a capable lawyer? [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. Unless we can agree upon limiting the general debate, I will have to ask the committee to rise for that purpose.

Mr. ATKINSON. Well, I hope the gentleman will not do that under the circumstances.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am perfectly willing to give him two-thirds or three-fourths of whatever time the House may see proper to allow.

Mr. ATKINSON. I think it would be hardly fair to take that course now. After I have said what I want to say then the gentleman will have it in his power to make his motion.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania agree that within half an hour we can take up the question of time?

Mr. ATKINSON. Oh, I think I will conclude what I have to say in less than half an hour. I am asking no more rights than the gentleman himself enjoyed. The gentleman from South Carolina enjoyed the very privilege I ask now.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to finish his remarks, and we will then agree on time if possible.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield the floor?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I want to reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize in his own right the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I presume that there is no dispute about the propriety of admitting the Norfolk and Western Railroad into the District of Columbia. I have no objection to the admission of that road. I have no objection to the admission of any other railroad into this District, and I do not rise for the purpose of throwing any obstacle in the way of this railroad corporation or of any other that desires to come into this District. But I believe that the bill before us is open to serious objection.

Anyone who has watched the trend of sentiment in this District and who has read the newspapers referred to by the gentlemen who have spoken on this subject knows that there is a determined movement here having for its object the abolition of grade crossings by railroads. It has been insisted, time and again, that the grade crossings of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad should be abolished and that the grade crossings of the Baltimore and Potomac road should be abolished. I believe if the people of this city are a unit on any question it is on the question of the abolition of grade crossings.

The gentleman from Virginia very properly discusses the importance of this road to his constituents and its desirability to the citizens of Georgetown, but he did not discuss the terms of the bill; and I propose briefly to call the attention of the House to the bill itself and see whether it meets the approval of the gentlemen here present.

First of all I observe that every crossing in the city of Georgetown is made at grade, and in taking up a map of that city I find that there will be grade crossings on eight or ten of the streets. There will be a grade crossing upon Montgomery street, upon Greene street, upon Washington street, Jefferson street, and upon many other streets over which this road is to be constructed. High street crosses the proposed road at grade.

Now, I wish to ask with what propriety can gentlemen, friends of the cities of Washington and of Georgetown, ask that more grade crossings be introduced into this city before any are abolished? It seems to me they can not do it with any consistency. The grade crossings here are characterized as murderous, as death traps. Will you improve the situation by adding four or five or a dozen more grade crossings in this interesting suburb of Washington known as Georgetown? I hold that you will not, and that this bill should be so modified as to admit this railroad only when the plan for its admission is so changed that no streets will be crossed at grade. Let the company come in, if you will, but arrange its crossings in such a way as to do the least possible damage to the people of that town.

But there is a very curious provision in this bill relating to these grade crossings to which I wish to direct the attention of the House.

Section 3 provides that—

> The said company shall have power to construct and operate their said extension upon, across, or over such of the streets and avenues of said city as are upon its said route, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That good, substantial, and effective gates and fences shall be placed along its said route or across said streets or avenues wherever the same may be required for the protection of the public in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as to which the company shall have due and sufficient notice.

Not only are there to be grade crossings, but it is proposed to fence them up, to put fences across the streets of the city of Georgetown. I do not believe that there is a village in all this country that would consent to admit a railroad corporation with the privilege of fencing up the streets of the town at their pleasure. And yet here it is provided that they may fence the streets of Georgetown. What would be the effect of that? Simply to cut off Georgetown from the warehouses on the south of the proposed track, and to cut off access to the wharves upon the banks of the river.

Mr. MEREDITH. Will my friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ATKINSON. Yes.

Mr. MEREDITH. When the Pennsylvania road was seeking to lay its tracks at grade, how did my friend vote upon that question?

Mr. ATKINSON. When the Pennsylvania road came into this city the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH] and I were not in Congress. I wish to say that when the other roads came in here, years and years ago, at least twenty years ago for the Baltimore and Potomac and much more for the Baltimore and Ohio, the attention of the people had not been directed to grade crossings, as it has been within a few years last past. Grade crossings were tolerated then which would not be tolerated now.

But I hold that this House is in this position: Either that it can not approve grade crossings upon this new railroad or else that it shall tolerate grade crossings upon every road that comes into this District. It can not make fish of one and flesh of another.

Now, besides this there is not a provision in this bill for a single watchman to guard the tracks as they cross the streets at grade. There is not in it a single provision for the maintenance of a light to show that there is danger ahead to the traveler who approaches this railroad.

But there is another matter that I conceive is of as much or more importance to the city of Washington than that which I have discussed. It is the question known generally as the railroad problem of the city and District, and it includes not only the abolition of grade crossings, which is insisted upon, but it also includes the reconstruction of the Long bridge. The Long bridge, as I understand it, is now under the control or in the possession, at least, of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company. That company acquired possession of it by virtue of an act of Congress approved June 21, 1871, and that act provided that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad might take possession of the bridge upon these conditions:

> First. That it maintain a roadway free to all who wish to travel between Virginia and the District of Columbia.
> Second. That said railroad company shall give every other railroad company the right to pass over said bridge upon such reasonable terms as may be agreed upon or Congress prescribe.
> Third. That if this company fails to maintain a bridge as required by the act it shall revert to the United States.

At the time this act was passed the bridge was the property of the United States. It had been damaged by a flood. It was a source of loss to the Government, and it seems that they were glad to get rid of it upon the conditions named in the act. At the time of this transfer of the Long bridge it seemed to be a sufficient and satisfactory bridge for the traffic then existing, and the then existing condition of the river. Since that time we have had an improvement of the Potomac. The banks of the river have been raised. By reason of this improvement the water has been confined to a narrower channel; and it has been demonstrated that the Long bridge is now an obstruction to the flow of water in time of flood.

Col. Haines, the engineer in charge of the Potomac River improvement, made a report upon this subject, and I send it to the Clerk's desk and ask that the parts I have marked be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Again, that part of Long bridge that spans the main channel of the river is as now built a serious obstruction to the free flow of the river in times of freshets. The Board of Engineers that recommended the plan of improving the river front, now being carried out, called attention to the necessity of rebuilding that structure with wider spans at an early stage of the work. The freshet of June last emphasized it. Reports have frequently been made to Congress calling attention to the matter. Had the freshet of last June occurred when the river was full of ice a gorge would most probably have formed at the bridge and destroyed it. At the same time a much larger area of the city would have been inundated.
> There is no possible way of preventing freshets. Moreover, they are most apt to occur when the ice in the upper Potomac breaks up after heavy rains.
> Long bridge has been at least partially destroyed several times already. When there is a freshet in the river ample room should be given to allow the water to flow off freely. If it be partially dammed up, as it now is, by the Long bridge as constructed, the level will be raised and the chances of the water being thrown in on the city increased.
> The reconstruction of Long bridge over the main channel of the river forms an essential part of any project that looks to the permanent improvement of the river front, and is intimately connected with the question of separating the wagon road from the railroad on the north side of that channel.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the opinion of the engineer in charge of the Potomac River improvements. He declares that it is necessary that the Long bridge shall be rebuilt; that it is now an obstruction to the free flow of water in time of flood. He makes an estimate of the cost of the proposed bridge, and shows that it will cost $1,250,000 to put in place across that river such a bridge as will not obstruct the free flow of water, and that will be suitable for the purposes for which that bridge is used.

At the present time a number of Southern railroads cross this bridge. The Chesapeake and Ohio, the Richmond and Danville, the Atlantic Coast Line, the Virginia Midland, all cross it under the reservation made in the act of Congress ceding this bridge to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, and not one of these companies has come to Congress, as it has the right to, to complain of the rates charged for crossing the bridge with trains. There is a bill pending in the Senate providing for the abolition of all grade crossings on almost the whole of the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, as it runs between here and South Washington; and it contains the further provision that the company shall construct a bridge according to the plans of this engineer, at a cost of a million and a quarter of dollars.

Now I come to the objection of allowing this new railroad to cross the Potomac River on its own bridge. Neither the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad nor any other road upon the face of this earth would rebuild this bridge at a cost of a million and a quarter of dollars if it would be immediately placed in competition with another bridge constructed above on the Potomac River. This Long bridge is a public necessity, so declared by the engineer of the Potomac improvement, so declared by the fathers of this Republic when they passed an appropriation away back in 1808 for the construction of a bridge where the Long bridge now is.

I hold that the proper solution of this problem is this: That a single bridge shall be built across the Potomac River; a new bridge, either built by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad or by the United States, or built in any way that the Congress in its wisdom may determine; but it should be constructed, and its construction will be delayed, perhaps totally defeated, if this bill authorizing the Norfolk and Western to cross the Potomac on a bridge of their own becomes a law.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Why?

Mr. ATKINSON. Why? Because it will take the traffic off the Long bridge. The Long bridge is more than 4,000 feet in length—4,600 feet I believe the engineer states—while the bridge above is a shorter and cheaper bridge. As I look at the location I do not believe it is a thousand feet long; it will be built at less expense than the Long bridge, and they can take all the traffic off the Long bridge and secure it for the new one. That is the reason.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. They will not have as big dividends.

Mr. ATKINSON. The gentleman from Iowa says that if the traffic of the Long bridge were diverted that dividends of the road controlling it would not be so large.

The difficulty is that there would not be any dividends from it. It would not pay to construct such a bridge as would be necessary. My idea is that all railroads coming into this city should have equal rights; that there should be a union bridge constructed here, over which every railroad from the south—and I am in favor of letting all in—should pass. If gentlemen say, let this new bridge be built and let all the southern traffic come in over it, then I say in reply, let there be a railroad opened from the Norfolk and Western bridge so as to connect with the Baltimore and Ohio and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroads. Give all these roads equal rights and show none of them any favors.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Who would control the trade and passenger traffic after it got off the bridge?

Mr. ATKINSON. I do not understand the scope of the gentleman's question. What does he mean by it?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. How could any other railroad live if one railroad had control of every foot of track over which the trains would have to pass after getting off the bridge?

Mr. ATKINSON. Let them all have tracks leading to the bridge, and let all the railroads come in over it under the conditions prescribed by the act of 1870, which are that "such railroad shall give other railroad companies the right to pass over said bridge upon such reasonable terms as may be agreed upon, or Congress prescribe." It is all in the hands of Congress. They can determine it. But I insist that the abolition of grade crossings here and the rebuilding of the Long bridge will be postponed for years, perhaps forever, if this bill is passed in the form in which it is presented here.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. But will not the privileges of the people of Georgetown be postponed indefinitely if they have to wait for the building of a new Long bridge?

Mr. ATKINSON. This road can come in over the Long bridge to-day.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. But can they go up to Georgetown?

Mr. ATKINSON. If Congress grants them the right to go along the river, they can. But what can they do in Georgetown except deliver local freights? They have no connections there. Why not put them in connection with all the railroads coming into the District?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. But the Georgetown people would be relieved from a good many burdens that they now labor under if they could have a railroad direct into their town, would they not?

Mr. ATKINSON. Perhaps they would. I find this to be the case in such matters. The men who propose to introduce a new railroad are always considered public benefactors; everybody to be benefited by the road is in favor of it, but just as soon as the road is built and it begins to charge fare and freight then the men who have built it instead of being regarded as public benefactors are denounced as public enemies. And that, I suppose, will be the condition of things in Georgetown after this road is constructed.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. The people of Georgetown seem to be willing to take their chances on that.

Mr. PICKLER. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Upon what theory does he hold that Congress should prevent the building of another bridge across the Potomac in order to secure the traffic to the present bridge-owners?

Mr. ATKINSON. Upon this theory—and I am glad the gentleman has asked the question. Every bridge that is built costs labor and money. Who pays for it? Why, the people who patronize the railroads, and the cheaper you can build the necessary bridges, consistently with strength, the greater the number of railroads you can have use the same bridge the more you reduce the cost of transportation, and the benefit of that reduction ultimately goes to the people who patronize the roads. It is a waste of time and money to build unnecessary bridges to be afterwards paid for by the people who patronize the roads.

Mr. ENOCHS. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania know or does he not know that the bridge proposed to be built by this railroad company which is here seeking the right of way is to be above two bridges which are already above the head of navigation upon the Potomac River?

Mr. ATKINSON. I have not been discussing this bill in its relation to navigation, but I believe that the knowledge on that subject of the gentleman who has asked me the question corresponds with my own.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ENOCHS], in his very interesting speech, called attention to the greatness of this Norfolk and Western Railroad Company. He is right. We are not dealing with a pygmy. I took the liberty of examining Poor's Railroad Manual the other day for the purpose of learning something about this Norfolk and Western Railroad Company. The gentleman from Ohio has correctly stated its terminal points. I find that it has 1,120 miles of track; that it has a funded debt of $50,000,000; that it has preferred stock amounting to $40,000,000, and common stock amounting to $9,000,000. It is a great corporation. I have nothing whatever against it.

The gentleman who preceded me has stated that it is a Virginia corporation. That I believe is true, but its headquarters are in the city of Philadelphia, and its president is a Pennsylvanian. Many Pennsylvanians are in its directory; and Pennsylvanians, as I am informed, have aided substantially in constructing the road. What I insist upon is that the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company shall have simply the same rights that you are willing to accord to other roads—nothing more.

I believe that there should be a union bridge constructed and all the Southern roads admitted over it. That, it seems to me, is the proper solution of this matter. I believe that, in order to obtain the benefit of the facilities of this Norfolk and Western road, it should be permitted to come in over the bridge that is already constructed over the Potomac. If this railroad is a good thing let us have it at once; and it can come over the Long bridge now. But I do not believe that this bill should pass in its present shape, and for the reasons I have given, I shall oppose it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, if no further debate is desired on this bill I ask that the committee rise and report it favorably to the House.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Is not the bill to be read by sections for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] that the bill has not yet been read by paragraphs.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask then that the bill be read now by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company, a body corporate under the laws of the State of Virginia, be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to extend their railroad into and within the District of Columbia, beginning for the said extension at the terminus of the main line of the said railroad on the Virginia side of the Potomac River and crossing said river by a suitable bridge to the east side or bank of said river, and thence following the same in an eastwardly direction, and by way of Water street, in Georgetown, to Rock Creek, and crossing said creek by a suitable bridge, and thence to the terminus of the line in Washington City, which shall be west of Twenty-sixth street west and between Pennsylvania avenue and Virginia avenue, and to be so located as not to obstruct the public use of K street and the bridge now crossing Rock Creek at Water street, at or near which point said company shall erect and maintain suitable passenger and freight stations, with the right also to acquire by purchase or condemnation, as hereinafter provided, such pieces or parcels of land as may be by said corporation required for its stations and warehouses within the cities of Georgetown and Washington on the route herein authorized for its use, with authority to construct and maintain single or double track railways on the said route through, along and over said streets and avenues, with sidings, turn-outs, turntables, switches, and such other structures as may be necessary to the delivery of cars to warehouses and stations along said route, and to connect with and transfer its cars over any lines of railroad connecting with its lines: Provided, That no more than two tracks shall be laid along Water street, in Georgetown, by this or any other corporation. And the roads and tracks and bridges hereby authorized to be constructed shall be a public highway, and may be used by any other railroad corporation for the transportation of passengers and for the delivery and receiving of freight upon the payment of a reasonable compensation therefor to the owners of the road; and in case of dispute arising in regard thereto the same shall be summarily determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia upon petition and answer: Provided, That the bridge to cross the Potomac River, connecting this extension with the main line of said Norfolk and Western Railroad at a practicable point above the Aqueduct or Free bridge, shall be so constructed as to cause the least obstruction to the navigation of the river, upon plans to be approved by the Secretary of War, and so that its abutments on the north side of Potomac River and the construction of the proposed extension at any point shall not injure or obstruct the use of the canal or of the towpath of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize said company to acquire, occupy, or use any portion of the waterway, bermbank, towpath, or slope of the bank sustaining the said towpath, or the lands covered by such slope.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments reported by the committee will first be acted upon.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I hope there will be no objection to agreeing to the committee amendments in gross; and then the gentleman from Illinois can offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is a separate vote demanded on the committee amendments; if not, the vote will be taken in gross?

Mr. ATKINSON. I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is a separate vote demanded on the committee amendments to the first section of the bill?

Mr. ATKINSON. I demand a separate vote on each amendment.

The first amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "bridge," in line 9, insert the words "at or near the Three Sisters, or such point west thereof, and upon such plans as may be approved by the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

After the word "to," in line 13, strike out "Rock Creek, and crossing said creek by a suitable bridge," and insert: "Thirtieth street or some point west thereof, and thence to a point on Rock Creek not less than 100 feet north or south of the K-street bridge, and thence crossing said creek by a suitable bridge, to be not less than 20 feet clear above the water line of said creek."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

After the word "tracks," in line 37, insert the words "in the aggregate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

After the word "highway," in line 40, insert "for any railroad connecting in the District of Columbia, or at or near the Virginia end of the bridge."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the section add the following:

"Provided, however, That said road shall be held liable to the owner of any property or real estate abutting upon any street or highway along which or over which said road is constructed for any damages either direct or consequential to such property or real estate arising from the construction and use of said road."

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HEMPHILL. We will agree to that amendment. It may make the provision of the bill clearer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the words "the Virginia side of," in line 8, section 1, to and including the words "and thence," in line 19 of same section, and insert "the Long bridge and crossing the Potomac River on said bridge, and thence by way of the north bank of said river, over the reclaimed flats by such route as Congress may hereafter fix."

The question being taken on the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The noes seem to have it.

Mr. ATKINSON. I call for a division.

The committee again divided, and there were—ayes 14, noes 132.

Mr. ATKINSON. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ATKINSON and Mr. HEMPHILL were appointed.

Mr. ATKINSON. I request that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOOKER] may be named to act as teller in my place.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HOOKER] will act as teller in lieu of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 3, noes 164.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, at the end of section, 1 add: "And provided further, That none of the tracks of said road shall cross or run upon any street in either of said cities at grade."

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I want simply to explain this amendment, because I am not certain its reading was heard by the House. It simply provides that the tracks of this proposed railroad shall not cross or run upon any of the streets in either the city of Washington or Georgetown at grade. I believe the time has come in this country when a corporation that can not afford to go either above or below the grade of the streets of a crowded city is entirely too poor to undertake a great public enterprise of this character.

I have been reading in the papers of this city for the past two years accounts of the great number of instances where accidents have occurred because of grade crossings; and I also learn from them that efforts are in progress to provide for the abolition of all grade crossings on both of the other roads entering the city. It seems to me this is an appropriate opportunity, in the inauguration and inception of this new enterprise, to fix a similar restriction and provide that the tracks shall not cross at grade.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to say a word in response to the gentleman from New Jersey, and that is, that this road goes along a street that has been already occupied by railroad tracks. If it be put below the grade it will make a canal of the street, and if you put it above the grade the crossing would go beyond the river. There is scarcely a single human being on it, so far as I know. I have myself gone along the street and have never seen anyone; and it looks as if no one had lived in the houses there for a century. Therefore, if the amendment be adopted it will be of no consequence or value.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Well, now let us see what this bill, as amended by the committee, allows this road to do. It provides that it may cross the river—

by a suitable bridge at or near the Three Sisters, or such point west thereof and upon such plans as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to the east side or bank of said river, and thence following the same in an eastwardly direction, and by way of Water street, in Georgetown, to Thirtieth street—

So that this road can run on Thirtieth street—or some point west thereof, and thence to a point on Rock Creek not less than 100 feet north or south of the K-street bridge, and thence crossing said creek by a suitable bridge, to be not less than 20 feet clear above the water line of said creek, and thence to the terminus of the line in Washington City.

So that it does cross eight streets of this city, according to the showing of the map. Wherever there is a street it should not be permitted to cross it at grade, and if there is no street of course there is no grade.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey, the Chairman decided that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Well, it will take a quorum to defeat that amendment in this House.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 28, noes 139.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ATKINSON. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 42, page 3, after the word "bridge," insert:

"No discrimination on charges or facilities for transportation, shall be made between the transportation company and individuals or in favor of either by abatement, drawback, or otherwise, and said railroad shall not make any preferences in furnishing cars or motive power."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BERGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment of Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois:

"And provided further, That damages to property, direct or consequential, to any person whatever, by reason of the occupation of any street or highway by said railroad, shall be ascertained as provided in chapter 18 of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia, relating to railroad companies, so far as the same may be applicable thereto."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think that is covered already by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BERGEN. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois did not refer to this section of the statute at all.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If this will make it plainer I do not see any objection to it.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the second section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the said Norfolk and Western Railroad Company be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to connect its line and tracks with the tracks of any other connecting railroad company west of Twenty-sixth street west which now enters or which may hereafter enter the District of Columbia, with the right to use the tracks of any such railroad upon such terms as to compensation and upon such conditions as to the use of said tracks as may be agreed upon between the said companies, and in case of dispute arising as to such compensation and conditions of use the same shall be summarily determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, upon petition and answer, and the use of said road shall not be interrupted by the pendency of such proceedings.

The Clerk read the committee amendments to the section, as follows:

In line 3, after the word "tracks," insert the words "with the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railroad Company, or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the third section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the said company shall have power to construct and operate their said extension upon, across, or over such of the streets and avenues of said city as are upon its said route: Provided, however, That good, substantial, and effective gates and fences shall be placed along its said route or across said streets or avenues wherever the same may be required for the protection of the public in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as to which the company shall have due and sufficient notice.

The Clerk read the committee amendment to the section, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "route," insert the words "subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, on page 4, section 3, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out the words "upon, across, or," so as to make it read:

The said company shall have power to construct and operate their said extension over such of the streets and avenues in the said city, etc.

I offer that amendment for this reason: As the bill now stands there is absolutely nothing in it to prevent this company from coming down from the Three Sisters Islands bridge and crossing at the end of the Aqueduct bridge, at grade, the street which leads to Arlington, a street very much traveled, indeed; and to have a railroad crossing upon it at grade would, it seems to me, be not only very inconvenient to the people who use that street, but also dangerous to human life.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not think the street that leads to Arlington is the one. You know where the Pennsylvania road goes out in that direction. I do not understand this railroad comes down that street.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I understand that this road is to build a bridge at or near the Three Sisters Islands.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I understand and know that these islands are west of the Aqueduct bridge. I understand from the terms of this bill that these tracks are to run from that bridge down Water street and into the terminus of the line in Washington City. I do know that the Aqueduct bridge is between these points. I do know that just north of the end of the Aqueduct bridge is an immense high bluff which it would be impossible for the road to go over, and that it must cross the street, which is the extension of the line on which the Washington and Georgetown cars run. The street which crosses the Aqueduct bridge must be crossed by these tracks to get from the Three Sisters bridge to the terminus in Washington City, and there is nothing in the bill as it stands to prevent that crossing being at grade at that point.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Of course the gentleman is giving his understanding of the bill, but I do not understand it in that way.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. You do if you understand the topography of the country.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have been out there a good many times, and I have tried to understand it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Where do they cross?

Mr. HEMPHILL. They need not necessarily cross at that point. They may cross under the bridge if necessary. It is all subject to the control of the Commissioners to make such regulation as will protect property.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Do you deny that this road will either go over or under or upon the approach to the Aqueduct bridge?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I believe it is proposed to run under.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I want to make them to run under. I do not want them to cross there at grade.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no objection to a provision requiring the railroad to do whatever is necessary to protect the public at that point.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. The bill does not say anything about that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think we will come to a conclusion about it. The amendment undertakes to say that they shall run under these streets all along the line.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I propose to change it so as to make it go under.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will say that at the crossing of the street where the Aqueduct bridge comes into the District of Columbia they shall go either over or under the public highway at that point I shall not object to it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I will not put it in that way, because that would be an implied command to them to cross the other streets at grade.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no implied command about it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. There is a very broad license.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The House has already voted upon that proposition. It is not a question of implication at all; but I can understand what the object of the gentleman is, as he has stated it, and if that is his object, as I apprehend him, then the public would be protected by the suggestion I make concerning the Aqueduct bridge, and it can easily be protected by this bill requiring the railroad to cross either above or below the grade at that street, if it crosses it at all. It is to cross under the bridge at that point anyhow.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. It may cross under to-day and it may not when it is built.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We can provide for that. That does not necessarily imply that you shall require them to go over or under the whole of the streets that they may occupy, because that proposition has been voted down by the House.

Mr. GROUT. Let me ask the chairman of the District Committee if this road does not come down on the canal property at the point where it is to cross the Three Sisters bridge, and from there down for some distance?

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will examine the bill he will find that they are not to occupy any of the property of the canal, the towpath, water way, bank, or otherwise, except by permission of the company now owning the canal.

Mr. GROUT. Another question I desire to ask the chairman. Is not Water street, near the Aqueduct bridge, into which this railroad comes, away below the highway that now passes over the bridge?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, yes, sir.

Mr. GROUT. How many feet, in the judgment of the chairman?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I should say 20 or 30 feet.

Mr. GROUT. Is it practicable for this railroad to come up there and reach Water street except by going under this bridge?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, no; that is the engineer's plan, and it is the only plan.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this matter, although not sufficiently familiar with it to testify with absolute certainty, it is as the chairman of the committee says—the only practicable way to reach Water street is by passing under that bridge.

I want to further say that if there is any possible danger that this railroad shall adopt any other plan, and cross the road leading to the Aqueduct bridge at grade, I should be in favor of an amendment compelling them to come under; but as I understand it, the situation compels them to come under.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have modified my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Strike out the words "upon, across, or" and insert the words "under."

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Strike out the words "upon, across, or" and insert the words "under or over such of the streets."

Mr. HEMPHILL. The trouble about that is that it covers all the streets, and your argument only related to the street leading to the Aqueduct bridge.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Oh, no. That was an illustration.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that we have already voted that down. If the gentleman will offer a proviso that the track shall cross under the street approaching the Aqueduct bridge I will consent to that.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in his own time will undoubtedly have the privilege of offering that amendment. I consent cheerfully that he shall offer such an amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am obliged to you and appreciate your kindness.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. There is nothing like courtesies being returned. I shall insist upon my amendment.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make the point of order this amendment has been disposed of by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late. The amendment has been under discussion some time.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Certainly it is too late. It might have been good originally.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 134.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment at the end of section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it further enacted, That the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company is hereby directed and required to keep in the daytime, at every point where any public street crosses the railroad track or tracks of said company, a person stationed with a red flag, and in the evening, until arrival and departure of the last train at night, at all the street crossings, a person with a flag, and lighted lamp or lantern with red glass, to give warning of the approach of the locomotive engines and railroad cars, of any description, of said company, under the penalty of $10 for every time any locomotive engine or railroad car shall pass (at any such crossings without such persons being stationed) and such warning being given, to be forfeited and paid by the said company, or the engineer or conductor in whose charge such locomotive engine or railroad car may be, severally and respectively.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no railroad locomotive engine, or railroad car, or train of cars shall encumber or obstruct any sidewalk or crosswalk, or any street in cities of Washington or Georgetown, for a longer period than is absolutely necessary for the safe and expeditious discharge of passengers only, under the penalty of $25 for each offense, to be forfeited and paid by the railroad company owning or using such locomotive engine, or railroad car, or train of cars, or the agent, engineer, or conductor in whose charge such locomotive engine, railroad car, or train of cars may be severally and respectively.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company shall not lay down any rail or rails, or railroad track or tracks, or shall alter the grade or location of any rail or rails, or railroad track or tracks in, across, or along any street in the cities of Washington or Georgetown, except when directed and required by the Commissioners to alter the grade or location thereof, without having first given twenty days notice to the Commissioners of the desire and intention of the said railroad company to lay down or alter the grade or location of such rail or rails, railroad track or tracks, except when replacing a worn or broken rail, under the penalty of $50 for each and every violation of any of the provisions of the section, to be forfeited and paid by the said company, or the person or persons laying or altering the same severally and respectively.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That that portion of the streets lying or being between the rails or tracks and two feet from the outside rail or track of the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company shall be paved in the same manner as the rest of the street or avenue in which such rails or tracks may be laid.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That rail or rails, track or tracks of said company shall be laid as shall least obstruct the free passage of vehicles and carriages over the same, and the upper surface of the rails shall be laid flush with the surface of the streets and shall conform to the grades thereof as now established or as they shall, from time to time, be reëstablished or altered, the same to be done at the expense of said company, and in all streets or parts of streets which are not paved, the rail shall be laid in such manner as shall least interfere with the public travel thereon, and as shall be authorized and approved by the District government engineer.

The railroad company or its agents shall be required to keep the surface of the streets inside of the rails in good order and repair, and all snow, ice, dirt, and filth cleaned and removed from such portions of the streets at the expense of said company, and in such manner as not to obstruct travel in any part of the street, under the penalty of $50 for each and every violation of any of the provisions of this section, to be forfeited and paid by the said company or the person or persons so violating.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners to notify said railroad company to lower or raise the rail or rails or their track or tracks as the case may require, in accordance with the sixth section of this act; and in case of a failure of said railroad company to comply with the terms thereof within ten days after said notice, which shall be in writing, then it shall and may be lawful for the Commissioners to take up and relay and repair said railroad track or tracks and assess and collect the same from said neglecting company.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer that as an amendment, because it is a police regulation of the city of Washington and is binding upon all the existing railroads. When I examined it I was surprised to find that it named the railroads—that the Baltimore and Ohio should be subject to it, that the Baltimore and Potomac and a couple of other roads that are named are subject to it. It requires the rails to be so laid as to least obstruct the passage of vehicles, and that there shall be watchmen and lights. It also requires the railroad company to pave alongside of its track; but it would not affect the railroad that we are now about to permit to enter the city of Washington unless specifically adopted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Where does that come from?

Mr. ATKINSON. It was made by the old Legislative Assembly. It is the living law of this District to-day. The old Legislative Assembly has been abolished, and there is nobody in this District having legislative power excepting the Congress of the United States; and we must now choose between the imposition of these police regulations upon this railroad by an act of Congress, or else admit it free of the regulations which are now imposed upon all the other railroads in the District.

There are a couple of sections which refer to railroads generally. I intended that it should only refer to this railroad. I believe they are proper municipal regulations, and should be imposed upon all the railroads and not omit one only. And I want to say further to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] that he was in error, I believe, when he stated that nobody crosses Water street in Georgetown. I call his attention and the attention of the committee to the fact that there are many warehouses between Water street and the river, and that people must cross that street in order to get to them.

Amongst the rest is the great warehouse of the Knickerbocker Ice Company. Besides that, the wharves of the city are beyond the proposed line of this railroad and people must cross the railroad in order to reach them. Georgetown, I believe, has also a good deal of shipping, and there is a custom-house located there. I think this amendment ought to be adopted in order to facilitate the safe crossing of the railroad by persons having business at the warehouses and by those who are engaged in shipping or receiving cargoes by the river.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman has cited a part of my remark, but not the whole of it. I said there were no houses there less than 100 years old.

Mr. ATKINSON. Oh, that may be; but the same may be said of a large part of Georgetown. It is the ancient city of the District. But because a man lives or does business in a house 100 years old is no reason why he should not have proper facilities to reach that old house. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly not; but nobody there lives in a house 100 years old. These old houses that I refer to are down on the river and are abandoned to the rats. Now, I want to come to the gentleman's argument. He says that this amendment which he offers is a police regulation of the city of Washington. I presume it has worked fairly well in relation to the other railroads here, and I call attention to the fact that the District Commissioners are authorized by this bill to do exactly what the gentleman has suggested——

Mr. ATKINSON. Will the gentleman point out the section that gives that authority?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Section 3 provides:

That the said company shall have power to construct and operate their said extension upon, across, or over such of the streets and avenues of said city as are upon its said route, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That good, substantial, and effective gates and fences shall be placed along its said route across said streets or avenues wherever the same may be required for the protection of the public in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as to which the company shall have due and sufficient notice.

Now, if the gentleman wants to say, in addition to that, that the Commissioners shall make such regulation as will protect life and property in the District in connection with the operation of this road, I shall not object to that; but I do not think it is wise or proper to incorporate into the charter of one company these police regulations which may be abolished or altered next year or at any time.

Mr. ATKINSON. There is no power vested in anybody in this District to alter them except in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HEMPHILL. But in a number of cases we have authorized the Commissioners to make proper regulations for the running of railroad trains, and if the gentleman wants to put in a provision that the Commissioners shall have the right to make such police regulations as will protect the lives and property of citizens, I shall not object.

Mr. ATKINSON. And to require that the tracks shall be so laid as not to impede travel across the streets. I think I am asking only what I have a right to ask, that this new company shall be placed in this respect in precisely the same position as the other railroads now in the District.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is all right; but the other companies do not have these regulations in their charters. That matter ought to be left to the Commissioners. They may want to change or to improve upon those regulations, and if they should want to do that they ought to have the power.

Mr. ATKINSON. Well, then, let them bring in a general enactment and make the change general; but until these regulations are changed or improved upon why not put this company on the same footing as the others?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am perfectly willing to put them on the same footing as the others; but the gentleman knows very well that these police regulations are not in the charter of any other road that comes into the District.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Does not the gentleman from South Carolina understand that this is not a charter? This company is incorporated by the laws of Virginia, and this is merely a license to them to come into this District, and is not the proper place for these regulations and restrictions in the body of the license?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think it is better to leave it to the Commissioners of the District to make the necessary regulations.

Mr. PICKLER. Under the general power that the Commissioners have, can they require that watchmen and lights shall be provided?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Beyond question.

Mr. ATKINSON. That is just where the gentleman is in error.

Mr. PICKLER. That is an important question to have determined.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. ATKINSON; and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to prevail.

Mr. ATKINSON. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 148.

Mr. ATKINSON. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HEMPHILL and Mr. HOOKER of New York were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 4, noes 166.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk began to read section 4.

Mr. BERGEN. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. COGSWELL. I make the point that the consideration of section 3 had been concluded, and the Clerk had entered upon the reading of section 4. It is therefore too late for the gentleman to offer any further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But if the gentleman from New Jersey claims that he was on his feet desiring to offer the amendment at the time the Clerk began to read the next section, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. BERGEN. I rose in my place for that purpose as soon as the Chair announced the vote by tellers on the last amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following:

"And provided further, At all crossings of streets said railroad shall be under same."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make a point of order on this amendment. I do not know exactly what it means; but I think it means just what we have voted on once or twice to-day in regard to grade crossings.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. This is a different proposition.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I simply wanted to be in time with the point of order. I am willing to hear the explanation of the gentleman who offers the amendment.

Mr. BERGEN. What is the point of order?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That we have voted down the propositions that the crossings of the railroad should be under the street or over the street.

Mr. BERGEN. This is a different proposition.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, it is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to hear the discussion between gentlemen.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The point is that the proposition submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN] has been acted upon already by the House and voted down. The amendment proposes to require that the road shall cross under the street. That has been voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The recollection of the Chair is not distinct upon the question. Will the gentleman refer the Chair to the proposition he has in view?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I offered the other proposition; that said "over or under."

The CHAIRMAN. That is the recollection of the Chair. The Chair is of opinion that this amendment is in order.

The question being taken; there were on a division (demanded by Mr. BERGEN)—ayes 7, noes 137.

Mr. BERGEN. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BERGEN and Mr. HEMPHILL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 6, noes 161.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BERGEN. I desire to offer a further amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, On crossing the street approaching Aqueduct bridge said railroad shall not be at grade but below the grade of said street.

Mr. BERGEN. I think gentlemen will not object to that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection to it.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk proceeded to read section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That if the corporation can not agree with the owner for the purchase of the land that may be required for its right of way, for the construction, enlargement, or repair of its works, and for its stations and depot facilities, the right of condemnation hereinbefore provided for shall be exercised pursuant to the provision of chapter 18 of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia, relating to railroad companies, so far as the same may be applicable thereto.

Mr. BERGIN. I desire to ask a division on the amendment last voted on.

Several MEMBERS. Too late!

Mr. BERGEN. Mr. Chairman, was my amendment lost?

The CHAIRMAN. It was. The Chair so announced, and the Clerk has read the next section.

Mr. BERGEN. Why, sir, the chairman of the committee [Mr. HEMPHILL] consented to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But the committee rejected it.

The amendment reported by the committee to section 4 was read, as follows:

Add to the section the following:

"Provided, That the said company, its successors and assigns, shall, in securing the right of way through private property within the District of Columbia, stipulate that the District of Columbia shall have the right, without charge of any kind, to cross the said right of way with any public sewer, water main, conduit, or other underground construction laid or proposed to be laid for the public safety, comfort, or health; and the said company, its successors and assigns, shall at all times, freely and without charge or hindrance of any kind, permit the legally constituted authorities of the District of Columbia to cross the said right of way in the District of Columbia, wherever necessary, in the construction of any public sewer, water main, or other construction necessary for the public safety, comfort, or health."

The question being taken; there were on a division (demanded by Mr. BERGEN)—ayes 143, noes 4.

Mr. BERGEN. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BERGEN and Mr. HEMPHILL were appointed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Can I not withdraw this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to withdraw it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] withdraws the amendment.

The Clerk began to read section 5.

Mr. BERGEN (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I make the point that the gentleman from South Carolina certainly can not withdraw the amendment while the House is dividing. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The CHAIRMAN. A getleman has a right to withdraw any proposition before a vote is taken.

Mr. BERGEN. Then I reoffer the amendment. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up the amendment.

Mr. COGSWELL. I will call the attention of the Chair to the ruling he has already made on this point. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN] certainly did not intend to offer this amendment when the Clerk commenced the reading of section 5.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman is certainly too late.

Mr. BERGEN. I am not too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL] is sustained. The Clerk had entered upon the reading of the next section.

The Clerk resumed the reading of section 5.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey (interrupting the reading). I give notice now that I propose to offer an amendment to the section which the Clerk is now reading, and I want time to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be in order.

The Clerk concluded the reading of section 5, which is as follows:

SEC. 5. That the said railroad company shall have power and authority to borrow money and issue and sell its bonds from time to time for such sums as its board of directors may deem expedient and proper for the purposes of the company, the aggregate amount thereof not to exceed the cost of rights of way and construction, and may secure the payment of its bonds by mortgages or deeds of trust upon all or any portion of its property, real or personal, its contracts, privileges, and franchises acquired under this act.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and for the purpose of having this section explained.

I want to say to the House that this is not a charter. This corporation is already chartered by the Legislature of the State of Virginia. This is a license for the corporation to come into the District of Columbia and to occupy certain territory belonging to the Government here. I find interjected into the license an express authority by Congress to this corporation of the State of Virginia to issue an unlimited number of bonds upon all or any of its property, for any purpose and without any limitation whatever as to the amount of capital stock which shall be paid in before the bonds are issued or anything else.

Mr. MEREDITH. Not to exceed the cost of its property.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Ah, not to exceed the cost of its property; but wherever that property may be, remember. In my judgment, no shrewder device was ever penned by the hand of a keen lawyer than this section 5; and this Congress by this provision puts itself in the position of authorizing a corporation in a State to issue an unlimited number of bonds, independent of any restriction which may be in the charter obtained from the State.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You do not mean to say that this would have the effect of changing the charter obtained from the State.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I mean that in so far as the voice of Congress is concerned it would have precisely that effect.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In other words, you answer my question no, or you mean to answer no?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. No, I do not mean to answer no. I say if the company wants the simple privilege of issuing bonds limited to the property it may acquire here, let it say so. But it does not; and I am surprised that the keen minds of that committee did not in some way draft some provision which would limit the operation of this section. The words, "acquired under this act" only limit the words in that sentence. They do not limit the amount of bonds.

Mr. MEREDITH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. MEREDITH. What right could Congress give them to borrow money on property owned and acquired in the State of Virginia, from which they receive their charter?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. So far as an act of Congress is concerned we give them every right which Congress has any power to give.

Mr. MEREDITH. But Congress has no power to do that.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. What may be our power is another matter. But we do say in this provision to this corporation, "Issue your bonds on all your property, and you may have printed on the bonds, if you desire, the words, 'Issued by the authority of the Congress of the United States.'" This section goes that far. Now if they do not want that power I move to strike it out. If they want a limited power let them offer a substitute to limit it.

I have not offered or attempted to offer here amendments this afternoon for the purpose of delay. My amendments have been offered in good faith and to perfect the bill, and I offer this motion now to strike out this section because I believe it is most pernicious. I believe it to be the most far-reaching in its effects of any legislation that has been enacted here; and that it goes far beyond what was intended by anybody except the author of the provision itself.

I ask the Clerk to read this section carefully and slowly in order that the House may see just what it proposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the section.

Section 5 was again read.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Now it will be observed that the bonds can be issued in any amount that the board of directors may deem expedient and proper, and cover not only the real and personal property here, but contracts, privileges, and charters anywhere existing in this company. In this license to enter the territory belonging exclusively to the United States Government to this corporation we give a power so far-reaching as that. If this House shall pass the bill with this provision in, it will be doing a thing which will far exceed anything ever enacted in the line of "centralization."

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentlemen of the committee will look at the bill they will find that it provides that this company may—issue and sell its bonds from time to time for such sums as its board of directors may deem expedient and proper for the purposes of the company, the aggregate amount thereof not to exceed the cost of rights of way and construction.

It can not go beyond that.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. But it provides—"and may secure"——

Mr. HEMPHILL (interrupting). I will read it:

And may secure the payment of its bonds by mortgages or deeds of trust upon all or any portion of its property, real or personal, its contracts, privileges, and franchises acquired under this act.

There can not be a particle of property mortgaged that is not acquired by this act.

But in order to satisfy the gentleman I propose to insert, after the word "property," the words "within the District of Columbia." That will make it perfectly clear. It means property we are legislating with reference to; and so I offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. That will bring us all together.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 of section 5, after the word "property," insert the words "in the District of Columbia,"—

So as to read—

Upon all or any portion of its property in the District of Columbia, real or personal, its contracts, etc.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is better, but it does not go far enough.

Mr. HEMPHILL. What is the objection to that?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. My objection is just this, that it allows this company to bond every dollar of property that it acquires here in this District.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It can do that anyhow.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. It ought not to do it. It is the curse of to-day that corporations issue their capital stock and then bond their property for more than it is worth. The amount is at the discretion of the directors.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You can not prevent it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. You can not if you vote this way, of course; but now is the time to prevent it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This is limited to the cost of the property.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Can not a man mortgage his property if he wishes to?

The amendment of Mr. HEMPHILL was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Now, I offer another amendment to the same section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 5, after the word "exceed," insert the words "one-half."

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Now, Mr. Chairman, the effect of that will be to allow these people to bond their property here to the extent of one-half, and that is enough. If this House, with its boasted antimonopolistic tendencies, wants an opportunity to fight monopoly and to vote in the interest of the people, here it is. I offer it to you free of charge.

A MEMBER. We are fighting monopoly by this bill.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey, the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Even the People's party vote against this amendment. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 136.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] has a motion to strike out pending.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I will withdraw that. I have done my duty in calling attention to this enormous grant of power.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, section 5, page 6, strike out the word "bonds" and insert the words "capital stock," and strike out all of the clause of section 5, after the word "construction," in line 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE), there were—ayes 8, noes 162.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk began the reading of the sixth section.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask to offer a substitute for the fifth section, which I wish the Clerk to read.

Mr. MEREDITH. I raise the point of order that the Clerk has commenced to read the next section.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman rose in his seat, and the Chair saw that he was endeavoring to attract the attention of the Chair when the Clerk began to read. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by substituting for section 5 the following:
"That the said railroad company shall have power to mortgage any property it may acquire within the District of Columbia to secure any indebtedness authorized by the charter of the company."

Mr. JOSEPH. D. TAYLOR. I offer that as a substitute for the entire section. I think it will obviate the difficulty which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] finds in the fifth section, and I do not think that the friends of the measure will have any objection to it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to have that read again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the substitute.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection to that.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, let us vote it down.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Very well; we will take a vote on that.

The amendment of Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the construction of the extension of the road hereby authorized shall begin within two years after the approval of this act and be completed within three years from said date.

The following amendment was recommended by the committee:

In line 2 strike out "two years" and insert "one year;" and in line 3 strike out "three" and insert "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of section 6 the following:
"And unless it is completed within two years from said date then this act and all the rights and privileges thereby granted shall cease and determine."

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. ATKINSON. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 136.

Mr. ATKINSON. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from Pennsylvania can not easily get on his feet, I ask that he consent to withdraw the point of no quorum and have a vote upon the bill.

Mr. ATKINSON. Not just now.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Possibly we could postpone it a few minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Possibly you can make the arrangement later.

Mr. ATKINSON. I ask the Chair to substitute the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN] for myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN] as teller in conjunction with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

The committee again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 6, noes 156.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And with those present, but not voting, would make a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 6, the noes 156, and the amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. ATKINSON. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think the gentleman is a little late on that. He has plenty other amendments.

Mr. ATKINSON. I made the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise for that purpose?

Mr. ATKINSON. I certainly did, as quickly as the remark fell from the lips of the Chairman.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know if the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina is not in order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The announcement of the result was made before the Chair recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania as rising.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I made my motion, and the gentleman rose and said nothing at all.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to be allowed some privilege on account of his disability, and the difficulty with which he can get on his feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will accept the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that he rose to make the point of no quorum; and the point of no quorum is pending. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3591), and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the House do now take a recess until 5 minutes of 12 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House was declared in recess.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. SCULL, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (S. 520) granting an increase of pension to Oliver P. Goodwin. (Report No. 2209.)

By Mr. PATTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs: The bill (S. 2332) for the relief of Frederick Gramm. (Report No. 2211.)

Also, the bill (S. 1131) for the relief of Adolph Loschmidt. (Report No. 2212.)

By Mr. STONE of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims: The bill (H. R. 10060) for the relief of Augustus P. Green. (Report No. 2213.)

By Mr. PARRETT, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (S. 762) granting a pension to Elise Alden McCawley. (Report No. 2214.)

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4794) for the removal of the charge of desertion from the record of John Cassidy, and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 10093) to fix the dates for the convening of the regular sessions of the Congress of the United States—to the Committee on Election of President and Vice-President and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. WALKER: A bill (H. R. 10094) to secure to the people the advantages accruing from the issue of circulating promissory notes by banks, to increase the volume of such notes, and to supervise and control banks by officers of the United States—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. TERRY: A bill (H. R. 10095) authorizing the construction of a free bridge across the Arkansas River connecting Little Rock and Argenta—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LODGE: A bill (H. R. 10096) to provide suitable medals for the survivors of the officers and crew of the United States sloop-of-war Cumberland—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 10, 1893.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 3, 1887, certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the States of California, Kentucky, and Indiana, at the elections held therein on the 8th of November, 1892, as certified to him by the governors of those States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Chief of Engineers, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of July 22, 1892, estimates of the cost of converting Rock Creek into a closed sewer; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 6th instant, a copy of the latest report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson on the introduction of domesticated reindeer in Alaska; which was read.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that that communication may be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made in the absence of objection. To what committee shall the communication be referred?

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. DAWES. I think it had better be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER. In my opinion that would be the proper reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10038) making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SAWYER presented a memorial of 216 Congregational churches in Wisconsin, comprising 15,000 members, and a memorial of the Congregational Church of Hartland, Wis., remonstrating against any repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. WILSON presented petitions of Lynn Union, No. 446, Farmers' Alliance, of Hawthorne; of Algona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Hobart, and of Iowa State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, all in the State of Iowa, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of Le Claire Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church of Iowa, and of churches and a business men's committee of Elgin, Ill., remonstrating against the repeal of the act closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of the Republican Territorial central committee of the Territory of Arizona, praying for the admission of Arizona into the Union as a State; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of the Business Men's Association of Davenport, Iowa, praying for the reduction of letter postage to 1 cent per ounce; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Iowa State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, praying that the manufacturers of oleomargarine, butterine, and like compounds be compelled to color their manufactures pink; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present a petition of Local Union No. 4, of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of St. Louis, Mo., signed by George Mearer and W. E. Douds, committee, stating that there are to-day over 10,000 people out of employment in St. Louis alone, and praying for the suspension of immigration into the United States. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Immigration, and, with the accompanying papers, printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented the petition of B. H. Dunning and other citizens of East Jordan, Mich., praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill and for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. FELTON presented a memorial of the American Brotherhood of Steamboat Pilots of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the granting of registry or license to alien officers employed on American steamships; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FELTON. I present a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, the Traffic Association of California, the California State Board of Trade, the San Francisco Produce Exchange, the Board of Trade of San Francisco, the Board of Trade of Oakland, the Geographical Society of the Pacific, the California League of Progress, and the Manufacturers' Association, respectfully but urgently praying that Congress will promptly enact such conservative legislation as shall secure the speedy construction of the Nicaragua Canal, under the control of the Government of the United States and with such provisions as will obtain the completion of this beneficent work at the lowest possible cost, thereby securing cheap tolls to our producers and merchants. The petitioners further pray that the Government of the United States shall consider and comply with the unanimous demand of our fellow citizens all over the Republic in securing an interoceanic highway through Nicaragua in the interest of our general welfare, industrially, commercially, and as a means of national defense. They state that no subject presented at this time to the American people is of greater moment to their prosperity, and with their unanimous approval and urgent request they respectfully represent that Congress should act promptly and decisively in obtaining "an American canal under American control."

I desire to have unanimous consent to have the petition printed in the RECORD. It is not voluminous. It does not embrace over a paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to having the petition printed as a document, but we have agreed on both sides to object to the printing of petitions in the RECORD. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] objects on the other side and I think I shall have to take the privilege of objecting on this side.

Mr. FELTON. I would not make the request, but the petition is signed by a half dozen prominent associations of California on a subject in which they have a deep interest. If Senators on the other side fail to object I am very sorry that the Senator from Ohio does so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the Senator from California that I have no objection to the petition being printed as a document, and in that form it is much better to be distributed, but to print petitions in the RECORD is to increase the cost of printing to an untold amount. Probably the cost of printing in the RECORD would be twenty times as much as if printed in the form of a document, and to print it in document form will answer every purpose.

Mr. FELTON. I do not think it would receive any consideration if printed in the form of a document, and unless distributed it would be unnecessary. Therefore I will not ask that the petition be printed as a document. I move that it lie on the table, the bill having been reported.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY presented a memorial of the Evangelical Lutheran, the Presbyterian, and other churches of Duncannon, Pa.; a memorial of the Central Presbyterian Church of Mercer County, Pa.; a memorial of the Mount Zion Lutheran Church of York, Pa., and a memorial of a number of citizens and churches of Elgin, Ill., remonstrating against any repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. WASHBURN presented a memorial of the commissioners of the sinking fund of the city of New York, remonstrating against the erection of a bridge over the Hudson River with approaches at or about Seventieth street in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Presbyterian Synod of Minnesota, remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented petitions of the State Grange of Minnesota; of 38 citizens of Nicolet County, and of 29 citizens of Sibley County, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of La Junta, Colo., praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of 42 citizens of Selma, Ala., and vicinity, remonstrating against the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLODGETT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 9433) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Mercer Slaughter, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1795) to increase the pension of A. J. Copenhaver, late a soldier in the Mexican war, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8038) granting a pension to William M. Watson, of Walker County, Ga., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9286) to create the California Débris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3676) for the relief of R. L. Jennings, late postmaster at Marshall, Tex., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7633) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3329) to increase the area of the Northern Cheyenne or Tongue River Indian Reservation, Montana, and to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle the claims of bona fide settlers within the present reservation and the addition thereto, and to make appropriation for that purpose, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 651) for the relief of Aaron Van Camp and V. P. Chapin & Co., submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2243) for the relief of W. G. Piper, of Moscow, Idaho, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3670) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Lang, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

JOSIAH PICKETT.

Mr. SAWYER. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3564) for the relief of Josiah Pickett, to report it with an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the bill may be considered now. It is very short.

Mr. SAWYER. I hope the bill will be considered at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, in line 7, before the word "satisfied," to strike out the word "reasonably;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be directed to settle the account of Josiah Pickett, of Worcester, Mass., formerly postmaster at that place, by crediting to said Josiah Pickett all such sums received by him as interest on public moneys deposited as the Postmaster-General shall be satisfied have been applied by said Josiah Pickett for public purposes in connection with his office as postmaster aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. AND JOSEPH M. CARNELL.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands, I report back with amendments the bill (S. 3649) for the relief of William J. Cornell and Joseph M. Cornell, the only amendment being a change in the spelling of the name. It is an important private bill, will only occupy the time of reading, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be read for information.

After reading, the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $800, $400 of which shall be paid to William J. Carnell, on account of an overpayment of that sum to the receiver of the United States land office at Lagrande, Oregon, on land entry numbered 4298, for the south half of section 27, township 3 north, of range 30 east, and $400 thereof to Joseph M. Carnell, on account of an overpayment by him of that sum to the receiver, on land entry numbered 4292, for the north half of section 27, township 3 north, range 30 east, these entries having been made under the third section of the act of September 29, 1890, and the parties having been, by mistake of the officers of the land office, required to pay $2.50 per acre instead of the legal price thereof, namely, $1.25 cents per acre.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Committee on Public Lands will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 6 and 11 change the spelling of the name from "Cornell" to "Carnell."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 9 strike out the word "southern" and insert the word "south," so as to read "south half."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. The amendments merely correct mistakes made in printing.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of William J. Carnell and Joseph M. Carnell."

PRINTING OF PURE-FOOD BILL.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report a Senate resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 500 copies of Senate bill No. 1 be printed as reported by the Committee on Agriculture of the House for the use of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MANDERSON. This is a reprint of what is known as the pure-food bill. The printing is desired by the committee.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON introduced a bill (S. 3699) for the relief of John Bryson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 3705) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in Oklahoma Territory and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BERRY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

LEWIS D. ALLEN.

Mr. COCKRELL. When the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], chairman of the Committee on Claims, reported adversely the bill (S. 1421) for the relief of Lewis D. Allen, I asked that it might be placed on the Calendar until I could examine the report. I ask now that the bill be indefinitely postponed, as the committee recommended. I have examined the report. I wish simply to rid the Calendar of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that there are two bills in the interest of this same claimant, both reported adversely, I think.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the other bill has already been postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL. Perhaps so.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not find the other bill on the Calendar. This is the only one I find.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the other bill was perhaps indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think any one asked to have the other bill placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely, if there be no objection.

J. C. IRWIN & CO. AND OTHERS.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill (S. 21) for the relief of J. C. Irwin & Co. and C. A. Perry & Co. was reported adversely on the 27th of January, 1892, from the Committee on Claims by the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], and was placed on the Calendar. I have conversed with him, and he makes no objection to my request that the bill and adverse report be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator from Missouri called my attention to this particular case and suggested that some other and further evidence bearing upon the matter of the claim would be presented. Upon that account I think that the bill should be recommitted to the committee. I have no objection to the course suggested.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL QUARANTINE POWERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business, that order is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine power and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. WHITE, to add to the last section of the bill the following:

All the provisions of this act shall expire on the 1st day of January, 1895.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] has the floor, I understand. Does he wish to proceed now?

Mr. CALL. I will yield the floor to the Senator from New Hampshire if he desires to make some observations at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there can be no doubt in the mind of any Senator as to the importance of the legislation contemplated by the bill under consideration. It is but proper, however, that I should say, as a member of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases which reported the bill, that it had not a very thorough consideration in committee, and it was understood that each member of the committee might express on the floor his own judgment as to the proposed legislation, and vote as his conscience might dictate.

I have been greatly interested in reading the discussion of this bill during my enforced absence from the Senate. I was yesterday interested in hearing the assurances from the lips of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], the chairman of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, that in his judgment this legislation was constitutional. I was reminded during his speech of the fact that when the bill to establish a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases was before the same committee, the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] were both very clearly of the opinion that the proposed legislation in that bill was unconstitutional, and those Senators so reported to the Senate; but the bill now under consideration, the provisions of which not only authorize the use of public money with which to extirpate cholera and yellow fever, but also smallpox, diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles, and chickenpox, as well—for it covers all forms of contagious and epidemic diseases—is constitutional.

I do not quarrel with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases as to the view he takes of this bill, but simply wish to suggest to him that he ought to reverse the views he announced on the bill to establish a national sanitarium.

Tuberculosis has destroyed in this country during the last twenty years a hundred times more people than cholera and yellow fever combined, and hence, in my judgment, has a superior claim for legislation by Congress.

After the bills relating to quarantine and immigration have been considered, I propose to ask action upon the sanitarium bill, which stands adversely reported by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. President, in reading the discussions on this question in this Chamber last week, I was very much surprised to find that some severe animadversions were indulged in concerning the Supervisor-General of the Marine Hospital Service. I desire simply, in a single word, to say that from my personal and professional acquaintance with that gentleman he should be shielded from any personal attack on this floor. He is a man who stands high in his profession, a man who is recognized the country over, and perhaps the world over, as a distinguished sanitarian. It strikes me that it was proper that that officer should be interested in legislation such as is now before the Senate, and that he might properly, whether he did or not, come to the Capitol for the purpose of making suggestions concerning such legislation as this.

Why should he not interest himself in legislation of this kind? Is it not more sensible for a man high in his profession, at the head of the only medical bureau of the Government, to undertake even to instruct Senators as to matters of this nature rather than to receive instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury, who knows no more about medicine than the Cardiff giant does of spectral analysis.

On this question of quarantine, I desire to remark that "quarantine" originally meant a forty-days detention of a vessel suspected of having an infectious or contagious disease on board or one arriving from an infected port; during which period intercourse with the shore was forbidden, and passengers and crew, infected and healthy alike, were confined together in violation of every sanitary requirement or precaution. Such a system of quarantine—the period of detention only varying—is still in vogue in some European countries, in the Spanish West Indies, Mexico, South America, and even in the United States in a modified degree, as we had occasion to learn last year. It is utterly unscientific and barbarous.

The lower in the scale of civilization and of maritime commercial importance, the less informed as to the resources of modern sanitary science—and, consequently, the more readily a prey to unreasoning panic—the greater the reliance on the arbitrary time-detention quarantine.

The pathetic story which the distinguished Senator from Tennessee yesterday gave of the ravages of the yellow fever in Memphis should be qualified by the remark that that epidemic was due almost wholly, as was well known to the medical profession at the time, to the filthy condition of the city of Memphis, which furnished food for that epidemic. Perhaps the Senator from Tennessee will say that that fact is a reason for Federal interference; but, Mr. President, the Government of the United States can not undertake to keep every man's cellar and back yard clean and undertake to supervise the condition of the streets and alleys of the great cities of this country.

The best exposition of quarantine that I have seen is in a series of resolutions passed by the Illinois State board of health. The principles laid down strike me as being so sound and sensible that I will take the liberty to read them, that they may go into the RECORD for the information of the Senate and of the country. Those resolutions are three in number:

Resolved, That the first principle of modern maritime sanitation—"quarantine," so called—in dealing with an infected vessel or vehicle, or one concerning which there exists reasonable suspicion of infection, demands the immediate removal therefrom, first, of every individual, passenger and crew; and second, of all material capable of being the nest of infection and contagion, and the immediate enforcement of proper measures of medical inspection, sanitary treatment, disinfection, etc.

Resolved, That no sanitary authority—national, State, or municipal—is justified in enforcing a quarantine of detention until it has secured provision for the decent and proper care of those detained, such care involving the removal of the sick to isolation hospitals, and the comfortable shelter and subsistence of those detained during the incubation period, with competent medical oversight during such period.

Resolved, That under no circumstances is an arbitrary period of detention justifiable; but the duration of detention, as to persons, should be determined by the period of incubation of the particular disease to be guarded against; and as to things, by the time required for the disinfection of material, and for the cleansing of the vessel or vehicle so that it may be safely and promptly returned to its proper employment.

Those principles are in the line of modern ideas concerning this question of quarantine, and, in my judgment, if a bill was drafted on that line it would be infinitely preferable to the bill now under consideration by the Senate.

The Secretary of the Illinois State board of health says:

The present status of quarantine in the United States, the national system, is imperfect for want of adequate and definite legislation. State quarantines are costly, conflicting, capricious, and wholly unreliable. They are costly in that they often impose unnecessary and vexatious restrictions upon travel and traffic. They are conflicting because they are the outcome of varying degrees of civilization and intelligence. They are capricious because too often the response to popular clamor accented by popular superstition and popular fear. They are unreliable because all experience, foreign and domestic, proves the futility of quarantines of exclusion and sanitary cordons between States and communities on the same continent.

A national quarantine—or rather a national sanitary service—would impose the minimum of interference with commerce while securing the maximum of protection to the public health.

Let Congress enact that no immigrant shall enter the United States except through certain specified ports of entry on the sea-board and frontier, at which ports suitable sanitary depots shall be established and maintained under the control of the National Government. Then let the administration of such depots see to it that no immigrant passes the sea-board or frontier into the interior except through the portals of a bathhouse, nor his personal effects and belongings except through the washtub and disinfecting chamber—and this if for no other reason than that the conditions of the steerage passage are conducive neither to cleanliness nor health.

If from a healthy port, on a healthy vessel, and himself healthy, the detention of the immigrant for such purposes of purification would be a matter of a few hours only; if communicable disease existed or was suspected, the period of detention would vary according to the character of the disease, and he would, if sick, be properly treated and cared for in hospital under conditions most favorable for his speedy recovery. But under no circumstances should any immigrant or his belongings be allowed access to the interior until he and his had first been rendered incapable of carrying and spreading the exotic diseases and pestilences.

This would render State quarantines unnecessary, since it is the infected immigrant who furnishes the chief cause for their being. It would also render the restriction or prohibition of immigration unnecessary from the standpoint of the sanitarian, and without reference to the social, economic, and political questions involved.

It may be added that the prohibition of immigration as a measure designed to exclude contagious disease is not defensible. It is not in accord with accepted sanitary principles. It is unscientific and calculated to beget a false sense of security in a vicarious protection, which would lead to a neglect of or indifference to the necessity for personal and public hygiene.

I believe in a national quarantine system, but the bill under consideration falls far short of that. It is a mixture of State and national authority, and, in my opinion, there will be conflicts innumerable when that bill, if enacted into a law, comes to be enforced. It is at best tentative legislation. As such it may be wise to adopt it, but for that reason also it strikes me that the proposition of the Senator from Louisiana that the provisions of the bill shall expire in two years from March 4 next is a sensible one.

The present agitation of this question is due to the fear of a cholera epidemic, and its agitation has disquieted and alarmed the public mind.

It is a well-recognized fact among medical men that fear is among the leading causes of the spread of cholera during the prevalence of that disease, and if a cholera epidemic does not prevail in this country next year it will not be the fault of Congress and the newspapers of the country.

Let me add, if proper sanitary regulations are adopted and enforced in the cities of the United States very little fear need be apprehended of a cholera epidemic.

The remedy is in the hands of the people, and all the legislation that Congress can enact will not shut out the disease in the absence of good sewerage, pure water, and clean streets in our American cities.

But undoubtedly there is a public demand for legislation of some kind. This bill is imperfect; but let it be passed, terminating at the time suggested by the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

During the next two years medical and health societies will have had time to carefully study the subject, and a complete and comprehensive bill will be the result.

I trust the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana will be adopted; but whether adopted or not, I shall feel it my duty, while entertaining some opinions in opposition to some of the provisions of this bill, to support it by my vote.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the question of the constitutionality of this legislation as respects interstate commerce was under consideration by me when I closed my remarks last evening. Upon that subject I think th re can be no reasonable doubt. The authority to regulate interstate commerce is precisely the same as that which is given to regulate the foreign commerce of the country. Can it be supposed, under any reasonable construction of the Constitution, that if within a State, upon a train or upon a vessel passing into another State, there is a case of cholera, there is a case of epidemic and contagious disease, which is liable if carried into a State which has no legislation upon the subject to affect the entire commerce between the two States—can it be supposed that there is no authority in the Federal Government to prescribe the rules and regulations which shall control the passage of the person or of the freight which is liable to convey infection? Is not such a fact destructive of commerce? Can there be any commerce between the States in the presence of a great contagion, of an infection which is general?

In the State of Florida, when the yellow fever made its appearance there, the entire commerce was suspended; and if there had been no legislation upon the subject the fears of the people and the almost inevitable sickness and probable death that would have attended the majority of the people engaged in commercial transactions would have suspended commerce between the part of the State where this disease existed and other States.

So it seems to be a question as to which there can be no doubt, that the existence of this power and its exercise is absolutely necessary to the preservation of commerce between the States. It can not be conceived that there is a power in the Federal Government to regulate commerce, and yet that that does not include all those things which are absolutely necessary to the existence of commerce.

Again, the powers of the Federal Constitution must be construed in harmony with those granted to the States, and those granted to the States, where they cross the line of Federal authority, must, in like manner, be qualified by the existence of this power in the Federal Government.

In what respect does it interfere with the autonomy of a State and with the powers of a State in regard to its police and the preservation of the health of its people, that the Federal Government should have authority to protect the interstate commerce of the country from those things which would be destructive of it? I can not conceive of any difficulty in the entire harmony of these two powers, nor can I imagine that any State would be unwilling to allow the Federal Government—if the exercise of this power is confined strictly to those things which affect commerce between States—to allow the exercise of jurisdiction over such places within the territory of the States as might be necessary for places of sanitation, of detention, and of disinfection of baggage and persons.

Mr. President, the existence of this danger from epidemic diseases, from cholera, is imminent. It has extended over a great part of Europe. I have here a table of the percentage, collected from imperfect authority, of the deaths by cholera up to the month of September in European countries. In some cases, for instance in the town of Bakoo and other parts of Russia, the deaths are reported as high as 75 per cent. Here we have an alarming picture of the danger which may be extended to this country from this epidemic. The deaths vary from 75 per cent coming down to 4 per cent and 8 per cent in different portions of the country. One hundred and forty-four thousand deaths, under this imperfect chronicle, up to the month of September, during a period, I think, of hardly more than two months, are recorded for a few provinces in the kingdom and empire of Russia.

The whole evidence collected by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] and the Committee on Immigration in connection with the members of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases—and I think he is justly entitled to high consideration for the diligence and the ability which he has shown in the collection of this evidence and these facts—exhibits the fact that there is concurrence of opinion throughout the entire medical profession and health authorities of this and foreign countries as to the imminence of this danger from cholera.

As to the methods by which it shall be prevented, I read yesterday the opinion of a distinguished medical man in the State of Florida, which has been confirmed by the statement read from the Illinois board of health by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that the efficient remedies were sanitation, disinfection, and places of temporary detention. This evidently requires that it shall be done not only in one place, but in all places where there is an importation of infected freights or passengers or immigrants.

In the reports of the Marine Hospital Service we find a report from one physician calling attention to the danger of the distribution of cholera through the importation of sugar, and the handling of the sacks in which the sugar is placed for commercial purposes by persons having cholera, and from persons in localities where cholera exists. Here is a source of danger which requires careful attention. Here is a species of freight, if this opinion be true, and it seems to be a reasonable one, which would require the utmost care of disinfection.

How is such disinfection to be had? Shall Florida be required to have her system of sanitation and disinfection, which she has established at a great expense to her people, and Louisiana be without it or Alabama be without it or New York be without it? Of what avail will the most efficient local sanitation or quarantine be when the adjacent places and the adjacent States are without it? The necessity, therefore, for some central authority extending all over the country is a manifest one, and it seems to me one as to which there should be no doubt.

In reference to the proposition that this should be a temporary law, I have no objection to complying with the request of the Senator from Louisiana upon that subject; but I am satisfied that the interests of this country require a permanent law. The bill which we have now before us for consideration is not, in my opinion, as the Senator from Tennessee has stated, what it ought to be. There may not be time for the consideration of such a measure. The act, which should be permanent, should provide, according to the best authorities, a place within every State where immigrants and passengers from foreign countries might be required to land.

I do not think that, under the constitutional provision upon this subject, we could limit the places where immigrants and passengers shall land from foreign countries to any one State, or that we could discriminate by any regulation of any kind as between the ports of the different States, forbidding the entering into them of passengers and freight; but the constitutional requirement would be complied with by providing one port in each State where all immigrants and all passengers, in a time of public danger, might be required to land, and at such place the proper system and methods of sanitation and disinfection might be had.

In the State of Florida, which lays in close proximity to Cuba and the West India Islands, where the yellow fever has become perennial and where in its worst forms it is at any time and at all times liable to be imported into the United States through the almost daily intercourse which exists between portions of the State of Florida and Cuba and the West India Islands, the port of Tampa has, by reason of its railroad connections, become almost the exclusive port on the mainland at which these immigrants and these passengers and this freight arrive. Under the enlightened administration of the health board of that State by Dr. Porter, of Key West, president of the board and a former surgeon of the United States Army, and by Dr. Burgess, an agent and employé of the Marine Hospital Service stationed in Havana, they have adopted a system of maritime sanitation with a disinfecting apparatus belonging to the State which has been a complete protection and has eliminated from the commerce between Cuba and the other West India Islands and the State of Florida and the commerce of the United States passing through the State of Florida all danger of infection. Since the establishment of this system there has been no introduction of this most dangerous and deadly disease into the United States from that source.

So in regard to Pensacola under the influence of Dr. Anderson, of the State board of health, and other gentlemen in connection with the Marine Hospital Service coöperating with them, they have been enabled to make that place entirely secure against the visitations of yellow fever which formerly entered at that port.

Now, this is a step in advance in the direction of maritime sanitation. It requires a place of detention, a place of disinfection, a place where there is the apparatus devised by modern science for the purpose of thoroughly disinfecting the vessel, the passengers, the freight, and all this has been reduced to a demonstration. Hence it is we find in that valuable mass of evidence collected by the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service and lying upon my table here, that this opinion is confirmed by all distinguished scientists and medical men who have been charged with the protection of the people of Russia and Germany and other countries of Europe against the cholera in the recent epidemic.

The plan of sanitation, and short detention, and disinfection has been found to be a secure protection. There is no question, while cholera is not as liable to be introduced by passengers in the cabin as it is by the great mass of immigrants in the steerage of a ship, that it is not a respecter of persons, and that it will be found in the cabin as well as in the steerage. While in view of the facts that at many of our different ports there is no adequate mode of disinfecting and protecting the community from danger from those people except by their exclusion, it is certainly true that it is incumbent upon the United States to see that in every locality where there is intercourse with foreign countries, where this disease or any other infectious or contagious disease is prevailing, it is the duty of the United States to see that that commerce shall be confined, so far as it has the power to do it, to the places where the passengers and the freight of commerce may be thoroughly disinfected and made safe to enter into the country.

The ravages of this disease and of the yellow fever are almost equal to those of the plague in ancient times, which nearly destroyed the population of some of the countries of Europe, which actually destroyed all commerce and made those cities a desolation, and it is a possible thing to-day that the same causes may produce the same results. There is poverty in all our great cities. The circumstances which surround a vast number of the people in every crowded center of population are such as to make disease almost natural to them, and when it comes in an epidemic form, under our present social and industrial system, it will find vast numbers of the people dependent upon public charity and public measures for their protection against any form of general epidemic disease.

The Committee on Immigration should have, in connection with the question of immigration, the question of the introduction of epidemic disease by means of immigration; and with the Senator from Tennessee, as I am informed, and with the Senator from Maryland, who represented his committee, have taken evidence upon this subject which clearly indicates that there is no question of more pressing importance resting upon this Congress than legislation for the adoption of the discoveries of modern science, which have been proved to be efficacious for the prevention of the general spread of this disease.

The bill, therefore, of the Senator from Tennessee has precedence in importance to any which is now before this Congress or which is liable to be before this Congress. It is not without the limits of a reasonable probability from the experience of Europe that if this disease obtains a firm hold upon this country, not less than one million human beings will be its victims, and that there will be a suspension of industry which will cause a loss of money, an interruption of commerce, that can not be estimated even by the hundreds of millions of dollars; but questions of humanity are paramount to these.

We find in the Government of Great Britain the proclamation of the Queen establishing a board of health in the province of Canada and clothing it with the same discretionary powers which are given in this bill. So we find in the legislation of Germany and of France and in the royal orders and decrees of the governments of those countries that this discretionary power is vested in a board of intelligent men under the control of the government—of physicians, scientists, and practical men—with power to suspend intercourse, to isolate cases, to provide places of detention, and to fix the places of maritime sanitation. These are the means which have been adopted everywhere.

The question, then, is how far the bill before us answers this purpose? I think there are some criticisms upon it which are perhaps just. I find in the first section of the bill a provision which says:

That it shall be unlawful for any merchant ship or other vessel from any foreign port or place to enter any port of the United States except in accordance with the provisions of this act—

That is all very well, but the bill goes on to say—

and with such rules and regulations of State and municipal health authorities as may be made in pursuance of, or consistent with, this act—

That is all very well, too, if it can be enforced; but the bill goes on to say—and any such vessel which shall enter, or attempt to enter, a port of the United States in violation thereof shall forfeit to the United States a sum, to be awarded in the discretion of the court, not exceeding $5,000.

Mr. President, I am afraid that this provision of the bill is incompetent to confer jurisdiction upon a court of the United States to inflict the penalty for a violation of a State law or municipal regulation. The bill requires that it shall not only be a law of the United States, but also a law of the State, for it says:

Except in accordance with the provisions of this act and with such rules and regulations of State and municipal health authorities.

It is true that in the Siebold case, relating to State election laws, the Supreme Court decided that an offense against the State law could be punished in the United States court when an act of Congress so provided, and the reasoning seems applicable to this case, but it does not seem to me to be clear that this case would come within the reasoning of the case.

It seems to me that it would be a good objection to any of the penalties sought to be enforced in the jurisdiction of the United States courts, to say that the law requires this to be an offense not only against this act, but also against the rules and regulations of the health boards of the State, and that both, not one or the other, must be violated. If it were not an offense against this act, but only against that of the State, it may not be competent for this bill or any bill to give jurisdiction to a United States court to inflict a penalty for a violation of a State law, not an election law, but only a regulation of a municipal board of health in a State.

I shall not undertake to delay this bill, because the supervision which it establishes and the means which it will provide, and the money which will follow the passage of the bill under an appropriation by Congress, will in my opinion be, with the assistance of the Supervising Surgeon-General and the organization of the Marine Hospital Service and the State boards of health, largely efficacious to protect the country against the cholera and against the approach of epidemic disease.

I think I may speak somewhat advisedly upon this subject, because in the State of Florida we have had tested fully the efficacy of this supervision by the Federal authorities in coöperation with the State officials; not that they have supplemented the intelligent administration by Drs. Porter and Warren, of the State board, with any new ideas, but that they have stimulated them, they have furnished them constant information which otherwise would not have been accessible to them; by their station in Havana, and the intelligent and watchful attention of Dr. Burgess, they have been enabled, in concert with Dr. Burgess and officers of the bureau at that place, to devise such a system of thorough inspection there and such a system of sanitation upon arrival here as to effect the purpose of security against the importation of disease. Therefore, I think I speak advisedly when I say that whatever may be the defects of the bill before the Senate, however much it may fail to attain the ends which must finally be attained, of not only a general supervision, but a thorough sanitation and disinfection of all baggage and of all passengers, which is evidently the modern system, however the bill may fail in those respects, it will be largely efficacious in the general supervision which will be extended over the whole country, and in the warnings which will be given to the different localities and the different State officers, and even to public opinion.

We have seen that stimulated by this information and by the efficient administration of the Marine Hospital Service; we have seen that in the city of New York, in the late threatened epidemic of cholera there, public opinion was so aroused as to bring out very large voluntary contributions for purposes of sanitation in the city. In this respect alone, in the information and the warnings which will be communicated to the authorities throughout the country, this bill and the appropriations to follow, it will have very great influence, and I think be largely efficacious.

In this connection I desire to say that the services of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] in the Committee of Immigration, in awakening public attention and in directing intelligent consideration to the subject, have been of great value and great interest to the country.

I am in favor of this bill, not only because I regard it as entirely constitutional, but because I consider the exercise of this constitutional power to be one of the most beneficent which can possibly be considered.

In regard to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE], if he thinks that it would make this bill more acceptable to the people of Louisiana, while I am in favor of a bill which shall be permanent, which shall bring into the consideration of these questions of sanitation, of contagion, and of epidemic disease, the intelligent opinion of the medical profession outside of the Marine Hospital Service, while I think that this bill should contain a provision authorizing the President of the United States to call into his councils the eminent scientists and sanitarians from all the States, and to have him direct them to apply themselves to the investigation in different localities of this question, while I think the medical profession outside of the Marine Hospital Service should be made use of by the Government equally with that inside, although this bill may be in that respect deficient, and a general bill and a permanent bill might very well be made which contained these provisions, yet I am disposed to accord to the Senator from Louisiana, in view of the fact that his people are largely opposed to the passage of any bill, that they should have an opportunity to see the beneficent operation of this act during the next two years. During that time a bill may be perfected which shall comprehend not only the feature of employing under the Government when occasion shall demand it the medical force, the surgeons of the Army, and the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, but shall also include an authority in the President, in times of danger, to appoint civilians to temporarily make use of eminent men in the medical profession in every locality, to assemble a council of health, when it shall be necessary to do so. I am willing, however, to take the bill as it now stands, if we can do no better. I had prepared a bill which I think more fully meets the views of the people of Florida, but inasmuch as there seems to be a doubt whether or not a new bill could obtain at this period of time that consideration which would be necessary for its passage, I think we had better adopt the bill introduced by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. President, the question of the public health under our modern system of rapid intercourse, of intercommunication under our system by which vast multitudes of people of all the countries of the world, the old and the new, subjected to every variety of social condition, of want, of indigence, which fosters disease, rapid transit, the almost instantaneous facilities of communication, render the question of the measure by which the public health shall be protected in every country matters of the greatest importance.

This bill should contain, if there were time for its consideration, a provision for an international agreement for sanitation between the Island of Cuba, the other West India Islands, and the United States, and between Europe and America. Nothing but an international agreement can adequately protect this country against invasion occasionally by the most virulent and fatal form of contagious and infectious disease. I suggest, however, this as a matter for consideration; but Congress must make up its mind, as the people of this country have made up their minds, that there must be legislation upon this subject in advance of any which has heretofore existed. It may be, and I think it is true in regard to immigration, if it be a necessity when there is an epidemic of contagious disease in foreign countries and in the form of an extensive plague, that they shall be confined, as recommended by the State board of health of Illinois, in their entrance to this country to some one port in each State—probably the constitutional requirement will not admit of anything else; and at such ports the Government should have the most thorough and the most complete means of disinfection and arrangement for the detention, not such as is necessary where there is no preparation for it, but such as is consistent with humanity.

I read in the reports here that in some of the quarantines established by Russia and upon the Turkish border the vilest imprisonment to which any human being was ever subjected is not worse than that prescribed by the conditions of confinement there. It is not worthy of an enlightened people that we shall allow such a condition of things to exist in our country; it is not worthy of an enlightened people that such a condition should exist as did exist in the port of New York, where the excited people refused permission to the passengers on board a vessel affected with this plague to land, and kept them there in contact with this deadly disease. Public opinion, and the enlightened public opinion, of this country demands some legislation, the most thorough and complete, to attain the end required by modern science.

But these considerations, Mr. President, it seems are not pertinent to the occasion. The general opinion seems to be that there is no time, unless we adopt this bill, in which other provisions could be made. While, therefore, I desire and I think it would be far better to have a system in which intelligent medical opinion of the different States outside of the Marine Hospital Service should be required to be made use of by the President in connection with it, while I think there should be a provision in this bill that in every State there should be one place, one port, where baggage and persons from infected countries must land, and there complete arrangements be made for their isolation, detention, and disinfection, the shortest possible time being required for that, so that commerce may be as free as possible from unnecessary obstruction—while I am of that opinion, and would, if time were allowed, introduce amendments to this bill or a substitute for it, I shall give the bill my support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHOUP in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert:

All the provisions of this act shall expire on the 1st day of January, 1895.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I desire simply to say in respect to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, that if this bill shall be passed and shall be found to be defective in any respect, the Senator from Louisiana, as well as all other Senators, knows that Congress may amend it and repeal it at any hour of any session it may choose. It is not entirely as experimental as many Senators seem to think it, for, if Senators will look at the act approved June 2, 1879, they will find that on that day an act was approved which contains every power contained in this bill; indeed, the bill which is now pending was taken from that act, the only difference being in substance that that act conferred these powers upon the National Board of Health, which then existed and which still exists in the statute, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, while this bill drops the National Board of Health out of view, and proposes to repeal the act which created it.

The only other exception to be found as between that act and the pending bill is the section which gives the President the power in cases of emergency to suspend immigration temporarily. That act expired by its own limitation, for it was amended just before its passage by a provision that the act should expire in four years from the date of its approval. It was in force for four years, from 1879 to 1883, and under its provisions the yellow fever which occurred in 1879 was promptly stamped out; there was no further importation, and the country was freed for those years from imported contagion.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee if that act went as far as the pending bill in the direction of establishing national quarantine?

Mr. HARRIS. Absolutely.

Mr. BUTLER. As far as this measure?

Mr. HARRIS. Absolutely. The Senator will find it on page 5, of the twenty-first volume, of the Statutes at Large.

Mr. BUTLER. The act expired by its own limitation?

Mr. HARRIS. It expired by its own limitation, but was in force for four years, and was enforced for four years; and so far as the sanitarians of the country generally are concerned it was universally approved.

That is all I desire to say. Let us have a vote upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], but he and I agree upon this question, and I have his permission to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to state that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] before leaving the Chamber told me he was paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but he and the Senator from Massachusetts agree, and the Senator from Alabama asked me to pair him with any one on the other side. I asked the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to pair with him, which he agreed to do.

Mr. CALL. I have announced my pair.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. I am not aware of his sentiments on this question. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has just reminded me of my pair with his colleague [Mr. HALE]. If the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] were present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. I do not know how either of them would vote.

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE]. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MORGAN (after having voted in the affirmative). Finding that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has not voted, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. VEST] is necessarily detained on business from the Chamber to-day and is paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] on general questions. But I understand they would both vote the same way on this question, and therefore they ought not to be paired.

Mr. HARRIS. Both are against the amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. They would both vote against the pending amendment, but I have not been able to procure a pair for my colleague, and as it would not change the result I simply announce the fact.

Mr. DANIEL. If necessary to make a quorum I feel at liberty to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum has voted.

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—13.

Blodgett,	Gibson,	Palmer,	White.
Butler,	Gorman,	Platt,
Gallinger,	Gray,	Vance,
George,	Mills,	Vilas,

NAYS—33.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Allison,	Felton,	McPherson,	Stockbridge,
Berry,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Cameron,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Harris,	Pettigrew,	Washburn.
Cockrell,	Higgins,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Coke.	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Dixon,	Hunton,	Sherman,
Dolph,	Irby,	Shoup,

NOT VOTING—41.

Allen,	Davis,	Kyle,	Sanders,
Bate,	Dawes,	Manderson,	Squire.
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Brice,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Call,	Hale,	Paddock,	Vest,
Carey,	Hawley,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Carlisle,	Hill,	Perkins,	Warren,
Casey,	Hiscock,	Power,	Wilson.
Colquitt,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,
Cullom,	Jones, Nev.	Quay,
Daniel,	Kenna,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. The last section, section 8, of the proposed act repeals the act which created the National Board of Health. I have a note from the secretary of the National Board of Health asking me to have that section amended so as to authorize him "to turn over to such officer as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for that purpose all books, papers, records, furniture, and other property belonging to said Board now in his charge." I think the amendment eminently proper, and I offer it to section 8, so as to authorize the secretary of the Board to turn the property over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the last section of the bill it is proposed to add:

The secretary of the National Board of Health is hereby authorized and directed to turn over to such officer as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for that purpose, all books, papers, records, furniture, and other property belonging to said Board now in his charge and contained in the Army Medical Museum.

Mr. WHITE. I ask the chairman of the committee whether there is no danger by implication of an admission that that officer is continued in the discharge of his functions up to this time?

There was a claim referred to the Committee on Claims on behalf of this officer claiming that for all these years he has been in the service and in the employ of the Government and asking an appropriation to pay him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was not that claim reported adversely by the Committee on Claims?

Mr. WHITE. Yes; but if we adopt this provision may there not be an implication resulting from it? I only ask it as a question. It strikes me so.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think it possible that there can be. The amendment simply authorizes him to turn over the property in his custody, and we have either to authorize him to turn it over to such officer as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate to receive it or he continues in the custody of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there anything that he has belonging to the Government?

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, yes; the furniture of the National Board of Health, and all the books, papers, and records.

Mr. COCKRELL. I remember very distinctly the report of the Committee on Claims, and I thought it was an excellent report, made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. I should be very sorry to give this claimant, cormorant as he is, any ground for basing another claim against the Government.

Mr. VILAS. I suggest to the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill that he could avoid the criticism which has been suggested by the Senator from Louisiana, by omitting any words in respect of the person in whose alleged charge the furniture or property of the Government has been, and simply provide by the amendment that this board shall take charge of all property formerly in the custody of the National Board of Health.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the Secretary send the amendment to the Senator from Wisconsin, and I will ask him to formulate it. My object, and my only object, is to allow that officer to rid himself of the custody of property which is not being used.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have two or three amendments to offer to the phraseology of the bill. Will the Senator from Tennessee permit me to offer them while the amendment is being modified?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly; while the Senator from Wisconsin is modifying or preparing the amendment the Senator from New Hampshire may proceed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am satisfied the chairman of the committee will accept the amendments. They merely change the phraseology. I move to strike out in section 2, line 1, the words, "all vessels at foreign ports" and insert "any vessel at any foreign port." In line 9 of the same section the singular form is used and the plural form in line 1 ought to be singular, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment, which will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In line 1, section 2, strike out after the word "that" the words "all vessels at foreign ports," and insert "any vessel at any foreign port;" so as to read:

That any vessel at any foreign port clearing for any port or place in the United States shall be required to obtain from the consul, vice-consul, or other consular officer of the United States at the port of departure, or from the medical officer where such officer has been detailed by the President for that purpose, a bill of health, in duplicate, etc.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the amendment accomplishes precisely the object which is already accomplished by the language in the section. I have no objection to changing the phraseology.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In section 3, line 24, I move to strike out the words "from another" and insert the words "or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia;" so as to conform to the phraseology used throughout the bill except in this one instance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the Chair that that amendment has already been adopted and is in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then it is all right.

Mr. VILAS. I think what I propose will probably meet the wishes of the Senator from Tennessee. I move to add at the end of the last section of the bill the following:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to obtain possession of any property, furniture, books, papers, or records belonging to the United States which are not now in the possession of an officer of the United States under the Treasury Department which were formerly in the use of the National Board of Health or any officer or employé thereof.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that the language he has employed authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain the possession of any property not now in the possession of an officer of the United States.

Mr. VILAS. Under the Treasury Department.

Mr. HARRIS. Under the Treasury Department. The National Board of Health was, I think, under the Treasury Department, and until we pass this or some other bill repealing the act which created the National Board of Health the matter of doubt is whether the office does not exist.

Mr. VILAS. To strike out the word "now" would relieve that difficulty.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply call the Senator's attention to the fact so that he may accomplish his object certainly.

Mr. VILAS. I will change it in that respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to it, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole let the bill be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. GRAY. I move in line 9, of section 3, to strike out the words "and into one State from another," and wherever that phrase occurs as qualifying or defining the jurisdiction of this national quarantine service.

I believe it would be quite sufficient in this tentative step that we are taking to confine the quarantine service and the coöperation of the Federal authorities with the State authorities to the quarantine of foreign vessels at our seaports, where hitherto all quarantine has been confined. I think that we are not prepared, without some such limitation as that proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal quarantine to the extent of giving authority to establish quarantine at any point in the United States whatsoever. I think the States are quite capable of taking charge of the quarantine of their own territory much better than they are on the seaboard where they are exposed to the foreign commerce of the country, which is exclusively under the jurisdiction and regulation of the Federal Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Delaware that in line 9 the words in print "from another" have been stricken out and that in the present form it reads:

And into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia.

Mr. GRAY. I do not quite understand what it would mean with those words stricken out. Let the Secretary read the clause as it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the clause as it now stands in the bill.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries and into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia.

Mr. GRAY. Then I move to strike out the language after the word "countries" and ending with the word "another" in line 9, because the language read means the same, and is the same enlargement of the quarantine jurisdiction proposed to be conferred upon the Federal authority at which I was aiming when I proposed the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. The precise point of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware seems to me to be (and I suppose that is what he means) to limit Congressional regulation of commerce in respect to quarantine to foreign commerce alone and to exclude any Congressional regulation of State commerce in this respect.

Mr. GRAY. As to interstate commerce.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, as to interstate commerce. That is the object of the amendment. I think it would cripple very much and destroy to a very great extent the uniformity of quarantine regulations. It is a question of course for every Senator to decide for himself. I think it strips the bill of very important powers and duties, and I shall vote against the amendment myself.

Mr. PLATT. The object of the amendment, I understand, is to prohibit the General Government from taking any measures to prevent the spread of a contagious or infectious disease from one State to another.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the object.

Mr. PLATT. Then I wish to vote against the amendment. The bill commits quite enough of the power of dealing with contagious and infectious diseases to the States. It makes the Government subordinate in all instances to State authorities, to State quarantine, to State regulations. I think there had better be in the bill some power on the part of the Government to prevent the spread of disease from one State to another, if it shall effect a lodgment. It is already expressly given, if I am not mistaken, in the statute of 1890 passed by Congress. This would seem to be going back upon what Congress has already done in that respect and would be a virtual repeal of the act of 1890.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VILAS. I have not the bill before me, but I understand it is the seventh section which contains a provision giving the President authority, in his discretion, to suspend all immigration.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the section.

Mr. VILAS. And that section has been adopted?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, as in Committee of the Whole and in the Senate.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to move to strike out of that section the word "immigration," and to insert instead "all passenger travel, but not immigration alone."

The point to the amendment which I wish to make is this: It may become necessary, in the opinion of the President, to take so violent a remedy as to prohibit the access to our shores of people from foreign lands lest they should bring here the seeds of cholera. If it be so, and the Senate be willing to invest him with that great authority, I think it ought not to be an authority which discriminates in the manner in which the word "immigration" operates a discrimination. They come in as immigrants who are poor, and who are unable to come in the general position upon the ship of first-class or second-class travelers; but they who come as immigrants, and who are necessarily classed under that term, are the friends, the relatives often of the very best people whom we have in our land, so far as faithful citizenship, good service as citizens, usefulness in the development of the country are concerned. I am unwilling that it should be decreed to prevent the friends and relatives of people who have been sent for to join their pioneer friends in this country from coming into the United States unless it shall also be provided that the exigency which shall forbid them shall be sufficient to forbid all.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection whatever to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. However, the amendment is not strictly in order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will consider the amendment inserting section 7 as open.

Mr. HARRIS. I was going to ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin may be considered, and I certainly have no objection to it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 7, as an amendment, will be considered open, and the Senator from Wisconsin has offered to it an amendment, which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 7, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the word "immigration" and insert in lieu thereof the words "all passenger travel, but not immigration alone;" so as to read:

The President shall have power to suspend all passenger travel, but not immigration alone, from such countries or places as he shall designate and for such period of time as he may deem necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PASCO. I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to line 7, and ask whether it is not proper that there should be a modification there also, as the word "immigration" occurs at that place?

Mr. VILAS. I think it would be sufficient (and I intended to make that motion) to simply strike out "immigration" there and insert "passenger travel."

Mr. HARRIS. Let the section be read as proposed to be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 7, line 7, it is further proposed to strike out the word "immigration" and insert "passenger travel;" so as to read:

SEC. 7. That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President that by reason of the existence of cholera or other infectious or contagious diseases in a foreign country there is serious danger of the introduction of the same into the United States, and that notwithstanding the quarantine defense this danger is so increased by passenger travel that a suspension of the same is demanded in the interest of the public health, the President shall have power to suspend all passenger travel, but not immigration alone, from such countries or places as he shall designate and for such period of time as he may deem necessary.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the amendment be modified by leaving out the words "but not immigration alone," which seem to me to be wholly unnecessary.

Mr. VILAS. As it would read without those words it would be the greater power conferred on the President which would include the less, and I desire to be specific.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desired to call the attention of the Senator to the point.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to state distinctly that he is not willing the President in any exigency shall suspend immigration alone, but that if he finds there is any danger from immigration of any kind he shall then suspend all passenger travel if he suspends any. That is the object of the Senator, I understand.

Mr. PALMER. I had supposed, in examining the language of the bill, that something more would be necessary in order to protect the public interest than the mere restriction upon passenger travel. I had supposed that some stronger word, such a term as to prohibit intercourse or to use means to prevent the transmission of disease from abroad would be proper subjects of prohibition. I had myself proposed to introduce the word "non-intercourse" as being a more satisfactory term.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain a license, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN]. I think we shall get through in half an hour, but it may run an hour. I will ask that he give me an hour, and I will promise not to seek any further indulgence this morning.

Mr. WASHBURN. Agreed.

Mr. HARRIS. An hour if necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to laying the unfinished business aside informally. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, my objection, and the only objection, to the pending bill is the fact that it tends to place within the grasp of the Federal Government very extraordinary powers, and a class of powers the extent of which has not yet been measured and which have never heretofore been exercised by Federal authority, I am always reluctant to increase the domain of Federal power unless some clear exigency or necessity demands it. The exigency which is supposed to justify a total embargo upon immigration, to wit, the apprehension of the invasion of contagious disease, is sufficient in the opinion of some Senators and in my opinion to justify this extraordinary power of the entire suspension of immigration.

But I do not believe that the immigration interests, so to speak, are so overwhelming, so great that they should subordinate every interest of the native-born or resident citizen of the United States, and that there can be no possible discrimination between the immigrant who comes here to settle and make his home and those who happen to be abroad and wish to return to their native home. I believe that a suspension of immigration, if that would measurably meet the exigency, is not so great a hardship upon those who are prevented from seeking a new home in this country that it could not be justified, but I do believe that we can discriminate wisely between those who come on that account and those who already have a vested interest in citizenship and home in this country, to whom this country already belongs. I think we are not doing any injustice to those who are ambitious of citizenship in this country if we ask them to pause a little until what we may think a threatened danger has passed away.

I see no great injustice in the discrimination. The people who are designated as immigrants, worthy people, people who have in the past and present contributed and are contributing to develop the wealth of the country, nevertheless come for their own benefit; they come for the improvement of their own condition: and they are not so absolutely necessary to the health and wealth of this country that we should feel we were under bond even in so grave an emergency as a threatened contagion of cholera not to interfere with their rights.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to ask my friend if he thinks the cholera would be less destructive if it were brought here by a native-born citizen who had some vested rights in this country?

Mr. GRAY. Not at all. The Senator from Texas only makes a suggestion which may or may not come to be realized. If there is danger from any passenger class, then I say, with the power to suspend it, the Congress of the United States can exercise their unquestioned authority to lay an embargo upon all passenger traffic; there is no doubt about that; but if, in the opinion of those who have considered the question, we can avert a threatened danger or deal with it successfully by a discriminating embargo, I see no injustice in discriminating in favor of our own citizens and our own people as against those who intend become citizens and to make their home among us. A qualified, provisional, temporary embargo of immigration I think will work no very great wrong if not carried to excess. Whether that discretion ought to be in the President of the United States at all is quite another question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

Mr. VILAS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. IRBY (when his name was called). I am paired on this vote with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FELTON. I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to announce (and I may as well announce it now for the future votes) that my colleague [Mr. TURPIE] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. Both Senators are absent, and I make the announcement so that it may be understood why they are not voting.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], but I will vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—17.

Berry,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Blodgett,	Harris,	Palmer,	White.
Butler,	Jones of Ark.	Vance,
Cockrell,	Kyle,	Vilas,
George,	Mills,	Voorhees,

NAYS—27.

Call,	Frye,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Gallinger,	Mitchell,	Shoup,
Chandler,	Gray,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Dawes,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	Teller,
Dixon,	Higgins,	Platt,	Washburn,
Dolph,	Hunton,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Dubois,	McMillan,	Sawyer,

NOT VOTING—43.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hoar,	Quay,
Allen,	Daniel,	Irby,	Ransom,
Allison,	Davis,	Jones of Nev.	Sanders,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Squire,
Blackburn,	Felton,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Brice,	Gordon,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Carey,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Carlisle,	Hale,	Perkins,	Vest,
Casey,	Hawley,	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Coke,	Hill,	Power,	Wilson.
Colquitt,	Hiscock,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PALMER. If it be in order, I move to amend the bill, in line 7, section 7, by striking out, after the word "by," the word "immigration," and inserting the words "the introduction of persons or property from such country;" in line 8, before the word "same," to insert "the right to introduce;" and in line 10, to strike out the words "suspend immigration" and insert "prohibit the introduction of persons and property."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are three amendments offered by the Senator from Illinois to the same section, all of which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 7, line 7, after the word "by," it is proposed to strike out "immigration" and insert "the introduction of persons or property from such country;" in line 8, before the word "same," to insert "the right to introduce;" and in line 10, to strike out the words "suspend immigration" and insert "prohibit the introduction of persons and property;" so as to read:

That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President that by reason of the existence of cholera or yellow fever or other infectious or contagious diseases in a foreign country there is series danger of the introduction of the same into the United States, and that notwithstanding the quarantine defense this danger is so increased by the introduction of persons or property from such country, that a suspension of the right to introduce the same is demanded in the interest of the public health, the President shall have power to prohibit the introduction of persons and property from such countries or places as he shall designate and for such period of time as he may deem necessary.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois to insert the words "in whole or in part," after the word "prohibit."

Mr. PALMER. I have no objection to any words that will be more comprehensive.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest an amendment to the Senator's amendment by adding the words "in whole or in part," so that the President may make a partial as well as a total prohibition. For instance, he may desire to prohibit a particular kind of property, like rags, coming into the country, which he has the power to do now.

Mr. PALMER. I am satisfied with the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois accepts the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, and the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let the amendment be reported as it will then appear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend so as to read:

SEC. 7. That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the President that by reason of the existence of cholera or yellow fever or other infectious or contagious diseases in a foreign country there is serious danger of the introduction of the same into the United States, and that notwithstanding the quarantine defense this danger is so increased by the introduction of persons or property from such country, that a suspension of the right to introduce the same is demanded in the interest of the public health, the President shall have power to prohibit, in whole or in part, the introduction of persons and property from such countries or places as he shall designate, and for such period of time as he may deem necessary.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the amendments will be adopted. It seems to me that they solve the difficulty which has been raised by the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

In deference to the judgment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], the chairman of the committee, I was about to move that the authority of the President to suspend immigration should also be extended to all other classes of travel, but with the provision that the suspension might be made either wholly or partially. A discretion to do an act of this kind in a great emergency certainly ought to have the authority coupled with it to act either in whole or in part according to the exigency.

It seems to me now that the amendments proposed by the Senator from Illinois exactly meet the case. I think the power now exists on the part of the Executive to keep out infectious property; but there is no harm in adopting the amendment in this form, and certainly there can be no objection, if the power is given to the President, in whole or in part, to exclude that which will bring cholera to these shores, to provide that he may, if the exigency demands, exclude all other passenger travel as well as immigration.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment of the Senator from Illinois, as modified at the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, is entirely satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the committee to insert section 7, will be treated as one amendment if there be no objection. The Chair hears none; and the question is on the amendment, as modified.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment to insert section 7 as amended.

Mr. VILAS. I understand the yeas and nays have been called for on the adoption of section 7.

Mr. CHANDLER. Section 7 has been adopted, has it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated that it would be considered open.

Mr. CHANDLER. As excepted from the order of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the understanding of the Chair. On this question the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I desire again to announce my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FELTON. I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 10, as follows:

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section:

Nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to authorize the United States, or any officer thereof on its behalf, to take into its ownership or control for quarantine purposes, any place in any State and to exercise therein exclusive jurisdiction without the consent of such State.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have offered that amendment for the purpose of reconciling some of the apparent conflicts of jurisdiction between the State governments and the Federal Government, which seem to be presented in the bill, and which, I am afraid, will lead to lawsuits and injunctions at a time when we want absolute certainty in our proceedings.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to inquire whether he means to prevent buildings from being taken possession of, and land as well?

Mr. MORGAN. You could not take possession of a building without taking possession of the land as well.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand; but you can take possession of land without taking possession of a building.

Mr. MORGAN. If there was no building on it, you certainly could.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would go along with the Senator in a willingness not to have this act construed to authorize any State buildings or any of the paraphernalia of a State, which had been prepared for quarantine purposes, being taken possession of there by the greater power of the National Government; but I should not be willing to put the United States where it could not anywhere on the seacoast go upon a vacant piece of land and establish there a national quarantine.

Mr. MORGAN. There is not a vacant piece of ground in any State in this Union in the sense in which the Senator speaks. The ground in every State of this Union is owned by some individual, by the State, or by the United States. Therefore, there is no vacant place; there is no place in the United States to-day where there is not an ownership of the land.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator if he means—I heard his amendment read imperfectly, perhaps—to prohibit the National Government, in case of emergency, from getting a quarantine ground anywhere on the seashore of a State when the State Legislature is not in session?

Mr. MORGAN. The State Legislature, Mr. President, could provide in advance, if it was necessary to provide, for the Government of the United States to be admitted in all cases of emergency to establish quarantine buildings, quarantine stations, or even to occupy the stations of the State. That ought to be the law of the State; but I can not alter the Constitution of the United States, which prohibits the Government of the United States from acquiring ownership or taking the occupation of any piece of land in any State without the consent of the Legislature. The plain injunction is there in the Constitution, in Article I, clause 17, and we are running right over it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why not leave it, then, on the Constitution?

Mr. MORGAN. I want to put in that express qualification so as to show that we had the Constitution in our eye, in contemplation, at the time we enacted this law, and to show that it was not the purpose of Congress to break down that provision of the Constitution, and without this qualification, I think it would be very clear that such was the purpose—and to prevent lawsuits and injunctions, as I said before, at a time when there may be very great public emergency for quarantine regulations on the part of the United States.

Mr. President, there is no use in trying to disguise the fact that this is a bill of subvention for the benefit of the State governments. It is a bill to take off the State authorities and localities the expenses of quarantine, and I think where the quarantine is leveled against the introduction of a pest from abroad, that that is a good purpose, it is a rightful purpose, and I think there are many particulars in which the State authorities and the United States authorities can coöperate. Even in the matter of making regulation, I think it is altogether practicable where the regulation itself does not necessarily carry with it the exclusive right of legislation, the exclusive right of making laws to control the place in the State where the quarantine buildings are located, where the quarantine is made effectual.

I think we had better, while we are making this emergent legislation, have some regard to our powers and duties. I very much hope, if this bill shall go to another part of the Congress of the United States, that they will, at all events, take this subject into consideration and see that there is no unseemly and improper conflict created by the bill itself between the State authorities and the Federal authorities. If we get up a question of that kind we are going to have trouble about it, and more than we have had oftentimes in the United States, particularly in respect of interstate prohibitions upon migration, immigration, etc.; we shall have the shotgun quarantine. Do we not remember how the banks of the Mississippi River, and other rivers also and the railroads, have been frequently picketed by men with shotguns in their hands to prevent the coming and going of trains and mails and everything of that sort?

Is our experience on that subject so indefinite or so very smooth as that we do not remember the trials and troubles we have had upon this question in the United States? When we come to deal with the right of a man to take his goods or his family from one State to another, and from an infected country to one that is not infected, we have as between him and the community to which he is going, a very serious conflict. We ought not to permit that conflict to go into the legislation of the country; we ought to try to smoothe it out; we ought to try to so provide as that the United States Government can exercise rightful, proper, constitutional authority within the borders of a State, which can always be done and always will be done by the State inviting or accepting our assistance in this way of raising money to enforce a quarantine. There is no difficulty about getting authority for the United States Government to assist in a quarantine when you carry the money along to pay the expenses.

The doctors may disagree, and probably will become a little strenuous and pragmatical about their respective professional authority and dignity, and the like of that. They are always quarreling with each other. It is part of the business of the profession, I believe, to underrate, undervalue, and quarrel with each other in their opinions, etc. Perhaps that is all right, but it is not very convenient, and it is not a very useful thing in an epidemic; it produces strife and contention. I have seen it in my State, when the doctors were almost by the ears, some contending that one party had the right to control; others that another party had the right to control; and the king of terrors seems to have no power at all unless he has got a doctor for a leader in some way or other.

I believe that our duty is to provide, as far as our constitutional authority can possibly go, for the prevention of the introduction of these epidemics. It is a peculiarly binding and obligatory duty at this time. In view of the great World's Fair we are to hold in Chicago, we ought to provide a system of laws here which will give an assurance to the world that we will protect the health of this country against an introduction of cholera or yellow fever or anything else in such a way as to become disastrous. If we do not do that we shall have to rely entirely upon our own people for the support of the enormous expenditures in connection with that great exhibition.

So I fully concur in the whole measure if we can only keep the Government of the United States and the State governments out of conflict; and I believe the adoption of my amendment as the last clause in this bill, showing what our purpose and intent is, will better enable the two governments, the State governments and the Federal Government, to reconcile their difficulties and disputes with each other. That is my whole purpose in offering the amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the constitutional provision to which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has reference I suppose is subdivision 17 of section 8 of Article I. Section 8 provides that Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, etc., and then, passing to the seventeenth subdivision, it provides that—

The Congress shall have power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.

It is the custom of the General Government, in providing for the purchase of land for these particular purposes, to require as a precedent to the expenditure of money that the consent of the Legislature shall be obtained. There is no objection to that; but it does not follow that the United States can not lease or occupy property or even buy property and use it for special purposes, as I understand, of the States, without the consent of the Legislature.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not deny that.

Mr. DOLPH. The only question is the question of the exercise of exclusive jurisdiction to legislate.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the point in the case.

Mr. DOLPH. And exclusive judicial jurisdiction. I do not understand that there is anything in the bill before the Senate which would prevent the United States occupying, with the consent of the owner, real property, land alone, or the land with the improvements, for the purpose of carrying out quarantine regulations. If the United States undertook to exercise exclusive judicial or legislative jurisdiction over the land without the consent of the State Legislature, then the question would arise; but if we are going to make any great expenditure for the purchase of land and the erection of large buildings, if it was practicable to do so, I should insist with the Senator from Alabama that we should first obtain the consent of the State. I do not think, however, that such a provision as he proposes is necessary to this bill. It might as well be put in any bill which authorizes certain acts to be done by the General Government for a general purpose. Certainly no officer, as specified in that amendment, could exercise this jurisdiction. The attempt to exercise the jurisdiction must be through the Congress of the United States or by the judicial department of the Government. I do not think the amendment is necessary to the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. My purpose is not to shut out the United States from the right to get the occupation of property within a State for the purposes of quarantine; but after having obtained it, from exercising therein exclusive jurisdiction. I think this bill does provide for an exercise of exclusive jurisdiction on the part of the officers of the Government of the United States. I think that under this bill, if an epidemic of cholera were prevailing in the city of New York, or was likely to prevail there, the Secretary of the Treasury could go and drive out the officers of the State of New York from the quarantine stations, take possession, and run them at his will and pleasure. That is the way I understand the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator says the Constitution does not allow an officer to do so.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, I am talking about the frame of this bill. I want to know whether the power is not given here to the Secretary of the Treasury to take possession of the quarantine stations and all the property devoted to quarantine purposes in the city of New York, and put in operation there exclusively the power of the United States Government?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the bill does, if that authority is to be deduced from the provision that the President shall take such steps as he deems necessary to keep the cholera out; but it is only to be inferred from that very broad language. Now, can we not trust the President of the United States under that clause not to take possession of Hoffman and Swinburne Islands?

Mr. MORGAN. I trust no President, I trust no man by putting in his possession a power which violates the Constitution of my country. I am sworn not to do that and I do not mean to do it. I had rather put a check upon his power and say that he, as well as myself, must act in accordance with the Constitution. This is the object of my amendment, and the Senate may vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VILAS. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section at the end of the bill, as follows:

Nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to authorize the United States of any officer thereof in its behalf to take into its ownership or control for quarantine purposes any place in any State, and to exercise therein exclusive jurisdiction without the consent of such State.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHANDLER (when Mr. CULLOM'S name was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Berry,	Gorman,	Mills,	Vilas,
Blodgett,	Gray,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Hunton,	Palmer,	Walthall,
Coke,	Kyle,	Pugh,	White.

Dolph,	Higgins,	Pettigrew,	Teller,
Dubois,	Hoar,	Platt,	Washburn.

NOT VOTING—40.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hiscock,	Ransom,
Allen,	Davis,	Jones, Ark.	Sanders,
Allison,	Dixon,	Jones, Nev.	Squire,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Stanford,

Casey,	Hawley,	Power,	Wilson,
Colquitt,	Hill,	Quay,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS the title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Secretary of the Treasury and Marine Hospital Service, and for other purposes."

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to say that I shall allow the next special order, being the bill for the suspension of immigration for one year, to lapse without asking to take it up at this time, but at an early day I hope to bring that bill before the Senate for its consideration.

DEALING IN OPTIONS AND FUTURES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

Mr. WASHBURN. Before proceeding with the discussion of the bill, I ask for the adoption of the following order:

Ordered, That 2,000 extra copies of House bill 7845, a bill defining "options" and "futures," etc., be printed for the use of the Senate.

The order was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment, which was offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE], will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 2 it is proposed to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That such contract or agreement shall not be made, settled for by delivery or settlement of differences, or by any other mode of performance or settlement in or upon any board of trade, produce, cotton, merchants', or other exchange, or other commercial association, or in any place or upon any premises where price quotations of said articles are announced, bulletined, or published, nor be subjected to the rules or regulations of any such board, exchange, or other commercial association.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. WASHBURN. The yeas and nays have been ordered on that amendment.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the Senate did me such honor in patiently listening to a long constitutional discussion when this bill was last under consideration, that I can not but feel some reluctance in again soliciting the favor of its hearing. But the subject to which I wish to address attention to-day, although kindred, is another than that which formed the subject of the remarks I had the honor to submit to the Senate a few days since.

It is necessary in order to the presentation of the constitutional objections to this measure that it should be demonstrated, if demonstrated it can be, that the substitute proposed by the minority of the Judiciary Committee, and particularly championed by the distinguished and able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], should also be shown to lack the authority necessary in the Constitution for its enactment, and to that point I feel obliged to address some observations.

The substitute possesses, as I have said, at least one merit. It is open in its purposes, direct in its exercise of legislative authority, using no cloak or cover, and, upon the assumption of constitutionality, is, for the most part, legislation fitly addressed to the purposed use of the power. It denounces directly as illegal the methods of business it condemns, and provides appropriate criminal sanctions.

But when this is said, the end of commendation seems to me to be reached. I can not regard it as any less certain that the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States no more authorizes the projected invasion of the constitutional rights of the people in their State governments than does the power to raise revenue for the support of the National Government.

The argument for reliance upon the commerce clause has been left substantially to the learned and distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]—it needs not be said it could be in no abler hands—and it was presented with all the skill the case permitted. Yet, though his dialectics commanded admiration, it seemed to me the fallacy of the argument was generally felt, if not yet fully expounded. If I venture that attempt, I must, in fair justice, deal with it as he has made it; and, in doing so, may feel assured I encounter all that can be urged in support of that theory of authority.

I can not regard it necessary, however, to recapitulate and in detail discuss all that he so skillfully constructed, nor to pursue the same order that he adopted. Very much, indeed, of what has already been presented in opposition to the employment of the taxing power will be recognized by the Senate as addressing equal force against the authority claimed under the commerce clause, and due regard for this consideration demands abbreviation of what might otherwise have been proper to say if the commerce clause were alone invoked to support this legislation.

Divested of mere words, and stripped to the skin by a fair analysis, the entire substance of the learned Senator's contention seems to stand upon two prime assumptions:

1. Congress may directly interpose to suppress any domestic transactions sanctioned by the laws of a State and conducted by its own citizens wholly within its borders, although in no wise interstate or foreign dealing, not even amounting to commerce at all, if their indirect effect in some manner unfavorably influences, or, in his language, obstructs or restrains other transactions, whether by the same or other persons, which are, or might become, interstate or foreign commerce.

2. Congress may conclusively assert that any such domestic, infra-state transaction does unfavorably influence interstate or foreign commerce, conclusively declare it an obstruction to such commerce, and thus foreclosing inquiry of the fact by the courts invest itself with legislative power to denounce and suppress the domestic transaction which otherwise citizens of a State might rightfully engage in, protected and sustained by its laws.

Each and both of these propositions appear to me to be utterly untenable; indeed, distressingly subversive of all sound principles of constitutional interpretation.

The first commands first attention. And that there may be no chance for claim that I have overstated it, I read from his speech of last July—in which he submitted the supporting argument—some extracts to show that he maintains it in the full proportions. He argued, in correction, as he said, of the fact that—

> Some persons have been misled as to the character of the amendment I propose, because it is supposed by them that these dealings in futures in New Orleans and in New York really constitute internal and domestic commerce in New York and Louisiana, respectively, and that it is the object of the amendment to regulate this alleged commerce—

Among other things, that—

> They are not commerce in a constitutional sense, for there is no actual transfer of title to any property whatever. The contract is a mere personal contract to deliver at a future day or pay damages. There is in the contract, nothing to give title to or interest in property, and there is no transfer of the property contracted for to the alleged buyer—no transportation of the thing from seller to buyer. Without such transfer or transportation there is no commerce. In Railroad Company vs. Husen, 95 U. S., pages 465-475, it is said "transportation is essential to commerce."
> As no title passes on these pretented sales, as the buyer gets nothing but the obligation or promise of the seller to deliver, at his option, cotton as the seller may select of twelve different grades on any day within a named month, and a margin is put up by either party as the cotton may rise or fall, it is evident that the sole value of such a contract depends upon the reliability, the solvency of the seller. The buyer can never get the cotton unless the seller is willing to deliver and he can not get damages for nondelivery unless the seller is willing and able to pay.
> In all such cases the dealings are held not to be commerce in a constitutional sense.

I read that not to controvert it, but to show that the proposition of the learned and able Senator extends to the suppression of transactions within a State which he holds are not interstate or foreign commerce in any part; not commerce at all. And next, to the second supposed error, he answered:

> A further conclusive answer to this view is that the amendment does not propose to regulate these dealings. The regulation proposed by the amendment is the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce in cotton, wheat, etc. What it does with these future dealings is to abolish them, to remove them.
> This presents the question of the extent of the power of Congress to remove obstructions to or restraints on interstate and foreign commerce.

Thus the distinguished Senator made the purpose plain to abolish or remove any obstructive or restraining transactions carried on within a State by her citizens, although not in a proper constitutional sense the transactions of commerce, even domestic or internal.

Nor can it be disputed that the reasoning proffered to us in support of this power necessarily extends it to such a compass that whatever thing, of any nature, may interfere with the current of interstate or foreign commerce as it would otherwise flow, or, more exactly, whatever Congress shall declare so interferes, may be prohibited and abolished by virtue of the power "to regulate" such commerce.

And what is the course of reasoning adduced to the extraordinary proposition? The argument of the learned Senator is summary. He asserts, first, that Congress may remove physical obstructions from the navigable waters of the country; and this is well established by many decisions of the Supreme Court. I shall not dispute it, but only endeavor to explain its foundation and meaning by the language of the court. The case of The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. 557, which he cites, declares, on page 563-564 of the report, the settled rule. When a navigable water, as a lake or river, is used, or susceptible of being used, in its ordinary condition as a highway of commerce, and forms in whole or in part, with connecting waters, "a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other States or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water," it is a public navigable water of the United States and subject to "appropriate legislation" in the exercise of the commerce power of the Constitution. Upon which the court says:

> That power authorizes all appropriate legislation for the protection or advancement of either interstate or foreign commerce, and for that purpose such legislation as will insure the convenient and safe navigation of all the navigable waters of the United States, whether that legislation consists in requiring the removal of obstructions to their use, in prescribing the form and size of vessels employed upon them, or in subjecting the vessels to inspection and license in order to secure their proper construction and equipment. "The power to regulate commerce," this court said in Gilman vs. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 724, "comprehends the control for that purpose, and to the extent necessary, of all navigable waters of the United States which are accessible from a State other than those in which they lie. For this purpose they are the public property of the nation, and subject to all the requisite legislation of Congress."

Mr. BUTLER. Who delivered the opinion of the court?

Mr. VILAS. Mr. Justice Field.

Then the learned Senator adduces another authority in the following passage from his speech:

> In the case of the United States vs. Coombs, 12 Peters, page 72 (12 Curtis, 634), the court upheld a statute punishing as larceny the taking of goods belonging to a wrecked vessel above high-water mark, not property in course of transportation, but property belonging to the vessel.

There is no occasion to question these authorities or the doctrine they enunciate, which is doubtless sound, and is to me satisfactory. But it will be observed that both deal with nothing but the means and implements of interstate and foreign commerce; the former with the water highways upon which it is borne, the latter with the vessels by which it is borne.

Nothing more is decided than that over the navigable waters of the United States, being "the public property of the nation," the Federal authority is paramount to State control, according to the original arrangement of the Constitution, and of course carries the power of appropriate legislation; and that it is for the Federal Government to denounce and punish that species of piracy, that outrage upon them who "go down to the sea in ships," which is known as wrecking. There is in them no pretext of relation to anything which is not, in physical fact, parcel of the transaction of interstate or foreign commerce, nor intimation of an extension of the power of Congress to anything beyond, merely because it may be a potential subject of commerce, or indirectly concern what may become a transaction of such commerce.

And so with the suggestion that this power of regulation extends to acts done on land. Obviously this must be so, because both interstate and foreign commerce must be in part on land though the carriage be by water, and much of both may be wholly on land where the communication is not by water. Surely this requires no further attention.

These plain considerations, as it seems to me, entirely strip the argument of all aid from any of the cases which the learned and able Senator from Mississippi adduced to the support of the collateral propositions, not in fact contributory to the true point, yet adduced in a manner which seemed to bring them into relations with it as authorities upon which his proposition might rest.

The theory of the proposed substitute thus stands out as an isolated and independent assertion of constitutional power now for the first time brought before Congress as authority for legislation. Whatever else may be its merits or its faults, it is entitled to distinction for novelty and surely infringes upon no preconception of others. It is to be judged, therefore, by its own peculiar intrinsic weight and force.

Let the further argument be stated in the exact words of its distinguished proponent:

> Now, as the power to remove obstructions to commerce is a part of the power to regulate commerce, being necessary and proper to enable Congress to regulate commerce, it is clear that this removal of obstructions extends to all kinds of obstructions, for there is nothing in the language used to restrict it to physical obstructions alone; and if removal of obstructions is constitutional regulation it must apply to all kinds of obstructions, or else regulation may remove some obstructions and not remove others. It can not be that the Constitution intended to confer power to remove obstructions coming from the wisdom and beneficence of Providence and withhold it to remove obstructions equally pernicious to commerce coming from the folly and wickedness of man.

Have we not here a mere petitio principii, covered by the use of words in a double meaning?

The Constitution gives no power to Congress to "remove obstructions to commerce," as if those words were there written. The language is, "to regulate commerce." The Supreme Court has not decided that the grant is to be interpreted as if it were written "to remove obstructions to commerce," or as if the written words imported that. But at most the court only employed that phrase arguendo, or by way of detail or illustration, in holding that Congress may provide for the punishment of wrecking, and legislate appropriately for the improvement of the navigable waters of the United States, as by removing obstructions to their use or the like.

Yet here lies the basis of the whole argument of the able Senator. He proceeds as if he were interpreting words of a constitutional grant of power to Congress "to remove obstructions to interstate and foreign commerce." Upon that tremendous assumption he argues "that this removal of obstructions extends to all kinds of obstructions, for there is nothing in the language used to restrict it to physical obstructions alone." Sure enough! Quod erat demonstrandum. Therefore there is no obstruction to the power of Congress!

And how skillfully does the learned Senator align Providence on the side of his verbal battalions by the declaration that "it can not be that the Constitution intended to confer power to remove obstructions coming from the wisdom and beneficence of Providence and withhold it to remove obstructions coming from the folly and wickedness of men." Thus, marvelously is it demonstrated, first, that the Constitution of the United States has in good fact set Congress above Providence, with power to review and correct His wisdom and beneficence, when obstructive to commerce; and strange then, indeed, would it be—I share his abhorrence of the awful consequence—if by aid of the same instrument there should still rise supreme, above both Providence and an overruling Congress, "the folly and wickedness of men."

With great deference to the learned and able Senator, and no small admiration for his consummate skill in verbal subtlety, I respectfully insist that this is not reasoning upon the substance of things, but from the fantastic shapes they have been made to take by refraction through the medium of obscuring words. This is not a deduction from the decisions of the Supreme Court, but foreign to anything it had under consideration in the cases adduced and widely beyond the purport of anything that tribunal adjudged or promulgated as law. It seems to me, I say it without purpose to disparage, but only in the truth of conviction, mere wandering after verbal wraiths, which, if followed, will surely lure reason into destructive bogs.

And here, I submit, sir, I might safely pause; because this analysis, I think, answers in full the argument proffered to support the employment of this grant of power, and it will be acknowledged that it is for its proponents to establish right to its use, not for them who deny it to submit to its exercise unless they can show reason to the contrary.

But even that, sir, can not be esteemed a thing of the least difficulty in the minds of persons who will give heed to the great doctrine of constitutional limitation upon which I have already engaged the patience of the Senate. This power to regulate commerce, extensive as it surely is, must still be taken with some reference to that separation of sovereignty between the States and the Union, which, above any other feature of the Constitution, established and marks the excellence of our frame of government. And no just interpretation of the grant of power in question, more than of the power of taxation, can be drawn from the single words of this grant with a narrow and contracted view which excludes that boundary line, or even other portions of the supreme instrument which should be regarded in connection with this grant.

So, too, I might well here invoke anew the guardian care of that spirit of fidelity and reverence which ought to overrule the mind of statesmanship on every invitation to grasp a doubtful privilege or authority.

Yet, without exciting sensitiveness of vision, how obvious must be the destructiveness of such a theory of power as is here proposed to us! What indeed, upon that assumption, can be said to remain assuredly within the right of the people to self-government in their respective States?

To regulate commerce seems plainly enough to exert control for the time being over subjects then actually engaged in the movement which constitutes it, and also generally over the modes and measures, the highways and the implements employed by it.

But if whatever shall indirectly interfere with or affect the possible subjects or methods of foreign or interstate commerce opens a field for Congressional action, the mind must wander through illimitable space in the fruitless search for its confines. Perhaps nothing left to State governments can be said to be beyond reach: because whatever conduces to the prosperity or evil of the people of a State must contribute to or diminish the volume of its trade with other States and foreign nations.

Why may we not regulate the methods of agriculture, of mining, of manufacture, if it shall seem to the wisdom and beneficence of an overruling Congress that the license afforded by the State laws tends to lessen production of what might otherwise swell the current of traffic over the State line? Why shall we suffer crime to check with threatening evil the prosperity of a Commonwealth that should bend its healthful energies to the development of its commerce with other communities?

Stop there, sir, a moment. What does this substitute propose, indeed, but to punish crime for the sole reason that it operates restriction upon the volume or movement of this traffic? And, still worse, to revolutionize State law in order to denounce as criminal what that law approves and encourages as praiseworthy business?

Now, sir, if an otherwise lawful avocation and an otherwise lawful usage of trade can be anathematized by Congress as wicked; the corporate agency established by a State for the promotion of such affairs be overthrown, and numbers among its most influential, active, and respected business men driven as felons from their course of livelihood, simply because their contracts with each other, relating to personal property within their own State, and not designed by them to go beyond it, are considered or shown to effect the movement or extent of the State's trade with her sister States or foreign countries; why should not Congress far more engage itself in the suppression of the really criminal practices of a confessedly depraved class which, beyond all question, must to greater or less degree operate evil influence upon such traffic?

Can the learned Senator find authority in the Constitution to send the police officers of the United States into the Chamber of Commerce of Chicago with its 1,900 members, of whom many are known as the enterprising, public-spirited leaders of her marvelous devolopment and splendid civic temper and ambition, and there clap manacles on these men because their lawful business somehow indirectly affects interstate or foreign commerce, and yet deny the power to send such officers to purge the streets, the wharves and docks, the dives and groggeries of that world-mingled metropolis from the villians who beset and obstruct not only the subjects, but the implements and persons engaged in that freight and traffic; or to prevent the larcenies, the robberies, the arsons which, from time to time occurring through the agricultural districts of the State, withdraw annually from the volume of merchandise large quantities of the staples of husbandry?

Still more, sir, if we ought to suppress these contracts of infrastate dealing in pork, lard, or bacon, because they somehow obstruct or restrict external traffic, why must we not provide a suitable care for the swine themselves, and send the epizootic physicians of the Federal Government to head off or assuage the cholera which afflicts hogs not less than humanity? Why must we not go forth with national forces to do battle with the weevil, the chinch bug, the fly, the germ, the terrible "forms unseen" of bacilli and bacteria, which, beyond all doubt do so obstruct and restrict our interstate and foreign commerce, that but for their wickedness millions of pounds of flesh and bushels of grain might be added to the food supply of worthy labor and the suffering poor of our country and the world?

How can it be claimed, in short, that we can intrude thus upon the domestic business of a State and not also have concern for other conditions affecting her prosperity which equally, or more, go to the very marrow of her foreign trade?

There is another, a kindred aspect in which this claim of authority over the States deserves remark. I have shown you, sir, at an earlier stage of the discussion that the legitimate future contracts which this measure aims to suppress are supported by the laws, and that the corporate agencies of commerce, where mainly these contracts are made and executed, are the creatures of the respective States. Their continued maintenance expresses necessarily, therefore, the will and policy of such States, and within bounds hitherto unquestioned as exclusively for State control.

Let it be granted, for argument's sake, that they do operate to restrict the volume of the merchandise which would otherwise be sent from the State for sale in other States and foreign nations. Can it be for a moment fairly contended that Congress may overturn that policy and nullify such laws of the domestic trade of a State because of a rightful power to compel her people to their utmost possible supply to the channels of external commerce of the articles of her possessions which might enter them? Yet, what else, sir, does this sort of legislation pretend to do?

But I feel I can not trespass on the Senate by more amplification upon this point. In dismissing it, I respectfully submit that the right to regulate interstate commerce seems obviously limited, so far as concerns the subjects of it, to the commerce itself, which is to be regulated. It is not the right to create it, or to compel others to create it. The thing must exist; and as it exists naturally, it is to be regulated or provided for. The power was granted Congress, not as a bridge over which to invade the separate sovereignty of the States in domestic concerns, but to facilitate the means and guarantee the freedom, equality, and justice of a beneficial intercourse between the citizens of different States and with foreign nations.

Mr. President, the learned Senator from Mississippi also read to us at some length from several judgments of the Supreme Court to support the proposition that Congress may, in the exercise of powers confided to it, enact laws which, as the supreme law of the land, may overrule the legislation of the States; as if this principle in some manner maintained his claim of power to do this thing. I am unable to discern any contribution to his argument in that undeniable doctrine. The question before us is not affected. For that question is not what will be the consequence of the exercise of a rightful power, but whether the grant under debate gives us rightful power to do the thing proposed. It does not help to discern the boundary line between the sovereignty of the Union and the sovereignty of the respective States to say—what all admit—that the Union is sovereign within its defined limits. The distinction appears too clear to require discussion.

It is an obligation which I have assumed, Mr. President, to address some argument against the second proposition upon which the learned Senator from Mississippi plants the substitute for the original bill; that Congress may conclusively, so as to compel the court to accept it as fact, adjudge and declare this anathematized course of dealing to be an obstruction to interstate and foreign commerce, and therefore legislate to remove and abolish it, or in his own language—

> That Congress is the proper and final judge to determine what is an obstruction to or restraint on commerce.

His entire argument in support of this proposition rests upon the last determination of the Supreme Court in the Wheeling Bridge Case, reported in 18 Howard's Reports, 421. This greatly narrows the contention between us, because it follows that if that case did not so adjudge the argument of the learned Senator fails, and his proposition, which on its face seems startling, fails with it.

It is required of us, therefore, only to peruse with attention and fairness that celebrated judgment, and perhaps I may not aid the individual consideration of the case by Senators by making further remark upon it. But I think I may be permitted some brief observations which will recall its familiar face to the lawyers in this Chamber, and disclose at once the peculiar ground upon which it rested, and thus, as it clearly seems to me, distinguish and dismiss it as a basis for the broad proposition which it is proffered to us to uphold.

It will be remembered that at the suit of the State of Pennsylvania, the bridge company, which claimed authority under incorporation and grant by the State of Virginia, had been adjudged guilty of a nuisance in having failed to raise its bridge over the Ohio River to a height which would permit the passage under it of the largest class of steam vessels navigating that river; and had been ordered, before February, 1853, to abate it or elevate it to the sufficient height of 111 feet in the clear above low-water mark. Subsequently to the decree Congress, by its act of August 31, 1852, declared the bridge a lawful structure, and thereupon the court refused to enforce so much of the decree as required the abatement or elevation of the bridge. So far the case seems a specious base for the distinguished Senator's proposition. Attention to the principles of that determination dissipates this view. I beg to read the following extract from the opinion of Mr. Justice Nelson, on page 430 of the report:

> The bridge had been constructed under an act of the Legislature of the State of Virginia, and it was admitted that act conferred full authority upon the defendants for the erection, subject only to the power of Congress in the regulation of commerce. It was claimed, however, that Congress had acted upon the subject and regulated the navigation of the Ohio River, and had thereby secured to the public by virtue of its authority the free and unobstructed use of the same, and that the erection of the bridge, so far as it interfered with the enjoyment of this use, was inconsistent with and in violation of the acts of Congress and destructive to the right derived under them, and that to the extent of this interference with the free navigation of the river the act of the Legislature of Virginia afforded no authority or justification. It was in conflict with the acts of Congress, which were the paramount law.
> This being the view of the case taken by a majority of the court, they found no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that the obstruction of the navigation of the river by the bridge was a violation of the right secured to the public by the Constitution and laws of Congress, nor in applying the appropriate remedy in behalf of the plaintiff. The ground and principles upon which the court proceeded will be found reported in 13 Howard, 518.
> Since, however, the rendition of this decree the acts of Congress already referred to have been passed, by which the bridge has been made a post-road for the passage of mails of the United States, and the defendants are authorized to have and maintain it at its present site and elevation, and requiring all persons navigating the river to regulate such navigation so as not to interfere with it.
> So far, therefore, as this bridge created an obstruction to the free navigation of the river, in view of the previous acts of Congress, they are to be regarded as modified by this subsequent legislation; and, although it may still be an obstruction in fact, it is not so in the contemplation of law. We have already said, and the principle is undoubted, that the act of the Legislature of Virginia conferred full authority to erect and maintain the bridge, subject to the exercise of the power of Congress to regulate the navigation of the river. That body having, in the exercise of this power, regulated the navigation consistent with its preservation and continuation, the authority to maintain it would seem to be complete. That authority combines the concurrent powers of both governments, State and Federal, which, if not sufficient, certainly none can be found in our system of government.

Senators will observe at once that we find here the same difference between the proposition of the learned Senator from Mississippi and this judgment of the Supreme Court which I have pointed out with reference to the cases of The Daniel Ball and United States vs. Coombs and the first proposition submitted by the Senator. He contends for the power of Congress to adjudge anything to be an obstruction to commerce in whatever indirect way it may affect the volume of freedom of traffic in the subjects of commerce; but the Supreme Court considered only a physical obstruction to the navigation of a public navigable water, "the property of the United States."

Moreover, the first judgment had gone upon the ground that a former act of Congress regulating the navigation of the Ohio River was violated by the bridge, which otherwise would have been lawful. This illegality which Congress created, Congress removed, and in the exercise of incontestable authority, further regulated navigation by making it necessary for the largest steam vessels to lower the tops of their smokestacks in order to pass it.

To state the lines of judgment in that celebrated controversy sufficiently argues the insupportability of this second assumption on which the able Senator from Mississippi has founded his substitute, for he left the argument for it there.

Yet, could that be needed to convince us that the Supreme Court had never rendered a judgment which must, if adhered to, utterly strip them of jurisdiction to inquire into the constitutionality of an act of Congress enacted in usurpation of this authority? It can not have escaped the acute perception of the learned Senator that the maintenance of his second proposition involves his reasoning in a vicious circle. For, taken altogether, this is his argument: Congress has power to remove an obstruction to commerce; Congress has power at will to declare finally anything to be such obstruction; ergo, Congress may legislate against what it will.

Upon such an interpretation of the grants of the Constitution what practically becomes of any limitation, where is the security for the rights of property, the order of society, the liberties of our countrymen?

It seems to me, sir, it will test the whole value of this proposed substitute to strike out those words in its fourth section which declare "futures" to be obstructions to and restraints upon commerce among the States and with foreign nations, which I propose at the proper time to submit a motion for. I invite the learned Senator himself to consider whether that clause ought to stand, because if the fact be in accordance with that declaration, and if Congress possesses power to abolish and remove such an obstruction, assuredly the court will sustain the act without the affirmation of the fact by Congress. On the other hand, if the fact be not so, will the learned Senator ask the Senate to affirm an untruth, even if thereby he can control the Supreme Court into acknowledgment of authority to pass this law?

I know well he is as incapable of asking as the Senate is of doing so odious a thing, not only from his high character, but from his very words addressed to the Senate in his speech of July last. Admirably and powerfully did he thus attack the proposed vicious use of the taxing power by the original bill:

> We do not mean, I hope, in this day and generation, to steal an authority not granted under the Constitution to pervert a power of the Constitution given us for the purpose of raising revenue, and under a fraudulent pretext of raising revenue thereby acquire a jurisdiction not granted by the Constitution. I do not want to go into that. I do not want to argue that; it has already been sufficiently argued by others. I believe that you can not do anything meaner with the Constitution of the United States than to pass a law for an avowed purpose, which everybody who votes for it knows is not its true purpose, but the court does not know this, because the court has not the power to discover a purpose outside of the professions of the act. The court will sustain the law because the court will not allow itself to believe that Congress was dishonest enough to conceal the true purpose of the act. That is answer enough. I think our Republican friends, debauched and demoralized as they are on constitutional questions, ought to be above that.

I invoke his consideration of the suggestion whether the upright sentiment he so honestly leveled in severe terms against the abuse of the taxing power does not equally forbid an attempt to foreclose an inquiry by the courts into a fact, upon the existence of which depends, according to his theory, the power to denounce as crimes the transactions of a large and hitherto respected body of merchants and dealers in our land, and to stigmatize them as criminals?

Besides, sir, let me add now, in support of my intended motion, that I can not regard the evidence before us sufficient to establish the fact sought to be so declared in law. Assume it to be true, if you will, that this system of dealing in futures does operate to depreciate the price of the commodities in question. Does it follow thereby that interstate and foreign trade in them is obstructed? Generally speaking, the more the price of an article of common desire is lowered, the more extensive becomes its use and the more active the traffic in it. In what manner does that familiar rule find qualification in respect to these staples of husbandry which so largely feed and clothe mankind? No explanation has been vouchsafed us; and I doubt, in advance of it, if any be possible.

The distinguished Senator complains that none but members are admitted to trade in the chambers of commerce and exchanges of the country. But does this rule, quite necessary to their existence and affairs, abridge the rights of other citizens to trade when and where they will with one another? And without debating the merits or the faults of these organizations, can anyone who turns a fair observation on the tremendous accomplishments of our modern system of business, which so quickly gathers every year the enormous products of our fields into the gigantic currents of our commerce to flow out in distributing streams to the consumers of the civilized world; who saw a year ago a crop of 600,000,000 bushels of wheat and 9,000,000 bales of cotton picked up in our country as by Titanian hands and spread before the eager wants of humanity more easily and swiftly than a third the quantity could be handled a generation ago, sincerely affirm that the commerce of the States, and with foreign countries, has been in truth obstructed and fettered by the usages of business during recent years?

Mr. President, the grave and serious character of the proposed legislation, the learning and dignity of the minority of the Judiciary Committee who reported this substitute, the skill and force of the learned Senator who has been its champion, and the necessary requirments of debate upon any question of constitutional interpretation will sufficiently justify me, I feel assured, in the protracted care with which I have sought to refute the claim of right to employ the power of the commerce clause for the purpose of this legislation.

I am well aware that the mere discussion of a legal question can interest but few except those whose minds have been turned by the habits of their lives to it. But I have made the argument with the conviction that, however short I may have come of demonstrating it, yet the power granted by that clause is utterly inadequate to the enactment of the proposed substitute.

And so, sir, I feel that both claims for authority in Congress to enact this law are utterly insupportable, and to do this thing which is asked of us will be to attempt a violation of the Constitution, an encroachment upon the rights of the States and the liberties of our countrymen at the sacrifice of the fidelity and duty which not only my oath exacts of me, but every intelligent conviction, every sentiment of public responsibility compels me to observe as sacredly as a priest should minister at the altar of God.

And now let me ask what necessity is upon us to do this deed? We do not stand confronted by any dire exigency, imminent in evil menace, and otherwise remediless; such as sometimes has seemed to offer warrant to patriots for extreme and doubtful measures lest the Republic should take some detriment. Here is no unforeseen contingency unprovided for in the constitutional arrangement of the powers of government, no casus omissus in human forecast demanding extraordinary provision. So far from it, the power of the people to redress this evil, if evil it be, is ample, easy of exercise, in handy reach, much nearer to their use and wishes than we are.

No one can pretend to question the plenitude of right and power in the several State Legislatures to provide any measures, however vigorous, requisite to overmaster and correct any of the asserted injuries to the popular interests which it is professed inspire the promotion of this measure. We may bethink ourselves also of the fact—it ought to give check to our acceptance of the clamor so easily prepared to our ears—that in every State Legislature which assembles a large proportion of its membership is directly composed of intelligent farmers, besides other men very closely acquainted with and representative of the agricultural interests.

The Legislature of Illinois has but just convened. The Chamber of Commerce of Chicago, the largest grain market, I believe, in the world, and surely the largest speculative market, is the creature of that Legislature. If it be the child of evil we hear it decried in this Chamber, the hand of its creator may be now laid upon it. If the chambers of commerce or boards of trade of St. Paul and Minneapolis are the guilty visitors of wrong upon the farmers of Minnesota which the distinguished Senator from that State may leave us to infer, in the former city the sovereignty of his State is now assembled, clothed with plenary authority to suppress them.

In these legislative bodies the intelligence of the farming class, as well as its interests and strength, are abundantly exemplified by men of character and ability from its own very ranks. In the Legislature of Wisconsin, which conferred upon me the honor of a seat in this illustrious assemblage, one-third of its members, roundly speaking, forty-three of its one hundred and thirty-three Senators and assemblymen, were farmers by occupation, able men, worthy and well qualified to know and declare the wants of agriculture and provide the remedies its interests might demand. What is there in the composition of this body to justify claim of a better knowledge of or render it more sensitive to the needs of husbandry than the Legislatures of the States?

Sir, when the Legislature of a State recognizes the necessity of some measure of public importance which lies within the power of Congress to make provision for, there is an easy and familiar practice prevalent in the Union. They memorialize the legislature of the Federal sovereignty to take such step as they think prudent and requisite for the accomplishment of the ends they regard of public importance. Let us respect them as they respect us, and if, in the judgment of this body, in the State of Illinois, there is a great speculative grain market which ought to be attacked, let us deal with our fellow-sovereign, the State of Illinois in proper comity, and memorialize the body which possesses the power of that State to apply the proper remedy in the interests of the country.

Will it not be time enough, sir, for us to begin this violence upon the constitutional order of our Government when one State, at least, shall have shown the necessity for it by the failure of its legislation well applied to the end? or, I might add, by the failure or refusal to respond by the attempt at proper legislation to the rightful solicitations and representations of its sister States or of the Legislature of the Federal Union?

The remedy now proposed is a most drastic and perilous one. No man, it seems to me, can reflect upon its possible effects without a shudder of apprehension from the inevitable derangement it must work in the business transactions of our country, from the consequences of injury it is liable to inflict, especially upon our husbandmen themselves. It is one of the many advantages of our system that such an experiment as this may be tried by a single State, and its merits thus tested, without the entail upon all the country of the misfortunes of failure, if failure ensue, with the example of benefit to all, if success attend. This has been signally illustrated in many things; perhaps in none more notably than in the numerous reformations of the codes of law and practice which, by successive steps and many local failures, have now become almost universally accepted in some form by the several States.

So has it been with our system of public education, our reformatories and penal institutions, the enfranchisement of women from social bondage, and other measures of social and business advancement. What is there in this alleged reform of business methods to demand this sudden and revolutionary experiment, which may involve in its reckless adoption such evils to the entire body of our people?

Sir, the history of civilization well instructs us there is nothing more perilous, nothing more fraught with harmful results than the hasty crystallization in immoderate public action of the impulses of popular misconceptions. It is the peculiar peril of republics, always prone to storms like the freedom of the sea. In anxious guard against it the wisdom of our fathers established our plan of dual sovereignties, in which the States ought to play so useful a part, like the many iron compartments of the modern ships that meet the storms of ocean with an assurance of security that has multiplied a thousand-fold its availability to trade and travel. Are we to overthrow all this upon such an occasion as is here presented?

But, sir, grievous as will be the injury inflicted by this law, if it shall become a law, upon the interests of business and especially, perhaps, to our husbandmen, and harsh and bitter as may be the visitation of such a condemnation upon those who have hitherto held high place in all the marts of trade in our great cities, all these are as trifles in comparison with the peril of the step to be taken across the lines of constitutional duty this body is solemnly charged to defend.

It may indeed be that this law you propose to enact shall speedily flee from the statute book pursued by a popular rage far beyond what is misconceived to urge its passage.

And while I do not undertake to declare any prophetic vision, nor to wield the thunderbolts of any class, I certainly invoke the attention of Senators in this Chamber to the fact that the business interests of this country have rested in satisfaction upon the belief that this law would never receive the indorsement of this body. If it shall happen that the result is contrary there may be awakened a spirit better worthy of consideration before it shall be stirred.

But if done, the fatal precedent will have been set, the barrier thrown down, the open breach of the great trust reposed by the Constitution avowed and complete.

Shall we be told that no real danger lurks in such a precedent? That its experiment, if harmful, will terminate with a repeal as easy as enactment?

Sir, that constitutes no answer. Repeal is the remedy of bad legislation. No remedy is adequate to the perverse and purposed injury of the Constitution. The precedent stands for invocation whenever any powerful and menacing interest may seek iniquitous or illegal advantage; a lurking demon of disorder, ready to join in effectively when the cry of devils is raised against our institutions and social order has most need of angelic friends. What better could illustrate the base utility of a bad precedent than this very debate? What could have lent more strength to this demand for misuse of the taxing power than the production of one undeniable and successful instance of the like abuse by any preceding Congress? What has been more satisfactory than the clear and certain absence, which has been shown, of any such former evil doing?

Let us assume, Mr. President, that this deed which is set to us may be successfully perpetrated; that we may, declaring our purpose to impose a tax, put the millstone on the necks of the class of business for which this snare is devised; that the Supreme Court shall pull the blinding bandage down over the judicial countenance to hide not less its mantling shame than its vision of the outraged Constitution, and, in deference to its coordinate member of the Government, shall declare this act to lay only a heavy tax, whose oppression it was alone for the Legislature to weigh, the power to tax being a power to destroy, even the Constitution itself. What then, sir, must be the sentiments in the inmost hearts of all who do see what the court must refuse to see, who know that in real fact the breach is complete, the wall down, and the very citadel open to the worst enemies of liberty whenever they shall form for assault.

I shall persume to speak for no other, but for myself I may say, with an intense sincerity, it will not comfort me that I vainly strove against it. All my reading of the historic records of mankind will but serve to portray to the mind the fearful pictures of the future in store for that great frame work of liberty which we were taught in youth to love, in our years of manhood we have revered and obeyed, and in our days of highest trust and honor have solemnly sworn to support and defend.

Sir, this is to me no mere contest of interests of a brief and temporary consequence; the ordinary struggle which may be expected to happen over one thing or another from Congress to Congress; which may leave its wounds, indeed, but upon men and things of the time only, to slip like all else which is of human individuality, into early oblivion.

This measure involves far more. I have shown you, sir, by a careful review of others of supposed likeness, that it is without precedent, that it must grievously injure the rights of the people to their local self-government, that it is in nature insidious, treacherous and of far more peril than an open defiance of the Constitution, subject to judicial redress.

It remains to add the harshest note of danger, that of hark-ening to a cry outside, which gives resolution when judgment hangs inclining the other way; that through these walls which ought to inclose a fearless and serene statesmanship the civium ardor prava jubentium may come to penetrate, and so fiercely that the adamant of the Constitution melts before the fervent heat.

If that day, the historic precursor of republican decay, and so often followed by the roar of the commune, be approaching, who can think it too much to attribute to this measure a vast importance, possibly far-reaching and direful!

I can not but feel confident that evil day is not upon us, but that the exigency will be met here and now in this Chamber, and the friends of constitutional liberty will be numerous enough and strong enough for the emergency which is upon them.

Mr. MITCHELL. For my own information I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question at this time, if he has concluded his speech? Assuming that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is right in his contention, that the power to deal directly with this alleged evil exists by virtue of the clause in the Constitution which authorizes Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and that the Senator from Wisconsin is wrong in reference to that contention, would the Senator from Wisconsin then have any doubt as to the constitutional power on the part of Congress to deal with that evil by invoking the taxing power?

Mr. VILAS. If the power to do this thing exists in Congress under the commerce clause, it may be that the court would support it as they supported the levy of the 50 cents a head upon passengers in the celebrated head-money cases, not as an exertion of the power to tax, but as an exertion of the right to regulate commerce. But it would be an abuse of the power, because it would be done, not as it was there, professedly in regulation of commerce, for that act was an act relating to immigration, but it would be done in abuse of the power, in covert concealment of the true purpose. It seems to me that if the power were to be found to exist, the honest constitutional way is to exert it in accordance with the nature of the power which is asserted.

Mr. MITCHELL. But I understood the Senator to argue at length and with great ability the other day that in cases where Congress had the power by virtue of some constitutional provision to deal with any particular evil, then Congress had the right to invoke the taxing power.

Mr. VILAS. I think the Senator from Oregon must have misunderstood my argument. I argued that the instance, in which under the form of a tax a power had been exercised or exerted to suppress a certain line of transactions which Congress desired to interdict, was not supported by the court as an exercise of the power to tax but as the exertion of another power within the authority given by the Constitution to Congress. Therefore the court could not hold it unconstitutional although it took the form of a tax

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 2, strike out the proviso, the words to be striken out being as follows:

Provided, however, That such contract or agreement shall not be made, settled for by delivery or settlement of differences, or by any other mode of performance or settlement in or upon any board of trade, produce, cotton, merchants', or other exchange, or other commercial association, or in any place or upon any premises where price quotations of said articles are announced, bulletined, or published, nor be subjected to the rules or regulations of any such board, exchange, or other commercial association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon this question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). In am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I do not see that he is in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] being absent from the Chamber, I withhold my vote. I am paired with him.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], who is absent, but I understand in conference with some of his friends on the other side that when this question was up before he voted the same way that I would vote, and that is "nay." I vote "nay."

Mr. GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] on this amendment. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. SANDERS] on this question. I have been advised that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], who is absent, desires to be paired in favor of this measure in all of its features. So I take the liberty of transferring my pair with the Senator from Montana to the Senator from Nevada, and I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. Not knowing how he would vote upon this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. IRBY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). The occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I understand that he would vote against the amendment, and therefore I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], but I am assured by the Senator in charge of the bill that he would vote "nay" on this question, and I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY], who is absent from the Senate, requested me to pair him as being in favor of the bill. I suppose that he would vote against the pending amendment, and I should vote for it. I will pair myself with my colleague.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. Not knowing how he would vote upon this amendment, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired on the bill and amendments with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and withhold my vote.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] for to-day on the bill, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote against the adoption of the pending amendment. I therefore vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GRAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently, not observing that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], with whom I have a general pair, is absent. I therefore withdraw my vote. I do not know how he would vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I announced my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. Since then I have been requested to pair the Senator from Maine with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and to vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CASEY] is paired against this amendment with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE].

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—10.

Blodgett,	Hunton,	Mitchell,	White.
Dixon,	McPherson,	Palmer,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum having voted, the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator would allow the roll to be called so that we may have a brief executive session. It will take only about three minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg leave to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that a roll call will not develop a quorum.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, yes; it will.

Mr. HARRIS. We may just as well adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. A roll call will develop a quorum, I think.

Mr. BUTLER. I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 11, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 10, 1893.

[CALENDAR DAY January 9, 1893.]

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 11:55 a. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3591) in relation to the Norfolk and Western Railroad.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3591) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company of Virginia to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The pending question is on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON], upon which a vote was taken yesterday, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania made the point that no quorum had voted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, there is manifestly a quorum present, and I trust that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw the point.

Mr. ATKINSON. I am not certain that there is manifestly a quorum in the House at this time, but I do not care to insist upon another vote upon my amendment, and I therefore withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being withdrawn, the noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That Congress shall have power to regulate the manner and speed of running the cars of said railroad within the corporate limits of Washington and Georgetown.

An amendment recommended by the committee striking out the word "Congress," in the first line of the section, and inserting "the Commissioners of the District of Columbia," was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That where the line of the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company or the route therefor as herein authorized shall coincide with or occupy any portion or portions of the route or right of way of any other railroad or transportation company or corporation holding from Congress a charter or authority to construct a line of railroad, and such company or corporation has not, pursuant to such authority, actually graded its roadbed and laid its tracks along and over the whole of the said portion or portions of its said route, ready for the efficient operation of its line of railroad before the 1st day of March, 1893, then and in that event the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company is hereby authorized to acquire in the manner hereinbefore provided the said portion or portions of the said route or right of way, to grade its roadbed and lay tracks along and over the same, and to occupy the same for the operation of its line of railroad as hereinbefore provided; but should the said company or corporation before the said date complete, in a substantial manner, the grading of their roadbed and the laying of their lines of tracks ready for the efficient transportation of steam-railroad passenger and freight cars, then the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company, from the point where their tracks shall so coincide or connect with the tracks of the said company or corporation, shall use the same upon the terms and conditions provided in the second section of this act to its own terminal point as hereinbefore provided: Provided, however, That nothing in this section contained shall be so construed as to authorize the said railroad company to acquire or occupy any portion of the property rights or rights of way of the said Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company excluded by the proviso to section 1 of this act, without the consent of said company, its successors or assigns.

The committee recommended an amendment in line 11, striking out "ninety" and inserting "ninety-three;" which was agreed to.

The committee also recommended an amendment in line 27, inserting, after "Provided," the word "however;" which was agreed to.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "company," in line 31 of section 8, to the end of the section, and substitute in lieu thereof the following: "Without the consent of the stockholders of said company, or after condemnation proceedings and proper compensation to said Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company."

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose and effect of this amendment, if adopted, will simply be to protect absolutely the rights of property of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. The provision for that purpose in this bill, on page 7, reads as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be so construed as to authorize the said railroad company to acquire or occupy any portion of the property rights or rights of way of the said Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company excluded by the proviso to section 1 of this act.

The proviso in section 1 here referred to is as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize said company to acquire, occupy, or use any portion of the water way, berm bank, towpath, or slope of the bank sustaining the said towpath, or the lands covered by such slope.

As far as this goes, Mr. Chairman, it is altogether right, but it does not go far enough, for the reason that the canal company owns other property besides the particular things enumerated in the proviso of section 1, and it seems to me that that company should be protected in all its rights of property, no matter in what that property may consist. I presume gentlemen understand that the effect of the passage of this bill will be to give a through connection to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

Mr. MEREDITH. They could not use that club.

Mr. COMPTON. That is all right. I am not here as an opponent of this bill. If it shall meet the approval of Congress I shall hail it and shall be glad of additional railroad facilities for this city, as I presume gentlemen generally will be, because the people want all the railroad facilities they can obtain, and as a rule it is only existing opposition companies that object to an increase of railroad facilities. The effect of my amendment, I repeat, is simply and only to protect absolutely all the rights of property of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. That canal is owned by the State of Maryland, the General Government, and private stockholders. The amendment provides that their property shall not be interfered with without the consent of the stockholders, or after proceedings by condemnation and proper compensation. It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that such a provision is preëminently right, just, and proper, and I hope the friends of this bill will accept the amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will consent to make it read "without the consent of the majority of the stockholders," I shall not object. It would be practically impossible to get the consent of all the stockholders. I think the majority of the stockholders should have a right to act in this matter as in other analogous cases, and I trust the gentleman will agree to that modification.

Mr. COMPTON. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I assume that a concession by a majority of the stockholders would be the act of the stockholders.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, your amendment says "without the consent of the stockholders," which may mean all the stockholders. Now, why not agree to the modification I suggest?

Mr. COMPTON. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, if it is not necessary it will not do any harm.

Mr. COMPTON. The meaning is, consent of a majority of the stock.

A MEMBER. Say "without the consent of the company."

Mr. COMPTON. No; I will not accept that.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let it read, "without the consent of a majority of the stock of said company."

Mr. COMPTON. One word before I accept that amendment. There is this technical objection to it. The stock of this company is held, as I have said, in part by the Federal Government, in part by the State of Maryland, and in part by private stockholders.

Now if we substitute "a majority of the stockholders," as suggested by the gentleman, for the words I have put in the amendment, it might be that a majority of the individual stockholders, or a majority of the private stockholders in interest in other corporations, might defeat the rights of the State of Maryland and the General Government.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Under the present reading of the proposed amendment, if there should be a meeting of the stockholders of the company and that meeting should determine in favor of the proposition, would not that be a compliance with the language of the amendment?

Mr. COMPTON. I do not know whether it would be or not.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I think it would.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I believe the gentleman from Maryland and myself have the same idea; and I suggest that he make the amendment read "without the consent of the owners of a majority of the stock." That will cover the point.

Mr. COMPTON. I think that will answer the purpose.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will modify his amendment in that way I will assent to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "company," in line 31, section 8, to the end of the section, and substitute in lieu thereof the following: "Without consent of the owners of a majority of the stock of said company or after condemnation proceedings and proper compensation to said Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company."

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I move an amendment to come in after section 8.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That such damage as is contemplated in the proviso to section 1, shall be determined pursuant to the provisions of chapter 18 of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia relating to railroad companies, so far as the same may be applicable thereto.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that the amendment adopted yesterday will be ineffective unless some provision of this kind be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BERGEN] offered an amendment which would meet the case. I will not state positively that it was adopted.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I understand there is no opposition to my amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It seems to me to be superfluous.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I find on examination that the object sought by my amendment is accomplished by an amendment which was adopted yesterday. I therefore withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move to amend by striking out the word "three," in line 12, page 7, and inserting "four;" so as to read "1894" instead of "1893." Perhaps the gentleman from South Carolina will assent to this amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I believe I have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Wait one moment. This company is required to commence the construction of its road within one year and complete it within two. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will give the company that has already been chartered some two years ago—the Dock and Barge Company—until 1894, to lay down the tracks it is authorized to lay down. That will prevent this company from doing anything toward acquiring that property until 1894, which I think is rather too long a time.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. They only have to begin the work within a year; they do not have to complete it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But they have to complete it within two years.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. We give them a year in which to begin it; and if they are prevented from completing it by any action of the company already there, all they have to do is to show a bona fide effort to complete it within the time required, and they can then complete it after the expiration of the time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. What is the object of the gentleman in offering the amendment?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The bill in its present form is practically a confiscation of any rights that any other company may have there. I simply propose to give them time to carry out the work for which the company was formed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Suppose we say October, 1893, instead of March, 1894. That will give ample time.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Very well; let my amendment be modified in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE as modified was read, as follows:

In line 11, page 7, strike out the word "March" and insert the word "October;" so as to read "1st day of October, 1893."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I offer an amendment to come in as a new section between section 8 and section 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the Attorney-General of the United States shall forthwith apply to the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to assess the value of the rights, franchises, and privileges hereby granted, and until the amount so assessed shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, no street in the cities of Washington or Georgetown shall be taken, used, crossed, or otherwise occupied by said company.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have drawn this amendment and present it now because I believe it should be embodied in this bill. I believe that it should also be embodied in the franchise of every corporation asking for the privilege of occupying the streets of any of the cities of the United States.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. How about the railroads already occupying the streets here; do you wish to embody them?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. The provision should have been in their charters in the first instance. The franchises in those cases have already been granted. The mischief is done.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will you put it in now?

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. The gentleman knows that could not be done on this bill. It would not be germane. It would be general legislation on a special or private bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It can go into the law that they shall be compelled to comply with a general provision such as that you propose here, and that their property shall be paid for upon the same terms. You can assess what they are holding now of the public property.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. And the gentleman knows that such a provision would be subject to the point of order. It would not be germane.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Nobody is going to make the point of order on this side.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. It is not in accordance with the practice heretofore. I repeat it would not be germane. But does the gentleman from Ohio say that that provision should be in this bill?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will offer it myself if you will accept it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I ask the gentleman again, does he say that restriction should be put upon the other companies? [After a pause.] Silence gives consent; and if so why not apply it now, when we are framing a bill for the benefit of this company. As to this company we are now in a parliamentary position to act.

Mr. Chairman, this company is taking advantage of the unrest and discontent which exist in this city as to the limited railroad facilities the citizens enjoy, and of the discontent all over the country with reference to the monopolistic tendencies of railroad corporations, to put through this House the most unguarded, the most monopolistic bill that has ever come before us for action. This bill allows grade crossings. It levies no taxes. It allows full bonding. It gives the streets for nothing. It fixes no limit for the terminal purposes. I give that as my deliberate judgment, and now whilst we are acting on this bill, whilst we are granting these privileges to this corporation, why not compel this company, as I would when acting in the case of any other company, why not compel them——

Mr. OUTHWAITE (interrupting). Did you compel the other railroad companies to comply with any such provision——

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield to the gentleman. I will not be interrupted. I was not a member when the other companies obtained their entrance. I have a right to the floor for my brief five minutes without further interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I say while we are dealing with this company why not apply a rule which I think no man will deny should be applied to every other company in the United States which is granted any such valuable privileges? We are granting franchises all over the United States by our Legislatures and municipal bodies, which are offered as free gifts to corporations instead of being paid for, as they should be.

Now, what does my amendment propose? In a word, that the Attorney-General of the United States shall apply to the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia—able, honorable, and upright men—to assess the value of the franchises we are granting by this bill to this company.

It provides further that when that assessment is made, and the sum so assessed shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, the company may proceed with its operations; and until that is done they shall not occupy the public streets. I ask, is there anything wrong or unfair in that? I venture to say that if it were not for the feeling I have spoken of here the amendment would be adopted upon its merits almost unanimously by this House.

I have offered no amendment to obstruct the passage of this bill. Every amendment offered by myself has been in the interest of the people of this city and of the country. The people want additional railroad facilities and will have them, but some of them do not understand, I fear, the extraordinary character of some of the details of this bill. Now is the time when we are granting this privilege to guard it by imposing proper restrictions on the grant, and with that view and purpose alone I have offered the amendment. If the franchise, upon investigation, is found to be worth nothing, there will be nothing to pay for it; if, on the other hand, it is worth anything, then that sum is to be paid before the streets can be occupied. The people have a right to expect that something shall be paid for the right if it has any value, and I think this is only an honorable and a just proposition between man and man, between the Government and the governed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I think that there are many of us who sympathize with the expressions of the gentleman from New Jersey but yet the proper way to seek what he claims to be seeking would be to bring in a bill assessing the holdings of all of the railroads in the District and thereby place all upon the same footing. It is not fair when two great corporations are already occupying a large part of the public domain in this city, and another seeks to enter to compete with them for the public business, and to furnish facilities for the public, to lay upon it additional burdens beyond those which the other companies were forced to bear.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Will your committee report such a bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I was just going to say to the gentleman from New Jersey that if he would introduce a bill of that character providing how this property shall be assessed, I will see to it that it shall have full and fair consideration in the committee.

Of course what the committee may see proper to do with it I can not foretell.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. A very safe promise.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And a very reasonable one, too.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman from South Carolina allow me to ask him this question: Have we any right now to compel the other corporations to pay for the franchises they enjoy here?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think we have a clear right to amend any railroad charter that we have granted. It is expressly provided in this charter that we can amend, alter, or repeal it at any time, and so we can do with regard to the other railroads, and there are some of us who think that it should be done beyond all question. But it is not fair to pick out a railroad that is trying to get into the city, and lay upon it burdens which the other railroads already here are not called upon to bear.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I heartily concur with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] in his anxiety to strike at monopolies. I remember that in the last Congress of the United States there was a bill under consideration to virtually grant property of the people of the United States in the District of Columbia to the value of about $600,000 to a certain railroad corporation.

While that bill was under consideration I heard no proposition from the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] to make that railroad company pay anything in this way for that valuable grant. I therefore suggested to him during his remarks upon the amendment he has offered to the bill that he incorporate in his amendment a provision which would require these other roads—as they are not now required and never have been required—to undergo the same process of law and be subject to an action by the Attorney-General of the United States before the supreme court of the District of Columbia to have the value of their holdings assessed and to cause them to pay for them before exercising any further franchises thereupon or any ownership thereof. I simply wish to extend the operation of his virtuous efforts.

Now, the gentleman if he will simply incorporate my proposition in his amendment, will be doing something which will be of great benefit to the people, if the whole amendment shall be adopted. I have in my hand an official statement which shows that that property, which he assisted in voting to one of these corporations without pay, is assessed at $360,900; and all that that company pays for the use of that great tract of land which he assisted in giving to it is $5,450 taxes per annum. Now, the gentleman asks me if I would vote for such an amendment as I have suggested to him. If he will offer it, I will support such an amendment here and now, and do the best I can to place all these corporations, which he seems so vigorously to assail, upon an equal footing in this particular. I only want it to be clearly understood by the House that this railroad company, the Norfolk and Western, is coming in here upon no more favorable terms than any other.

Mr. Speaker, this should not be treated as a contest between corporations. I would like to have this discussion proceed upon the proposition that it is the people of a large part of this country who want to get into this District by some other route than by one of two. In other words, the people of the South, Southwest, West, and even Northwest, and I may say especially the people of the State of Ohio, from the capital of which the Norfolk and Western Railway has a line to within 70 miles of this city, would like to be permitted to say in their sovereignty that they can come into the District of Columbia without being compelled to take only one or two railroad lines. With no purpose to criticise either of those companies, I insist that the thing for this committee to consider is whether the people shall be permitted to visit the capital of this nation, and yet not be compelled to do it in the cars of a certain railroad company. Why shall there be a limit to the avenues of approach to the seat of government? The more of these opportunities that are given to the people to come here, the better their liberties will be preserved. The rights of the people are not to be ground entirely out of existence by any quarrel over privileges for corporations. No one has questioned the wisdom, propriety, or necessity of permitting this entrance into the District of Columbia. No protest has been made, no objection has been heard from any citizen or class of citizens against the passage of this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, some years ago the corporation of which the gentleman speaks applied to the Commissioners of the District, under the law as it was then understood, for permission to occupy certain streets. The permission was given and the streets crossed. Afterward the court held that such permission was beyond the power of the Commissioners to give. Thereupon the grand jury of this district indicted the corporation for occupying those streets, and the question presented to Congress was whether the freight traffic on that road should be suspended or whether that traffic should be allowed to be continued. The bill which was passed provided amply in every respect for alteration, or amendment, or future action by Congress. That was a measure to meet an emergency, an emergency which was imminent, and it had no reference whatever to anything else. The streets upon which the main tracks were laid were not involved at all, only those across which turn-outs to warehouses and stores had been laid.

When a company comes here asking the privilege of coming into this city, asking a franchise which must be worth something, I will vote that its value, properly ascertained, shall be paid by that company. If these gentlemen are so anxious to have this applied to the other corporations, let them introduce their bill, and let the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia not simply promise that he will see that the bill has attention in his committee, but let him see to it that it gets out of the committee and gets before this House for action; and then will we be in a position to reach them all. To-day there is one before us, and we have an opportunity of acting. Exempt this, and you have hereafter three opponents instead of two, to any proposition to assess the value of these franchises and charge them to the company enjoying them. You will have all of these corporate interests banded together in one interest, opposing any future action by Congress.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I think we all understand the proposition. It means that a weak road is to pay for something which the other strong companies are not paying.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Why do you call it a weak road when it has 11,000 miles of track?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not know how many thousand miles of track it has, but it is now trying to get in here, and when there was a proposition here relating to the Pennsylvania Railroad it will be remembered that I urged upon this House most warmly that that was the time to make the Pennsylvania Railroad pay for the public property which it had used for so many years.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What is the record of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] on that?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will say that I think I would have been successful in that attempt if my friend from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] had been as earnest as he is now.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I thank you for your high estimate of my power. However, his courtesy leads him into error. I did not cause its defeat.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman happened to be against me and I failed. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey, the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 135.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add section 9—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to offer this amendment as a new section to come in between 8 and 9?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It is to come in between sections 8 and 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. In protection of the employés, air brakes shall be used on all freight and passenger trains run and operated in the District of Columbia under the grant in this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I raise the point of order against that amendment that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not see why, Mr. Chairman. I wish to be heard upon that point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] raise a question of order against this amendment?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, the bill provides that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall regulate the speed at which trains shall run. This, as a matter of course, is for the protection of life and property. Now, we all know that a great number of accidents occur on freight and passenger trains by the absence of air brakes. It is a question to which the whole country has given its attention. The number of accidents is simply frightful. Now, here is an opportunity for Congress to announce its intentions and its views upon this subject.

By the use of air brakes there are very few accidents, but the old way of braking, by wheel and chain, which requires brakemen to run from one end of the train to the other on the top of the cars, is attended with great risk and frequent injury. Modern railroading requires air brakes, and many of the principal railroads of the country use them on freight as well as passenger trains. This is simply an amendment for the protection of employés. The attention of the country has been called to the subject in every message of President Harrison during his administration, and it is a question with which the whole country is familiar. The employés on all the great railroads of the country have petitioned for it, and the Committee on Railways and Canals, having the subject in charge, have, I believe, reported a bill in favor of it.

Now, the amendments which we offer here are not intended to defeat this bill. This company can well afford to accept this amendment, and because of the cries of "Pennsylvania Railroad!" and "Monopoly!" the friends of the bill have been refusing to accept amendments that are in the interest of humanity. I appeal to the gentleman from South Carolina in charge of this bill to accept this amendment. It will do no harm, and certainly will be in the interest of and for the protection of lives and limbs of the employés.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and let it come on its merits. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment, which I hope the gentleman will accept, and that is to strike out the words "under the grant of this bill:" so that it will read: "In protection of the employés, air brakes shall be used on all freight and passenger trains run and operated in the District of Columbia."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I accept that amendment, and I accept it on behalf of every member who has offered amendments to this bill.

Mr. ATKINSON. I make the point of order against that amendment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not been stated yet. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] desire to modify his amendment?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I modify it by accepting the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment as modified by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add section 9: In protection of the employés air-brakes shall be used on all freight and passenger trains run and operated in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina against the original amendment has been withdrawn.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I raise the point of order against the amendment as amended for the simple reason that this is a bill to let another railroad come into the city. If we undertake to legislate as to all railroads, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] has stated, we will have all of these roads combining against this road, and they will make this a pretext for defeating this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I said they would be against further legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order against the amendment in its present terms.

Mr. BINGHAM. Who made the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to renew my own amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman now offers the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In protection of employés, air-brakes shall be used on all freight and passenger trains run and operated in the District of Columbia under the grant of this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not suppose, Mr. Chairman, that anybody will vote for it; it is so manifestly unjust to lay down a rule for one railroad company and not for another.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. You have just defeated action as to the other railroads.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I understand this game; it is intended to defeat this bill. The Baltimore and Ohio Company brings cars in here from all sections of the country with through freight, either with or without air-brakes, and so does the Pennsylvania Railroad; but when it comes to the Norfolk and Western, when it comes here with through freight cars without air-brakes from Columbus, Ohio, or elsewhere, what is it to do with them? Why, if this amendment be adopted it must stop those cars outside the District of Columbia. The result will be that the Norfolk and Western can have no through freight except that which comes in cars with air-brakes, while the other railroads entering the District can bring in their through freight in all kinds of cars.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about this amendment. There is an effort here to scare the friends of this bill from squarely voting for it and against this amendment. I am against the amendment, and yet I introduced the first bill ever introduced in the American Congress on this subject, and substantially that bill passed this body at the last session and is now pending in the Senate. We have already taken action upon this question of the protection of railroad employés. The desired result can not be attained by this amendment. This amendment will not carry out the wishes of the railway employés of this country, in whose behalf I have presented petitions representing 80,000 men employed on the railways in the United States.

A measure for this purpose requires to be carefully guarded. A time must be fixed when it shall go into effect. If this requirement is put into one railroad, it must be put upon all the others at the same time, so that each will be adjusted to all the others. Whatever may be the good motives of the gentleman offering this amendment, I say the amendment itself is not in the interest of the railway employés. They desire a broad, comprehensive, well constructed, well considered bill that will touch every railroad in the United States, and such a bill has already passed this body. I hope the amendment will be voted down. [Applause].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I think that my good faith in offering this amendment was illustrated by my willingness to accept the amendment to it which was offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE]. I have heard no good answer to the reasons in favor of this amendment. The allegation that it would apply to the Norfolk and Western and not to the other railroads is no answer to the fact that the whole country to-day is calling for some legislation of this kind. We are asked here to grant a franchise, and, because other railroads have abused their privileges, because there are monopolies in the land, is that any reason why we should grant a new railroad a franchise in the same unguarded way in which the old ones have been granted?

Why not add to it all the safeguards which are necessary to prevent this railroad at least from doing what the others have done. Is it any excuse for giving this franchise uncoupled with conditions providing for the safety of the employés of this railroad, to say that other railroads have had unguarded franchises? Now, Mr. Chairman, here is an opportunity to face this question. It is no answer to say that this Congress has passed a bill providing for the protection of railway employés. This railroad comes here and asks for certain privileges and franchises. We are about to grant them. Let us do it coupled with conditions which will insure the safety of the people who are to operate their trains.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to prevail.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 119.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of "no quorum" being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 3, noes 164.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report this bill with the amendments to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 3591) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company of Virginia to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report it to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with certain amendments.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon the pending amendments, and the bill to its engrossment and third reading.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. If a separate vote is not desired upon any amendment, the Chair will submit the question on the amendments in gross.

The amendments were adopted. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and the bill was passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, our day has not yet expired, but I shall not bring any further business before the House at this time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following; which was read:

Resolved, first, That the remainder of this legislative day be devoted to the consideration of such bills as may be called up by the Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President and members of Congress.

Resolved, second, That Wednesday, the 11th instant, beginning after the second morning hour, be assigned to the consideration of such business as may be called up by the Committee on Indian Affairs, having been previously reported therefrom.

Resolved, third, That Thursday, the 12th instant, beginning after the second morning hour, be assigned for the consideration of such business as may be called up by the Committee on Naval Affairs, having been previously reported therefrom.

Resolved, fourth, That Saturday, the 14th instant, beginning after the second morning hour, be assigned for the consideration of such business as may be called up by the Committee on the Judiciary, having been previously reported therefrom.

This order not to interfere with the right of the House to consider revenue and appropriation bills.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I demand the previous question on agreeing to this report.

The previous question was seconded; and under the operation thereof the resolutions were adopted.

On motion of Mr. MCMILLIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON HON. JOHN G. WARWICK.

Mr. OUTHWAITE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 18th day of February, 1893, beginning at 3 o'clock p. m., be set apart for the purpose of paying tribute to the memory of Hon. John G. Warwick, lately a Representative from the Sixteenth district of Ohio.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT, VICE-PRESIDENT, AND REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order for the remainder of this legislative day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, first, That the remainder of this legislative day be devoted to the consideration of such bills as may be called up by the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN], chairman of the committee referred to in the resolution just read, will indicate what bill he desires to call up.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I desire to call up House joint resolution No. 98.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 98) proposing amendments to the Constitution substituting the 31st day of December for the 4th day of March as the commencement and termination of the official terms of members of the House of Representatives and of United States Senators, and providing that Congress shall hold its annual meeting on the second Monday in January, and substituting the 30th of April for the 4th of March as the date for the commencement and limitation of the terms of the President and Vice-President.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following articles be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as amendments to the Constitution of the United States, namely:

"ARTICLE —.

"The terms of the President and Vice-President who may be in office when this amendment shall have been ratified shall continue until noon on the 30th day of April next succeeding the 4th day of March upon which their terms would otherwise expire, and the 30th day of April, at noon, shall thereafter be substituted for the 4th day of March as the commencement and termination of the official terms of the President and Vice-President.

"The twelfth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States is amended by striking out the words '4th of March' and substituting instead thereof the words '30th day of April, at noon.'

"ARTICLE —.

"The 31st day of December, at noon, is substituted for the 4th day of March as the commencement and termination of the official terms of the Senators and of the Members of the House of Representatives.

"The Congress in existence when this amendment is ratified shall not hold a second annual session, and its term of office shall expire on the 31st day of the month of December following the date of the election of the Representatives to the next succeeding Congress: Provided, That there shall be no diminution of the salaries of the members of the Congress whose term is curtailed by this amendment. This amendment shall not apply to members of said Congress who may be elected to the next Congress.

"The Senators whose term would otherwise expire on the 4th day of March next succeeding the day on which the term of the first Congress shall commence after the ratification of this amendment shall continue in office until the 4th of March unless their successors are sooner appointed or elected.

"Congress shall assemble at least once in each year, and such meeting shall be on the second Monday in January, unless Congress shall by law appoint a different day."

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, one object of this resolution is to change the time of the inauguration of the President from the 4th of March until the 30th day of April. The reason for this change is obvious. It grows out of the discomfort attendant upon inaugurations at the time when they now take place. I do not care to go into that branch of the proposition to any great extent, for it is rather a matter of taste and comfort than one of principle; and while I am in favor of that part of the measure, I shall leave its discussion to other gentlemen who have originated it.

Another branch of the proposed constitutional amendment would prohibit the assembling of a Congress after it had been beaten at the polls. It fixes the convening of Congress for the 1st of January after an election; and in that way those gentlemen who have been defeated by their constituents will be at the end of their official terms, and will no longer have power to act in a legislative capacity.

I know there is a theory abroad that after the election of a Congress a long time should intervene in order that the representative chosen may prepare himself for his duties and the country may get ready for any changes which may be brought about in legislation. It has always seemed to me that such a position in a republican form of government is, to say the least, anomalous.

The idea that a man shall be elected as a member of this body and not be qualified at the time he is elected to perform his duties here is certainly a very singular one. But over and above that the idea that a long time must elapse after the people have announced their will upon public questions before that will is to be put into force is in my judgment contrary to republican principles. Let us take the recent example. The people last fall declared unmistakably in favor of certain changes in the policy of this Government.

All those matters were thoroughly discussed. There was not a section of the country, there was not a press in the country in which these questions were not discussed; and there was scarcely a man in the country who had not formed a decided opinion concerning them. Yet though in November last the people expressed their will strongly upon fundamental matters of government, demanding fundamental changes, if you please, yet before that will can be expressed in legislation we must wait for a period of over a year. I can not understand the objection to the change contemplated by the joint resolution now under consideration. Either the people know what they desire or they do not know what they desire.

If they do not know what they desire, then republican government is a failure. If they do know what they desire, then the legislative branch of the Government should be quick in responding to their will. Why there should be delay, why it is necessary for time to elapse in order that there may be a second thought, and why it is necessary that any other agencies or any other sources of information should be resorted to save the will of the people as expressed, I can not understand. The people in the last election spoke in the most decided tones in favor of tariff reform, in favor of a revision of the tariff, in favor of the reduction of the tariff; and yet, while that has been declared to be a prime necessity, a necessity so great that an administration has been overturned and a great party thrust out of power, yet we must wait, as I said before, until next winter, until a year from now, before the policy which the people have indorsed can have voice or any potency in the affairs of the nation.

Mr. BURROWS. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. Does not my colleague overlook the power of the incoming Administration to convene a session of Congress early next spring?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will answer his question. I overlook nothing. That question is asked for a political purpose, but there is no politics in this bill. What I might do if I were President and assumed to take charge of this Government is one question. My own idea is, and I have no hesitancy in expressing it here, that we can not too quickly get at this work of reform; that we can not too quickly assault, overthrow, and blot out, as I hope, forever, the false policy and vicious legislation which the party to which I hope we are now saying a long farewell from power has planted on the statute books of this nation.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is not in favor of exceptional use of power, it is not in favor of the authority granted and existing under the Constitution to call a special session in special emergencies to which I advert. But I stand here in favor of a general rule, something not dependent upon Presidents, something not dependent upon political exigencies, something entirely independent of accidents, something which shall be a general rule, the object of which shall be always a prompt response to the popular will as expressed at the ballot box. That is the object of the pending resolution. Whether a special session should be called, whether it should be called on the 4th of March, whether it should be called later, in September, are matters which belong exclusively under the Constitution to the incoming President, and with him, so great is my confidence in him, I am content that the responsibility shall rest.

This is the object of this resolution. It is meant to bring the Representatives of the people nearer to the people themselves. It is meant to call forth prompt compliance with the expression of the popular will as expressed by the election of the members of this House. If that is accomplished then I believe that we will have a real representative government, representative as the British Parliament is of the people of that country, representative as the Assembly in France is of the people of that country, representative even as the legislative power of the Government of Germany, to which we do not look for any examples of legislative freedom—representative even as the parliamentary power in that country is of the people who elect them; promptness of action on the popular will, obedience to the will of the people, an embodiment in the statute books or in a law of the will of the people as expressed by their vote at the polls in the election of Representatives to Congress. We are now only in a feeble sense the representatives of the people. We have witnessed within a very short period the people overturning the House of Representatives in a manner never equaled in the history of the country before, sending them forth, I might say, with obliquy and disgrace, and yet the same body meeting here after their defeat and condemnation, forcing legislation upon their successors, forcing burdens upon their successors, willfully, recklessly, even consciously pursuing a policy which has been condemned by the people, to obstruct and embarrass their successors, which was certainly meant to do that and certainly was in contempt of the will of the people as expressed at the ballot box.

I now resign the remainder of such time as I may have to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Before the distinguished gentleman from Michigan takes his seat will he permit me to ask him a question, he having reported this resolution?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I did not report the resolution. It was reported by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN]; but I will take pleasure in answering the question if I can.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman for the purpose of getting his opinion of two provisions of this bill. One is to be found at the top of page 2 and is in the following words:

> The terms of the President and Vice-President who may be in office when this amendment shall have been ratified shall continue until noon on the 30th day of April next succeeding the 4th day of March upon which their terms would otherwise expire, and the 30th day of April, at noon, shall thereafter be substituted for the 4th day of March as the commencement and termination of the official terms of the President and Vice-President.

And the next is at the bottom of the same page.

> The Congress in existence when this amendment is ratified shall not hold a second annual session, and its term of office shall expire on the 31st day of the month of December following the date of the election of the Representatives to the next succeeding Congress: Provided, That there shall be no diminution of the salaries of the members of the Congress whose term is curtailed by this amendment.

Now, I ask my friend who is speaking in favor of the resolution as to his opinion of the power of Congress to extend the time of the President and Vice-President and curtail the period of service of the members of this House?

Mr. CHIPMAN. My friend forgets that this is a constitutional amendment.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. No, I do not forget that.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Well, if my friend can not see the power of Congress to propose a constitutional amendment to the States, and the power of the States to adopt that amendment, I am afraid I can not enlighten him upon the subject any further.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The question is as to the power to pass a resolution curtailing the period for which the people have elected members of Congress.

Mr. CHIPMAN. But this is a constitutional amendment.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I understand that.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Well, my dear sir, the power of amendment is affluent.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The people are acting.

Mr. CHIPMAN. The people are acting. The Constitution itself puts no limit upon the power of the people to act in this regard. It is unbounded. It is as broad as the will of the people themselves. Neither in the Constitution, nor so far as I have been able to investigate the subject, in any authority or in any suggestion of legal authority is there any doubt upon that question. We have even been embroiled in war because there was no limit to that power. The people can abolish the whole Constitution. They can abolish both myself and my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], so far as our public functions are concerned. They can change the entire form of our Government, provided the people will assent to it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman accept an amendment fixing the expiration of the term of Senators and Representatives at the same time as the expiration of the term of the President and Vice-President?

Mr. CHIPMAN. The reason for not doing that is simply the reason I have given heretofore.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I did not hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. CHIPMAN. We wish no Congress to sit after it is defeated. That is the only reason.

Mr. BRETZ. That is a good reason.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have read the resolution which has been reported by a unanimous vote of the committee in this Congress, and in every Congress since I have been a member with but one exception, that exception being in the last Congress. The chairman of the Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President in that Congress, who is not here to-day, told me that there would be a report; but because of the fact that a bill known as the force bill occupied the attention of the committee, it was not reported in the last Congress.

I have addressed the House on repeated occasions in behalf of this amendment, and I believe that the unanimous opinion of that committee would have been formulated had it not been for the fact that the time of the committee was taken up in consideration of another question. I would like to have the resolution now read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. CRAIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, instead of harassing the House by having the report read, perhaps it would be more efficacious for me to discuss the resolution as briefly as possible, in order that members of the House may understand what it actually means.

As members know, Mr. Speaker, they are elected in November, and for thirteen months afterwards they are practically private citizens. Members come to the House in December of the next year. They enter upon the discussion of questions which perhaps have been settled, and for which and to which they owe their positions in Congress. It does not infrequently happen that more than one of these members-elect dies. They draw their salaries, but they are not members of the House for all that time.

There is no Speaker of the House for nine months. When they come here to legislate upon questions which have been before the people thirteen months before their election, they are either newly elected members or, as not infrequently happens, they are defeated members. The old members of the House well know that a man who has been defeated by his constituency feels that he has been repudiated by them, and he is not as efficient a member as he would be if he came fresh from the people.

The theory of our Government was that the members of the House should come here in touch with the people and that the members of the Senate would be more conservative than the members of the House and would restrain that legislation which might be attempted to be forced upon the people by reason of a sudden change on questions politic or economic. The fact is that the Senate is more in touch with the people than the House, because whenever a State Legislature meets and there is a change of one-third of the members of the Senate that State Legislature selects a man to represent the State in the Senate. Whether outside influences affect that Legislature or not we will not now stop to consider.

But members of the House are chosen, elected, and sent to this House thirteen months after the questions upon which they were chosen have been settled. A number of years ago this House passed what is called the Mills bill. Whether the result of the election succeeding the passage of that bill was based upon the Mills bill or not it is not necessary for us to determine. But certainly the policy that governed in the regulation of the economic question which we call the tariff was changed. In the short session the Congress which passed the Mills bill legislated for this country. Two years afterwards the McKinley bill was placed before this country, and whether that bill changed the opinions of the voters or not it is equally unnecessary to determine; but certain it is that the very Congress that passed that bill legislated for the country after it had been repudiated by the people at the polls.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, to be considered in connection with this suggestion in the shape of a resolution is this: Members of the House are elected, they come here to their post of duty, and before they have served one session, they are called upon to return to their homes and contest their reëlection or renomination, with this dilemma presented for their consideration. Their enemies will charge them with abandoning their post of duty, and their friends will say that unless they come they will be defeated.

If this resolution should be ratified and become a part of the Constitution every man elected to Congress will have served two sessions without any election between the sessions, and will be in a position to go to his people and render an account of his stewardship. He will not be put to the test of standing here and taking the chance of defeat, or of returning to his home and taking an equal chance of defeat. And there is not a man outside of the delegation from Texas who will not bear witness to the fact that he has been compelled, either individually or in some other way, during the long session, to present the reasons why he should be returned to Congress.

The question arises that was suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], whether a constitutional amendment is necessary to effect this change. I assert it as a legal proposition, which will not be controverted by any lawyer on either side of the House, that a term of office which is fixed by the Constitution can neither be enlarged nor curtailed by legislative action. Whenever the constitution of a State or the Constitution of the United States fixes a term of office for an individual, that term is limited by the Constitution and can not be altered by legislative action. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] will give me his attention.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while it is true there is nothing in the Constitution which absolutely fixes the term of a member of Congress in exact language, there is a provision which says that the Representatives shall be elected every second year. The Constitutional Convention which sat in Philadelphia provided that whenever nine States should have ratified the Constitution which was presented, that the Congress of the United States should provide by resolution (which was done) when the electors should be selected, when they should vote for President and Vice-President, and when the proceedings under the new Constitution should begin.

The first Wednesday in March was fixed for the beginning of the proceedings under the new Government. It happened by accident to be the 4th of March. From that day to this, Mr. Speaker, the Congress of the United States has begun its sessions, and has terminated its sessions on the 4th of March; and Mr. Boutwell, Attorney-General of the United States, in an opinion which is quoted in the Book of Rules, asserts as a lawyer, and I do not think any lawyer will controvert his statement, that the action of the convention, ratified by the Congress, has fixed it as a part of the Constitution that the terms of members of Congress begin on the 4th of March and terminate on the 4th of March. It has been recognized by every Congress that has ever met. It will be recognized by this Congress; and it is just as much a part of the Constitution as if it had been absolutely written in that instrument.

Now, various suggestions have been made. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] has presented a bill in which he provides that the Congress shall meet on the 4th day of March. That does not change the necessity for a special session every fourth year to count the electoral vote. It brings us here at a time when we ought not to be here. It gives us two long sessions beginning at an inclement time of the year. We accomplish nothing. We will still be in the same predicament that we find ourselves in now; and there is nothing to be gained from his suggestions, with all due respect to him. And, Mr. Speaker, I repeat, as I said a few moments ago, you can not curtail the term of members of Congress fixed by the Constitution by a legislative enactment.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR rose.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio as much time as he desires and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I prefer to take the floor in my own right in opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had promised to recognize the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] in opposition, but if the gentleman from Mississippi is not ready to proceed and the gentleman from Ohio does not desire to accept time from the gentleman from Texas the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am content that the Chair shall recognize the gentleman from Ohio at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] is recognized in his own right.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt any lengthy discussion of the pending resolution, or state in detail at present the grounds of my opposition. I shall simply explain the kind of an amendment that I think should be made if any is attempted. My objection to the joint resolution now pending is that it is too radical, goes too far, changes the Constitution entirely too much. I desire to offer a substitute which conforms to the recommendation made by the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop in his celebrated address delivered on this floor on the 21st of February, 1886, at the time of the dedication of the Washington Monument. The address was read by Governor Long, of Massachusetts. I simply propose to substitute for the pending joint resolution another joint resolution which will accomplish a single object, the extension of the terms of the President, Vice-President, and members of Congress. It will defer the inauguration of President and Vice-President until the 30th day of April, and extend the term of members of Congress from the 4th day of March until the 30th day of April.

The advantages of this are, in the first place, that we shall have a more favorable season of the year for the inauguration of the President and Vice-President. Gentlemen will remember that for many years our Presidents and Vice-Presidents have been inaugurated upon days that were very inclement and stormy. Inauguration day has come to be a great day in this country. Washington has become a large city. It has accommodations for a great many people, and the people come here from one end of the land to the other for the purpose of attending the inauguration. At each successive inauguration there is a larger attendance than at the one preceding, and the attendance at the next inauguration will probably be greater than at any which has gone before.

Now, it seems to me that it is not very desirable to bring so many people from all parts of the country to Washington at the beginning of March, when the storms of winter have not yet abated, and when the weather is generally too inclement for either man or beast to be out doors, especially in view of the fact that we inaugurate our President on the east front of the Capitol where there is no shelter or protection of any kind. And it seems to me that it would be a wise act on the part of the American Congress to postpone inauguration day until the 30th day of April, the time when George Washington was first inaugurated President of the United States, the time Robert C. Winthrop thinks all of our Presidents ought to be inaugurated.

That is one argument in favor of my substitute. I shall not stop to talk about the number of deaths which the newspapers have again and again attributed to exposure to the storms which generally occur on and about inauguration day. This is another argument, however, in favor of this substitute. And still another is that with a population of 65,000,000 of people requiring and demanding increased legislation, the short session of Congress is inadequate to give time for the consideration of the many measures which ought to be considered. Very few, comparatively, of the ten or twelve thousand bills introduced in this Congress will ever get a moment's consideration.

Mr. REED. It does not seem to be inadequate in this Congress.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Well, the gentleman does not know yet. This Congress has not ended. It is impossible for us to tell how many bills may go over. Appropriation bills may fail to pass before we reach the 4th of March. The amendment which I recommend would add about two months to the short session of Congress, the month of March and the month of April, two of the most delightful months of the whole year in this latitude and in this city. What better season of the year could you select for keeping the Congress together than during the months of March and April, using the time between the 4th of March and the 30th of April for the transaction of the public business? This would enable Congress to more than double the usual legislation of a short session, and would give time to complete much unfinished work.

Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that I am at liberty to occupy any considerable amount of the time which has been assigned to this committee, but I would like to have an expression by this House upon the substitute which I offer. If I can not do this I will at least call attention to it, as I think this change will be made sooner or later. I think it is due to Mr. Winthrop that we should consider this question at some time, and I do not see any objection to taking an expression of the House upon a question which he urged with so much eloquence. It is not a mere sentiment, but a matter of business. It is due to the people of the United States that inauguration day should be fixed at a more favorable season of the year than the beginning of March, and I think that a measure of this kind is in the interest of good government and in the interest of the business of the country, because it increases the length of the short session of Congress from the 4th day of March to the 30th day of April and gives time to complete a large amount of unfinished business. I can see no objection to this change. I have never heard a valid objection to it. Now, Mr. Speaker, without occupying any more time, I move the substitute, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read, for the joint resolution which is pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, substituting the 30th day of April for the 4th day of March as the commencement and termination of the official terms of members of the House of Representatives and of United States Senators, and substituting the 30th of April for the 4th of March as the date for the commencement and limitation of the term of the President and Vice-President.

Resolved, etc., That the following articles be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as amendments to the Constitution of the United States, namely:

"ARTICLE —.

"The term of office of the President and Vice-President shall continue until the 30th day of April, in the year 1893, at noon, and the 30th day of April, at noon, shall thereafter be substituted for the 4th day of March as the commencement and termination of the official term of the President and Vice-President."

The twelfth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States shall be amended by striking out the words "4th day of March," and substituting instead thereof the words "30th day in April, at noon."

"ARTICLE —.

"The 30th day of April, at noon, is substituted for the 4th day of March as the commencement and termination of the official term of the Senators and of the members of the House of Representatives.

"The official term of the members of the House of Representatives of Congress in existence when the first members of the House of Representatives are elected after the ratification of this amendment shall be continued to the 30th day of April, at noon.

"The official term of Senators whose existing term would expire on the 4th day of March next preceding the day on which the term of the first Congress shall commence after the ratification of this amendment, shall be continued to the 30th day of April, at noon."

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, the pending amendment, as I understand it, has the unanimous support of the committee reporting it, and my substitute has had no consideration here or elsewhere in this session of Congress. I would have been glad to have supported the amendment which the committee reports, as it contains among other things the substance of my substitute, but it contains so many other things which I regard objectionable that I could not do so, which I shall refer to hereafter. For the present I shall yield the floor and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the proposition which comes to us from the committee is submitted under a clause of the Constitution giving to Congress the power to propose constitutional amendments. It is very evident from the provision of the Constitution on this subject that the framers of that instrument did not design to give to Congress the power to propose amendments thereto except accompanied with very great restrictions which are provided in the Constitution. I doubt very much whether a change in the organic law of the land ought to be made unless there is some imperative necessity for it, without a convention coming directly from the people themselves. It is evident that the framers of the Constitution intended that Congress should not be clothed with power to propose amendments to it, except under circumstances of great restraint. In Article 5 of the Constitution it is provided:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808—

It will be observed that the power of Congress to propose a constitutional amendment is limited by the very terms of the instrument itself.

The amendment now proposed has been embodied in a resolution offered by the honorable gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN]. I do not object to the purposes proposed to be accomplished by my honorable friend from Texas; but I doubt much whether this method of changing the Constitution is one which can be accomplished except by waiting a long period of time. It would require the action of three-fourths of the State Legislatures to ratify this proposed amendment. I think that the difficulties under which we now labor can be remedied by an act of Congress and that everything sought by the proposition of my friend from Texas, with the exception of the change of the date of the inauguration of the President of the United States, can probably be thus accomplished.

The provision of the Constitution in Article I in reference to the meeting of Congress is as follows:

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year; and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

The time for the assembling of Congress is thus fixed by the Constitution, yet the authority to change it by law is expressly given. Now, when the Constitution was framed our Union embraced, comparatively speaking, few States, with a small population stretching along the Atlantic border, mainly an agricultural people; and the presumption, I take it, in the minds of the framers of the Constitution was that Congress might safely be called together on the first Monday in December, it doubtless being assumed that both sessions would terminate by the 4th day of March.

Mr. CRAIN. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, there was no such provision. On the first meeting of Congress in New York the Vice-President was installed on the 21st day of April, the President of the United States was inaugurated the 30th day of April; so that the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi is not historically correct.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I am aware of the time when President Washington was inaugurated, and that it was not the 4th day of March. Nor have I made any statement to the contrary. The provision of the Constitution to which I am now referring prescribes alone the time for the meeting of Congress. I again read the provision:

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year; and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December unless they—shall by law appoint a different day.

Mr. CRAIN. But there was no Congress that met on the 4th of March when our Government began. The Vice-President was installed on the 21st day of April——

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. That is true.

Mr. CRAIN. And the President of the United States, because of the lack of a quorum previously, was not inaugurated till the 30th of April.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The gentleman is correct, but that does not affect the strength of my argument. By the provision of the Constitution Congress was authorized to change the time of the meeting of Congress as fixed in that instrument.

Mr. CRAIN. I do not dispute the gentleman's position that a change in the time of the meeting of Congress can be made by law; but my proposition goes farther than that.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I understand that.

Mr. Speaker, in view of what I have stated I introduced on the first day of the present session a bill to change the time of the meeting of Congress. I did so not with the view of controverting any future or pending amendment which might be presented——

Mr. CRAIN. Then the gentleman is not opposed to my amendment?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I do not object; if the amendment can be passed afterward well and good; but I say that we ought to pass first a law such as I have proposed. Therefore, on the first day of the present session I introduced a bill which can be passed at this session and if necessary can be made to apply at the next succeeding session.

My objection to undertaking to accomplish the object by a constitutional amendment is based in a large degree upon the fact that we must obtain the concurrence of three-fourths of the States, and that necessarily a long period of time must elapse before the change in the time in the meeting of Congress can be accomplished in that way.

The bill which I introduced embraces but three paragraphs. Its purpose is to remedy the many inconveniences which my friend from Texas is aiming to remedy by a constitutional amendment. I think these inconveniences can be obviated by the passage of this bill, which I ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. CRAIN. Will my very affable friend from Mississippi give way for a moment's interruption?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. After the Clerk has read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9731) to change the time for meeting of the Congress of the United States to the first Monday after the 4th day of March in each and every year.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Congress of the United States shall assemble on the first Monday after the 4th day of March in each and every year, instead of the first Monday in December in each and every year, as provided for in paragraph 2 of section 4 of the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 2. That this change in the time of the assemblage of the Congress of the United States shall apply to and begin with the Fifty-third Congress of the United States.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman in charge of this measure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] has the floor.

Mr. HOOKER, of Mississippi. I will yield first to the gentleman from Texas, and afterward to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CRAIN. I will listen to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like to ask this question as to the operation of this joint resolution, in the event of the election of President being thrown into the House of Representatives, which Congress would have the choice of the President?

Mr. CRAIN. The Congress chosen at the time the President was chosen.

Mr. COCKRAN. The existing Congress would have nothing to say in the matter?

Mr. CRAIN. Nothing. The one that is elected with the President would count the electoral votes. Because, I call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact, if he will notice, there is a provision embodied in the resolution that there shall be a change in the twelfth amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. COCKRAN. I had observed it; and it was to get light on that provision of the resolution that I asked the question.

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman from Mississippi I hope will also yield to me to ask him two questions.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. CRAIN. In the first place I want to know, if the bill of the gentleman from Mississippi should be adopted, whether it would not be necessary to have a special session of Congress to count the electoral votes? That is the first question.

I ask another question, also; whether he would not have to do what he has already done, leave his post of duty here and go down into the State of Mississippi to fight for his renomination?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I will answer, Mr. Speaker, as I proceed in my remarks, the inquiries of my friend from Texas; but I will say to him first that I do not think there is anything in the way of the passage of my bill. As to the fact of members leaving the House and going into their Congressional districts for the purpose of attending conventions that make nominations, my bill has for its very purpose the prevention of any such thing as that. It has occurred in his own State that members have been required to do just that thing.

Mr. CRAIN. I beg pardon; we from Texas never have to do anything of that kind. We are sent back unanimously. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The gentleman says he never had anything of the kind to do. Well, we have seen some instances in our service here where they did not unanimously send back the same members, much to the regret of other members who have associated with them. It is as important for members of Congress from Texas to appear before their nominating conventions as to appear before the people for reëlection.

Mr. CRAIN. We do not do it.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. But, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the provision of the Constitution which I have already read, clothing Congress with the power to change the time of the meeting of Congress is unquestionably a power that may be exercised by law, because the existing Constitution clothes the Congress with that power absolutely and unqualifiedly.

Now, when the Constitution was adopted we were, as I have already said, a sparse population, consisting of the thirteen original States scattered along our Atlantic frontier, mainly and largely an agricultural people. The idea of the framers of the Constitution was then that we might assemble on the 1st day of December in each and every year and that each session of Congress should therefore terminate on the 4th of March.

They never contemplated at that time the necessity, but they provided for it wisely, as they did in every other instance make provision for such exigencies as might arise, and they engrafted on the Constitution a provision giving Congress power to change the time of the meeting of Congress, looking forward, as they sagely, wisely, and prophetically did, to that distant day when the vast increase of population and in the business of the people of the country would require a longer session of Congress than one of three months.

I say, therefore, we may conclude that the provision in the Constitution was adopted because they foresaw that the necessity would arise at some time for a prolonged session of Congress; and we have seen some of them since we have been here. As an illustration of it, what is is known as the long session of Congress we have known to extend in one instance here to the 9th day of August, and in another and still later Congress it absolutely sat through the whole summer solstice and up to the 20th day of October. We can understand, therefore, that the framers of the Constitution, looking forward to the vast development of this country as to population and business interests, contemplated that there would be necessity for greatly prolonging the sessions of Congress in the future, and to-day we have sessions far longer than were necessary at the time of the adoption of the Constitution.

What I propose, Mr. Speaker, is that we pass a bill requiring Congress to assemble on the first Monday after the 4th day of March in each and every year, instead of as now on the first Monday of December. The first great object to be accomplished is that the President elect, to whatever party he may belong, for there is nothing partisan in the bill, will find a legislative body in session ready to receive his message and before whom he can at once develop the policies of his administration.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. CRAIN. Would that not be true if my resolution were adopted?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. It may be, but you can not accomplish your work except by the long process of an amendment to the Constitution, whereas mine can be accomplished by a bill which can be passed at this session of Congress.

I was going on to say, Mr. Speaker, that the President elect, whomsoever he may be, if Congress meets on the first Monday after the 4th day March, would find the legislative body in session before whom he could develop at once the policies of his administration.

We have seen an instance in the history of the country, Mr. Speaker, in which the failure of the existence of a legislative body at the time when the Chief Executive was inaugurated, has produced unfortunate results, as we think. Had the great tariff message delivered by Mr. Cleveland to the Congress of the United States in 1887 been delivered to a Congress in session when he was inaugurated in 1885, results very different from those which happened in 1888 may very well have been anticipated.

But I say if my bill is adopted, it will allow the Chief Executive to find a legislative body in session at the beginning of his term before whom he can develop the policy of his administration.

Something has been said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] and others upon the ground of inconvenience as to the period of the year in which the inauguration takes place. If this bill which I have introduced should become a law, then the Congress of the United States would assemble on the first Monday after the 4th day of March. Leaving out the first few days of the month of March, the months of March, April, May, and June are pleasant months in the city of Washington, the most pleasant of the year during the principal part of them, and the Congress could sit from the first Monday in March, when it assembles, until the last of June, and then could take a recess until the first day of October, giving the usual three months' vacation for the body itself and avoiding the mortality which we old Congressmen here have so often seen visit both this House and the Senate because of the necessity under the present rule of sitting here during the heated months of summer.

Then let Congress reassemble again in October and sit for as many months as the business of the country may require; and in this way, when the second session of Congress assembles, instead of meeting as it now does on the first Monday in December and with its vacation of two weeks at the Christmas holidays, virtually being in session but six weeks, the Congress of the United States for the second session would meet on the first Monday after the 4th of March and be in session six, seven, eight, or nine months, if the business of the country required it, and the second session could be that long if the business of the country required it.

Why should we impose upon ourselves the necessity of remaining here during the summer months when all the business that is before the Congress of the United States, both in the long and the short session, might well be transacted in the pleasant months of the year?

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman is no doubt aware, from his knowledge of his history of parliamentary legislation in our country, that his very plan was once adopted and subequently abandoned.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I am not aware of that. I think this is the first time it has ever been proposed. There have been changes made with reference to this matter, but all except one were temporary changes. There was a change made during the administration of Andrew Johnson, when the incoming Congress was required to meet at an earlier date than that provided by law. Afterward there was a general law passed upon the subject, and that law remained in existence but for a brief period, when, I think in 1881, it was repealed. Therefore we are relegated by this last repeal of the law to the existing provision of the Constitution.

Mr. CRAIN. Is not the gentleman aware that we have had two and three sessions a year?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Oh, yes; of course we have had extra sessions.

Mr. CRAIN. Beginning on the 6th of March?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Of course the President can call a session whenever he desires, or it can be done by law; but my idea was to let the first term of Congress begin on the first Monday in March after the 4th of March, and let it last eight or nine months if the business of the country required it.

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman has not yet answered my question about having an extra session to count the electoral vote.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I will come to that in good time. If the bill which I propose should become a law, the first session might be eight or nine months in duration and the second session might be seven, eight, or nine months in duration. Now, while it is true that we have had exceedingly inclement weather at several inaugurations on the 4th of March, yet Congress would really be in session during the whole of the pleasant months of the year, and the first session could be six, seven, eight, or nine months long, and the second session could be equally long if the business of the country required it.

Now, this can be accomplished by law. The amendments proposed by my honorable friend from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] can only be accomplished by amendments to the Constitution which, under the provisions I have read, will require ratification by three-fourths of the States, and would take a long period to adopt.

Mr. CRAIN But that is true of every amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. If the Congress is required to meet at the time this resolution provides, there might arise a very grave difficulty in the management of the business interests of the country.

Mr. CRAIN. How?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. It might meet in January and the Executive, who would not be inaugurated until the 30th day of April, might find a Congress already in session for some time, which held adverse views to those held by himself.

Mr. CRAIN. Does not that objection apply equally to your bill?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Why, no, sir.

Mr. CRAIN. Why not?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Because under my bill the Congress will assemble on the first Monday after the President is inaugurated.

Mr. CRAIN. How can you tell whether the Congress that comes in will be in harmony with the political views of the President?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. We have to take our chances about that.

Mr. CRAIN. So do I, under my resolution.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Yes, but unfortunately your proposed amendment to the Constitution may not go into effect for years, and my bill can be passed now by this House and obviate the necessity of ever having to call an extra session.

Mr. CRAIN. How are you going to count the Presidential vote if you do not meet until the 4th of March? For the twelfth amendment provides that in case there is no choice by the electoral college, there shall be an election by the House by the 4th of March.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. That shows the necessity for the House being in session on the 4th of March, and my bill provides how you shall accomplish that.

Mr. CRAIN. I want to show you that the Congress of the United States should be in session in January.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Well, I want to say this now, that so far as the election of a President of the United States is concerned, and his inauguration, my bill does not propose to change the time of the inauguration of a President of the United States. But it does propose to change the assembling of Congress, which is elected in November of last year, say, and instead of waiting for it to assemble for thirteen months, on the first Monday of the December of the year following, have it meet in the following March.

It would call into existence the Congress just elected by the people and meet the purposes which my honorable friend from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] proposes to meet by his resolution, only to meet them in a much prompter manner. So that you would have a Congress in session, and when that Congress chanced to be in accord with the Executive of the United States you would have the legislative and executive departments in full accord. If they were not in full accord you would have to take the chance, just as you now have to take the chance, of a different constitution of the other body who constitute a part of the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. How long does the gentleman think it would probably take in order to secure the passage of this constitutional amendment?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I can not tell. That would depend on the different times that the State Legislatures would meet, and it would take a very long time; and it would also depend on the constitution and temper of the Legislatures, and their disposition to make this change.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Most of them assemble biennially, I believe.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I believe so. So that in reality, unless we could know how these Legislatures would be constituted, it would be impossible to see whether it would be adopted or not. I think in my bill you meet the condition that exists by the best method and meet it promptly, decisively, and at once, and then the constitutional amendment can come along afterwards in regard to the inauguration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question? Were it not for the constitutional difficulty and the impossibility of fixing the 1st of January as the time for the assembling of Congress, would the gentleman not consider that a better time than the 4th of March for the beginning of the session?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That would obviate a called session of Congress, and would put Congress in session when the electoral vote was to be counted and the President to be elected by the House in the event of a failure to elect by the people.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. There would be a Congress in session by the 4th of March, and thus we would avoid having the long and short sessions. Old members who have been here for a long time know that the short session of Congress is an annoyance to everybody; to the President, to the heads of Departments, and to members of Congress—those who are defeated and those who are reëlected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman from Mississippi will permit me. Even if it requires two sessions of Congress in one year, would not much more be accomplished by having a continuous session, rather than to have it broken with the warm months and still further broken by the Christmas holidays, which would still further break the continuity of the proceedings?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I think it would be better for the country if instead of having the session commenced on the first Monday in December it should commence the first Monday after the 4th day of March, and stay in session, if the business of the country required, for nine months; and in the second session let the Congress also remain in session nine months, if necessary, so that we should be relieved from the necessity and trouble of having a short session, which, as I say, is perplexing both to the Executive, the heads of Departments, and to members of Congress. Oftentimes we have witnessed the fact that the occupant of the chair has had to have the fingers of the clock set back in order to pass the necessary appropriations on the 4th of March, because under the present arrangement when the gavel of the Speaker falls on the 4th day of March all legislative power ceases; whereas there can be no such a thing as this if the bill I propose should pass.

And in addition to that, Mr. Speaker, there never could arise a necessity for an extra session of Congress, a thing which every party is reluctant to call. There have been but few instances of an extra session in the history of our Government, and it has never been resorted to unless on account of the financial condition of the country, or the failure to pass some great appropriation bill, as occurred some years ago when an extra session of the Congress of the United States was called. Under my proposition there could never, I say, arise an occasion when there would be a necessity for an extra session of Congress. These are the reasons which have operated upon my mind in proposing that we should accomplish these results by legislation, and if, subsequently, the result can be accomplished of changing the time of the inauguration of the President, I shall have no objection to that, but I remind the House that a distinguished Senator at the other end of this Capitol [Mr. HOAR] has had pending before that body for several years propositions looking to a change of the Constitution in that respect; my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] has had his measure before the Congress of the United States for years and years——

Mr. CRAIN. If the gentleman will permit me, my legislation was a compromise made between myself, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LODGE, and the other gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Collins, both representing Senator HOAR; and Senator HOAR'S suggestion is embodied as a part of my joint resolution.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. That does not at all change the fact, as I have stated it, that such propositions have been pending before the Senate and before the House for many years and have never been adopted.

Mr. CRAIN. In reply to that, let me say that what the gentleman from Mississippi has proposed in this connection was proposed years ago by a Representative from Illinois, Mr. Adams, and reported adversely, and his own proposition has failed to get a favorable report from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. That is very true, because the Judiciary Committee has not had time to consider it; but I take it for granted that when that intelligent committee meet and comes to consider the bill which I have introduced and had referred to them, they will report it favorably. I have not heard a word of opposition to it from any quarter.

Mr. CRAIN. I have.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Every one of the great metropolitan newspapers of this country has pronounced in favor of it, and I have never mentioned the subject to a single member of Congress who has not expressed his approval. It is a simple, straightforward, direct road to the result that I want to accomplish. There is nothing partisan about it, and I presume it would receive the sanction of any Executive of the United States to whatever party he might belong. That is all I have to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] seems to argue, and so does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN], upon the idea that there is an irreconcilable difference between the two measures.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Not at all.

Mr. CRAIN. Oh, no.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I will make both the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Texas happy by agreeing with them. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that if my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] had had a fair opportunity at framing a constitution in the initial days of this Republic he would have turned out a much better instrument than the one which we have. [Laughter.] As a general proposition I presume there is nothing which has ever been recognized as the handiwork of man in his collective capacity that could not be improved by some ingenious artisan one way or another if he had a fair opportunity.

I think, however, that this country has prospered pretty well under our existing Constitution for over one hundred years, and, generally, I may say with reference to any proposition to amend it, that I would rather trust to the experience of one hundred years than to the wisdom of any individual however wise he may be. The real objection to this constitutional amendment, as I take it, is that it is subversive of the whole scheme of our Government, and destroys the only safeguard which has been erected around disputed Presidential successions. Every person in this Chamber must remember the Presidential election of 1876, when a violent dispute arose as to who had been chosen Chief Magistrate of this nation.

Let us assume that this amendment had gone into force at that time, that a Congress had gone out of existence on the 31st of December and that another Congress had come in on the 1st day of January charged with the decision of the disputed question, is it not consistent with human nature to suppose that the same forces that had raised the dispute about the succession to the Presidency would have been able to foment disputes about the complexion of the new Congress, so that you would have had two Congresses contending for regularity?

Mr. CRAIN. If the gentleman will permit me a moment I wish to say that of course I do not dispute the superior wisdom and ability of the gentleman from New York over the Representative from Texas.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman from New York yields the palm in that respect to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CRAIN. I do not dispute the superior wisdom of the gentleman. Of that there can be no question: But I want to ask him, however, this question: Was not the same Congress that was then in session charged with the performance of the very duty of which he speaks?

Mr. COCKRAN. Undoubtedly; and the continuance of that system is what I contend for.

Mr. CRAIN. Then what would have been the difference if a new Congress had come in? Did not your Mr. Tilden act the part of a——

Mr. COCKRAN. Say it out. I can stand anything. I bare my back to any lash. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAIN (continuing). Of a gentleman and statesman, and refuse to be governed by the vote of the House of Repretentatives? And did not his representative on this floor tell the people of the American Congress that he was in favor of the Electoral Commission bill?

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I might reply to that by saying that I decline to have the value of a principle tested or gauged or measured by the action of any individual.

Mr. CRAIN. Certainly; but that is what you proposed just now.

Mr. COCKRAN. What I say is that where you have a disputed Presidential succession—and we have had such a disputed Presidential succession within the memory of every member of this House—the only method by which a solution can be reached is by the action of a Congress whose validity can not be impeached. What causes the validity of any legislative body to be questioned? The fears or the desires of some person or of some party who may be influenced by its action. If you had a Presidential election coming for decision before a House chosen at the same election, and that Presidential election should awaken the passions of men, is it to be believed or pretended for a moment that the same motives and impulses which set in force the discussion and the dispute as to the Presidency would not seek to foment a dispute as to the complexion of the Congress? And right there you have the means of giving a color of authority to each claimant to the Presidential chair, and that is the open gap through which all free institutions have crumbled to their ruin. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAIN. If the gentleman had read the Constitution of his adopted country——

Mr. COCKRAN. I have read the Constitution of my adopted country and it is dear to me, and therefore I do not want to see it imperiled by the whim of any individual who may seek glory by proposing to change its provisions.

Mr. CRAIN. Your statement is incorrect legally, because the choice by the House must be made from a certain limited number of individuals.

Mr. COCKRAN. Why, Mr. Speaker, it seems extraordinary to me that the gentleman does not understand my proposition. There is no question that the choice of Congress is limited to a certain number of individuals, but because it is limited to that certain number, and because that certain number is greater than one, if you have a dispute large enough to split the country on the Presidential succession it will be equally potent to split it upon the regularity of the election of the Congress.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman from New York pardon me a question?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly, if the gentleman means to put a question.

Mr. CRAIN. My relations with the gentleman are of too friendly a character to permit me——

Mr. COCKRAN. Of the friendliest character—full of admiration on my part for the gentleman.

Mr. CRAIN. But the gentleman was a little severe on me in the beginning of his argument——

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, no; I was merely recognizing one of the ordinary mainsprings of human action.

Mr. CRAIN. Certainly; and I desire to treat the gentleman in the same spirit. I want to suggest to him that the Democrats in the Congress which passed the bill providing for the appointment of the Electoral Commission were equally good with the Democrats who came into the next Congress.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is an interesting historical fact, a criticism of great depth and acumen, and I have no disposition to dispute it. But I fail to see, Mr. Speaker, how it affects the question which I am submitting to the judgment of this body.

The care which the framers of this Government displayed in providing a means of settling Presidential successions is shown by the constitutional provisions for the existence at the time the question may arise of a body whose authority can not be questioned. That the resolution now before the House is an attempt to abolish this provision is a fundamental objection to this constitutional amendment.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment?

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRAIN. Does not my resolution provide that a Congress shall be in existence?

Mr. COCKRAN. It is quite true that the gentleman's proposition provides for the coming in of a Congress to settle the very question which has arisen in the election of the members themselves; and that is my objection to it. The superiority of the Constitution as it stands as against the Constitution as it would be under the operation of this amendment, is that the Congress which under the existing Constitution must pass upon all questions relating to a Presidential succession has been chosen two years before the question can arise. It has organized by the election of a Speaker. Nobody can dispute its authority. No question of unfairness in its organization can be raised two years after the election of the Congress. It has already received the sanction of the loyalty of the people of the entire country. Its statutes have been recognized. That is the body which ought properly to pass upon all questions arising out of the Presidential election. My friend from Texas would substitute for that well-settled and undisputed authority a body chosen in the very contest out of which has arisen the dispute with regard to the Presidential succession.

Mr. CRAIN. A Congress chosen by the people.

Mr. COCKRAN. Chosen by the people but chosen in the very contest out of which the Presidential dispute arises. The circumstances attending the Presidential election would be the circumstances attending the election of members of Congress. The questions upon which the validity of the election of Presidential electors would be disputed would furnish grounds for disputing the election of members of the House of Representatives. And when the debate came before the people of the country, they would find themselves confronted not alone with the question of a disputed Presidential succession, but moreover with the question of a disputed Congressional succession. That dispute would be injected into the emergency by a force which no power could withstand, because of the great question which the Congress would be called upon to decide.

By this proposition you substitute the unsettled for the settled; you substitute for the body which has received the unquestioned loyalty and assent of all the people of the country a body whose very existence and complexion would be the subject of dispute. Instead of having a well-ordered, well-regulated method, which has settled more than one question of Presidential succession, which has given to this country from the day of its foundation a long line of rulers whose authority was never questioned by any department of the Government, you are going to open wide a breach in the constitutional system through which disputes of every character may enter—disputes which may cast a doubt for years upon the title of a President, and which may even array the people of the country into hostile camps warring against each other to settle by arms a question which there will be no tribunal to settle by peaceful methods. That is my objection, Mr. Speaker, to the scope and character of this proposed constitutional amendment.

If there were any grave inconveniences arising under the existing method of conductiug the public business, if this country had at any time seen its prosperity impaired or its stability endangered by defects of the present system, if in view of a perilous crisis we were called upon to devise some means by which the country might escape the danger, the criticism I now make might not be as conclusive as it is.

But since this country has grown and prospered under the existing system, since Congress with periods of two years' existence behind them, Congresses of unimpeached title, supported by the unquestioned loyalty of the country, have been able to settle each one of these questions as they have arisen, I believe no reason can be advanced in favor of this proposition beyond a certain love of fanciful experiment which seems to be inseparable from the human race, in regard to which I attribute no particular weakness to my friend from Texas, but which I recognize simply as an exhibition of a human impulse which finds expression wherever men assemble in legislative bodies.

Since that love of experiment is the only motive that can be back of this proposition, I protest against the resolution, and trust we will be allowed to repose in tranquillity on that Constitution which has made us great and prosperous for more than a hundred years. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, of the propositions before the House, the one offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] is the least harmful, in my judgment. I object, however, to all and any of this tinkering with the Constitution.

I may state, after a careful reading of the debates of the convention that framed the Constitution of this country, that our forefathers knew what work they were doing and builded wisely, and in some instances wiser than they knew. If the proposition were confined simply to the change of the date for the inauguration of the President to a more genial season, I should have no serious objection to it, except the horror that is in my nature at any profane touch upon the Constitution. But when it is proposed, as it is proposed here, and apparently in good faith, to bring Congress in session at an earlier date after its election than is imposed upon it by the provision in the Constitution, then I oppose it, because that proposition is in direct opposition to the theory and practice as well as the principles of our Government.

A gentleman during this discussion, I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN], spoke rather approvingly, if I understood him, of the methods of constitutional governments abroad. Our Government is framed upon entirely different principles. It is neither a democracy on the one hand, nor a constitutional monarchy on the other. It is a representative republic, wherein the people are guarded against their own rash and hurtful actions. The will of the people is not invaded, but they are forced to exercise it slowly and deliberately, to carry out the golden words of Van Buren, that "the sober second thought of the people is never wrong and always efficient."

You call your Congress together, as has been proposed in this debate, shortly after its election by the people. You call it together with all the rash passions of partisan conflict raging in the bosoms of men. You call it together with a number of gentlemen, very excellent of themselves, but very many of them inexperienced in matters of legislation, who have had no time or opportunity to consider the proper methods to carry out soberly and discreetly the will of the people. It is opposed to the whole practice and policy of the Government, which are to prevent them from that hasty action which has been the destruction of all former republics. We want slow, deliberate action, and therefore that year is allowed to elapse after the election before the assembling of the Congress so chosen.

The great fault, the great defect, if there be any in our Constitution, lies elsewhere. It lies in the fact that a Congress elected by the people for one term sits after its election, and during a large part of the time when the people have pronounced against its policy, against its measures, and at a time when it can almost nullify the will of the people as expressed as the polls. That is a defect which no gentleman here seems to perceive, and which should be cured. But that is to be done by careful approaches, and not by hasty and ill-considered action. Let us pause before we further amend the Constitution and lay profane hands upon it—to reflect whether or not we are setting a precedent which may be evil or bring evils upon the Republic.

I for one want no such tinkering with the Constitution. It has worked well for us for over a century. It has withstood domestic strife and foreign war. It was framed by men who had made the science of government their study. I have read the master debates of the parliaments of the world, and the masterpieces of Greek and Roman history, but I aver here on this floor that the man who reads the debates on the Constitution of the United States by its framers will take to his mind a stronger amount of wisdom, and a greater knowledge of government, and a greater and deeper insight into human nature than will be found in all the debates either of antiquity or of the present day. [Applause.]

Let the Constitution stand. You have already made amendments to it which may some day bring about, as a result, the destruction of the Republic. Go no further if you value that inheritance which your fathers gave you and which their sons are bound to defend and support. [Applause].

Mr. BUSHNELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAIN. What is the rule in the discussion of this proposition? I understand that there was a rule brought in by the Committee on Rules, giving the committee of which I am a member a day for the consideration of this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR], as the Chair is advised, offered a substitute for the original proposition.

Mr. CRAIN. Yes; but, Mr. Speaker, while I had no opportunity to do it then, I now make the point of order that a substitute for a joint resolution in the nature of a bill can not be entertained in the House. I was perfectly willing to let the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] have his bill read, because he assured the House that he was in sympathy with my resolution, and he made his bill a part of his remarks; but when a substitute is offered for a joint resolution it is not in order according to the rules of the House. I make the point of order against it so far as the consideration of it outside of a discussion of it is involved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can reserve the point of order.

Mr. CRAIN. In addition to that, I want to know how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are forty-five minutes of the gentleman's time remaining, as the Chair is advised. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BUSHNELL].

Mr. CRAIN. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, it is too late to make the point of order, is it not? I understood the gentleman to make a point of order against my substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He simply reserved it.

[Mr. BUSHNELL withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER].

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with profound attention to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] and the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH] against the adoption of this resolution. In my judgment the argument of the gentlemen from New York is founded upon a mistaken impression that the same election returns which certify the election of the House of Representatives certify the election of the President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. COCKRAN. No; but that the same electoral methods are used for the election of both.

Mr. CRAIN. I think that is a reflection on the South. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman is equally mistaken in that assertion. In my judgment by no possibility, under the provisions of this bill, could the election to the Presidency, in the event of a dispute, be complicated with any dispute over the election of the House of Representatives. The members of the House are elected by the people. The returns are made to the governors of the States, who certify the election of the Representatives to this House, and the Clerk of the House, under the rules of the House, is compelled to put upon the roll the names thus certified to him. Under the provisions of this bill the House would necessarily organize on the second Monday in January preceding the inauguration of the President, and therefore a House of Representatives must be in existence and organized before the Senate can, in the presence of the House of Representatives, as is required by the Constitution, count the electoral votes and declare who has been elected President.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BOATNER. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. Suppose there were a dispute about the organization of the House—suppose such a condition of affairs as existed——

Mr. BOATNER. What kind of a dispute can the gentleman imagine? The imagination of the gentleman is very fertile, I know, but how can he imagine a dual House of Representatives under our system of government?

Mr. COCKRAN rose.

Mr. BOATNER. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment. The governors of the States issue their certificates, and there is no authority except this House that can revise their action. Those certificates must be sent to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and that Clerk, the Clerk of the last preceding House of Representatives, must, on the convening of the new Congress, put those names upon the roll; and those whose names are thus put upon the roll constitute the House, and they have the authority—they only have the authority—to elect the Speaker. So that upon the second Monday of January the House is required to be organized upon the roll thus made up by the Clerk of the preceding House.

The members thus certified as elected proceed to the election of a Speaker, and upon the 30th day of April thereafter they proceed in a body thus organized to the Senate, and there, in conjunction with the Senate, count the returns for President and Vice-President and declare who have been elected. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. The question which I put to the gentleman has been answered after a fashion, but I think I will reserve my right to answer his statement until the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. BOATNER. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is a conclusive reply to the argument of the gentleman from New York. The twelfth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States requires that in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives the votes for President and Vice-President shall be counted and the result of the election declared. That presupposes the fact that there is a House of Representatives, that this House of Representatives must be organized, must be recognized by the President and by all the Departments of the Government. In order to be the House of Representatives it must be the House recognized by the Senate of the United States. I can not conceive how upon any reasonable hypothesis there can be a contingency in which the Senate of the United States would be in doubt as to what was the House of Representatives.

Then at last, Mr. Speaker, the stability of this Government must depend upon the loyalty and patriotism of the people of the United States. Could there be furnished any more striking illustration of the strength of that dependence and the strength of the presumption that the American representatives will do their duty than by the historical instance to which the gentleman has called our attention? Here was a case in which the majority of the people of the United States believed that Samuel J. Tilden had been elected President. They believed that an attempt had been made to defraud him of the electoral vote to which he was justly entitled; and a Democratic House of Representatives, a House of Representatives in sympathy with his claims, who believed that he had been elected, adopted peacefully and quietly measures which averted the danger of a revolution which would have resulted from the attempt to count the votes in the usual way contemplated by the Constitution. And if the integrity and patriotism of the American people were sufficient to save us from a revolution at that critical time, how can the gentleman anticipate in advance that in some contigency, which his imagination can not materialize and give to the House in precise form, there may arise revolution and bloodshed as the result of changing a mere matter of detail in the Constitution of the country?

That is all I care to say, Mr. Speaker, on that view of the case. Now, let us come to the practical aspect of the question. After we are elected, thirteen months elapse before we enter upon the discharge of our duties. For nine months we draw pay from the Treasury of the United States before we are even sworn in and become qualified to exercise our duties as members of Congress. Thus the issues upon which we are elected become to a great measure stale before opportunity for action on our part arises.

The people are compelled to wait an unreasonable length of time before they can see carried into effect the reforms for which they have declared themselves at the ballot box.

Why, Mr. Speaker, take the last Congress as an illustration. The Republican party came here and staked its existence upon the passage of an election bill, known as the "force bill." They said they were willing to go before the country on it. They did go before the country upon it, and they were overwhelmingly defeated. When they came back here at the second session of that Congress it was in their power, if they had seen fit to abuse it—and let it be said to their credit they did not abuse it—it was in their power to have enacted into legislation a measure which had been repudiated by the people. So, Mr. Speaker, within a few months past, we have had a campaign, the reiteration and renewal of the campaign of four years ago, upon questions of taxation. We went before the people declaring that we favored certain reforms in the tax laws of the country, that we sought relief from the oppressions, as we considered them, put upon the country by the Republican party. Yet, sir, we must wait until the larger portion of our term has expired before we can get to those measures, and give the people the relief we have promised them.

So far as concerns amending that great instrument, the Constitution, upon any question of principle, I stand with the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH]. I would not touch it upon any question of principle. I agree with him that its framers "builded better than they knew," that it is the most magnificent chart of government ever devised by man. But, sir, I do not allow my admiration for the instrument and the principles on which it is founded to prevent me from correcting it in a mere matter of detail which the experience of one hundred years has proved is inconvenient to the people and which prevents this House from discharging its full duty to the people.

If I agreed with the gentleman from New York that by a measure of this kind we might bring on revolution and civil war and disrupt this Government from top to bottom, I should, like him, oppose this change. But in my views his fears are entirely chimerical. They are fanciful; they are not based upon any solid foundation. There will be no more opportunity for the difficulties which his imagination has conjured up under the joint resolution now before the House than under the existing law.

Why, sir, suppose that in the celebrated Tilden and Hayes Presidential contest this House had refused to participate with the Senate in the electoral count. Suppose the House had gone in and raised the question under that article of the Constitution which declares—

> The President of the Senate shall in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted.

By whom?

> The person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed.

Suppose there had been a dispute between the Senate and the House of Representatives as to the authority that was to declare what the majority was, what authority would have been empowered to declare whether the Senate or the House of Representatives was the body authorized to declare the result of the election?

The danger which lurks in the ambiguity of the language of this section is far greater than that stated by the gentleman from New York, yet we have seen that it is only apparent and not real.

I say that as against that, Mr. Speaker, the integrity, the loyalty, and the patriotism of the members of both branches of the Government will be a sufficient guaranty to the American people, and as in the face of that great danger they provided ample means to avert it, so it is unreasonable and chimerical to suppose that hereafter a dispute will arise about what body constitutes the House of Representatives which will involve the Presidential election and prevent this body going to the Senate Chamber on the 30th day of April and, acting under the Constitution, declaring who is the President of the United States.

It appears to me that there is no sound reason why this House should not adopt this resolution, and why it should not correct an evil which has impressed itself more and more on the country every year for a number of years past; and why we should not permit the States to say whether they desire that their Representatives shall come here soon after their election to carry out the will of the people, or whether we shall be compelled to remain at home until after the middle of our term before entering on the discharge of the duties which have been assigned to us. Not believing that there is the remotest chance of danger to the Republic in the adoption of this proposed legislation, but believing, on the contrary, that it will conserve not only the interests of the people, but will enable us to discharge better the duties we owe to our fellow-citizens, I feel constrained to vote for the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, there are two distinct propositions involved in the resolution submitted by the committee, one to change the date of the inauguration of the President, and the other to change the date of the assembling of Congress. I hope that this proposition may be divided when the vote comes to be taken. I think they are entirely distinct and separate propositions; and while I am heartily in favor of one, I am opposed to the other.

The proposition to change the date of the inauguration of the President is not in the least a vital constitutional change. It is simply a matter of convenience, and all arguments in regard to it must be merely arguments of convenience. It is simply to fix the date on the day on which Washington was inaugurated, at a pleasanter season of the year, instead of the date which is now fixed, and which comes at an inclement time; and also I think if the old bill had been reported it would extend in a desirable way the second session of Congress. In favor of that change there is much to be said and but little against it. It seems to me to be a most desirable change.

Mr. CRAIN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit a momentary interruption, I would like to state that in his absence I made a statement that this resolution was a compromise adopted between himself and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Collins, and myself in the Fiftieth Congress, I think it was, to amalgamate the Hoar proposition and that of myself, which was the main proposition. Is that not correct?

Mr. LODGE. The resolution in the Fiftieth Congress, which I supported, provided simply for carrying on the second session of Congress to the 30th of April; that is, instead of having the session end on the 4th day of March, it went on with the Presidential term to the 30th of April. I favored that proposition then, and I favor it now.

But the proposition to inaugurate the President two or three months after the new Congress is organized seems to me to be a very doubtful proposition. A very serious objection to my mind has been made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. I think the President should be inaugurated and the new Congress come in at the same time. The terms should begin together, a new President and a new Congress as now, and the message of the new President should come in to the new Congress.

The present arrangement of the session is, as all know, as thoroughly inconvenient as possible. We have a long session, extending eight or nine or even ten months, running through the summer, and we have a second session of perhaps two months, in which with great difficulty are carried through the appropriation bills, leaving but little room for legislation. I think myself that it is desirable to extend the second session and thereby shorten the first and equalize their length. That would be done by extending the date of the inauguration to the 30th of April. It would add two months to the second session of Congress, and in that way reduce the length of the long session.

But, Mr. Speaker, when you come to change the Congress and instead of having your old Congress have a new one, you propose a constitutional change which goes much further than the mere argument of convenience.

It is impossible to say how well founded or possible the contingencies are which have been suggested this afternoon in objection to this proposition. But it seems to me that it is much better to proceed very slowly in this matter, and make only the change which we know to be wise, and which we know can not bring any evil result.

Any radical change in the Constitution is something concerning which I for one should long hesitate before I voted in favor of it; but this change from the 4th of March to the 30th of May, proposed in the first article, is a sensible change, one which will make for the convenience of Congress, one which will inure to better legislation, and which I believe is in all ways desirable; and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that when the vote is taken we may be able to divide the two propositions and to vote on them separately.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire the attention of the House just for a moment, as I fear I have not made my objection to this constitutional provision sufficiently explicit, since it appears to have been misunderstood by gentlemen on the other side of this question.

I desire to say here that so far as the proposed change in the date of inauguration of the President is concerned, it is a mere question of convenience and of detail, and it is hardly worthy of serious discussion as a constitutional provision.

The important question here, the one that underlies the entire debate, is the propriety of submitting disputed Presidential succession to a Congress that has received the assent and support of the whole people for a period long anterior to a Presidential election or to a Congress chosen at the very election whose validity may be questioned.

Now I desire to say to gentlemen on the other side of this question, that in the history of the decay of republican institutions, we find many instances of disputed elections, of struggles that involve the perpetuity of representative government, arising from just such provisions as this amendment seeks to incorporate into the Constitution. The whole tendency of the fabric of Government devised by our fathers has been a system of divided responsibilities, of divided powers, of divided opportunities for the exercise of popular power.

The scheme has resolutely set its face against staking the stability of any more than a portion of the Government upon any one election. Look over the history of republican forms of government that have perished in the struggles that have arisen through disputed elections, and in every one of them you will find that the cardinal error that brought about disaster was the insertion in the constitutional scheme of provisions for elections involving the entire structure of government in one exercise of popular sovereignty.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman in his historical recollection name one such case?

Mr. COCKRAN. I did not think it would be necessary for me to mention anyone particular case illustrating the dangers of disputes arising from Presidental elections; but in order to enlighten the gentleman from Texas, whose memory seems to have taken a holiday, I would invite his attention to the recent experience of the Republic of Chile.

Mr. CRAIN. That was a revolution. There was no vote there.

Mr. COCKRAN. The trouble was that it was an attempt to control the popular vote, through the extraordinary powers vested in single officers; and it is because you seek now to vest the power of counting the electoral vote, in officers chosen at the same election with the Presidential electors, that I consider this scheme fraught with evil and fraught with dangerous tendencies.

Let me illustrate exactly my meaning. Suppose in the disputed Presidential election between Tilden and Hayes the vote of the Louisiana Congressmen alone would have decided the complexion of this House. Does anybody believe that the dispute would have been confined to the mere selection of the electors? Every question that affected the validity of the selection of the electors in that State could have been raised as to the selection of the Congressmen?

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes, I will yield.

Mr. CRAIN. As a matter of fact the gentleman knows that the settlement of the question in Louisiana was a bargain and a trade.

Mr. COCKRAN. These historical contributions of the gentleman from Texas are valuable, but they are entirely wide of this question. I have not the slightest doubt that the gentleman speaks advisedly of the conditions in Louisiana. He lives nearer to it than I do——

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, and, Mr. Speaker, if I lived in New York I would speak advisedly of the way that Tammany——

Mr. COCKRAN. I did not understand the last remark of the gentleman, but if he would speak advisedly about Tammany, or anything else, it would be such an improvement on his usual method of speaking that I would sacrifice Tammany to his argument. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be allowed to go on.

Mr. CRAIN. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman again.

Mr. CRAIN. After making that speech the gentleman will be read out of Tammany, unless he honors his State by going to the Senate.

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not exactly understand the gentleman's new proposition, Mr. Speaker, but I will say that in exposing Tammany to the eloquence of the gentleman from Texas I do not think I expose Tammany to any serious risks. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAIN. No; I come here by righteous votes.

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, at the time of this valuable interruption, this interruption which has contributed so much to the discussion of this question, this interruption which, coming from the author of this resolution, ought to commend its value so strongly to the intelligent judgment of this House, I was about to say——

Mr. CRAIN. I want the gentleman from New York to understand that, so far as my interruption was concerned, I meant no personal offense to him.

Mr. COCKRAN. I have not the slightest doubt that the gentleman was entirely free from that motive. I was about to state, Mr. Speaker, that if in the Presidential election of 1876 the vote of the State of Louisiana would have controlled the complexion of this House and if there had not been a compromise adopted which was outside of the Constitution, there would have been no power on earth that could have averted the creation and organization of two rival Houses and a dispute the end of which no man could have foreseen.

And if in that case we made a compromise which resulted in a surrender by the Democratic party of the Presidency in the interest of peace, it was because there was a tribunal capable of making it, a tribunal that did not derive its title from that same election, and which in creating the Electoral Commission in no wise cast a slur on its own title. If the horrors of civil war were averted by the action of the Democratic party at that time, it was due to the excellent machinery provided by the Constitution to meet just such a case.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. COCKRAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOATNER. I simply wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there was no controversy about the election of the members of the House from the State of Louisiana at that time.

Mr. COCKRAN. I had just been stating what the gentleman knows is quite true. There was no contest as to members of Congress elected by the State of Louisiana, because the whole delegation from that State would not have affected the complexion of the House.

Mr. BOATNER. Nor could there have been any under the Constitution or laws of the country, because the members of the House of Representatives from the State of Louisiana, whatever dispute there may have been about their election, they must have come here with a certificate of election signed by the governor of that State. There is no authority on earth that could question the validity or authencity of such a certificate.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman undertake to say that there have not been cases where dual certificates have been presented to this House? Will the gentleman dispute that in the organization of the House, when Hunter was elected Speaker——

A MEMBER. Pennington.

Mr. COCKRAN. When Hunter was elected Speaker, dual certificates were presented from the State of New Jersey?

Why, Mr. Speaker, are gentlemen indifferent even to the perils which are latent even in the present system, the existence of which is suggested in the history of the country? I say that we have escaped these perils because in no one election has the whole system of the country been subjected to the test of a single balloting. Were we to have a question raised as to a Presidential election under this plan, there is no dispute that could arise about the choice of electors that could not be raised as to the election of members of the House; and if this resolution were adopted you would, where there was a disputed Presidential election, have it submitted to a House whose own complexion was in dispute.

If you will read the history of the revolutions to which I have referred, you will find that wherever there has been a dispute as to the control of the government itself, it has been founded upon some claim arising out of defective or obscure constitutional provision.

My objection to this proposition is that you submit the very question raised in the Presidential election to a House chosen at the same time, in the same election, and whose own complexion must necessarily be subject to the same question.

When the last House assembled there was a majority of three on one side, with a number of disputed elections, and a number of instances where the certificate itself was questioned. When that Congress assembled, if any question as to the election of the President had been involved, and a dispute had arisen as to the selection of the electors, does anybody believe that those who raised the dispute would not have raised it at the very threshold and have endeavored to secure for his party sufficient seats here to give his party a greater chance of ultimate success?

The happy feature of the Constitution as it stands is that the founders of this Government have established a system by which an existing body gives a certificate of character to and certifies the regularity of the new officers chosen by the people.

The President chosen by the electoral college must pass the scrutiny of a body which has been elected two years before, and whose title had never been disputed, and about whose complexion no question can possibly be raised.

The gentleman from Louisiana suggests, it is true, that the Senate would recognize one particular House in case there were two bodies claiming regularity, but does not that confess the whole argument against this bill? By what theory of constitutional balances does he claim that it would be proper to have the complexion, the regularity of this House, of this body which springs from the people themselves, and which is the direct reflection of the electorate of the United States, submitted to the decision of another legislative body?

Upon what theory does he propose that the questions of the regularity of this body, of its power to control its Chamber, to select its Speaker, to decide upon the regularity of the electoral votes, shall be subjected to the decision of a concurrent branch of the Legislature, whose importance it was never intended by the Constitution should equal the importance of this body, much less transcend it? And yet, if you open wide here the possibility of these disputes, what body that is continuous will you have in existence when the exigency comes except the Senate of the United States?

The Presidency may be in dispute, two Houses of Representatives may be contending as to which is entitled to decide the regularity of the electoral votes, and those Houses can get no legal recognition from any existing, continuous body other than the Senate of the United States; thus making the independence of the House of Representatives subject to the decision and control of the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, these are the questions which inevitably arise in the consideration of this proposed plan. We have one hundred years of experience attesting the value of our existing methods. We have had Presidential disputes and they have been settled. We have had a case where a man was seated in the Presidential chair who never had been elected, yet there was no jar to the progress of this country and no serious injury to its Constitution. And because this system has worked so well for over one hundred years we are asked now lightly to change it; we are asked to submit to an experiment which may or may not prove to be of value—and here I concede all that the gentleman from Texas can possibly claim—to surrender the tried and the proven for the untried and experimental.

In face of such a prospect this House should pause. It should not lightly lay its disturbing hands upon the instrument which has been the safeguard of its liberties and which has been throughout the whole world a light which has served to lead the people of this earth along the pathway that must be pursued in order to reach free and durable institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly.

Mr. CRAIN. I want to ask the gentleman whether the settlement of the dispute as to the election of Tilden or Hayes was made in the House of Representatives that had been elected two years before or whether it was the passage of a bill authorizing the creation of an Electoral Commission that settled it; and if the latter, I want to ask him further, why, if a like dispute should arise in another case before a new House, the same thing could not be done?

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman's question answers itself. It was the old body, with authority to pass a bill, that passed the Electoral Commission bill. Had there been two Houses of Representatives, each claiming regularity, no bill could have been enacted which would have received the entire and cordial support or submission of the American people. Sir, that experience of 1876–'77 is the strongest argument I can adduce in support of my opposition to this proposed experiment on the Constitution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire briefly to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. If the House will recur to the first proposition submitted it will find that the time for the Presidential succession to begin is fixed on the 30th day of April. The new Congress would assemble on the 2d day of January, thus giving nearly four months' time in which the House could perfect its organization prior to the inauguration of the new President. If gentlemen will recur to the history of this country in the past they will find, I think, that at no time has the House of Representatives remained in an unorganized condition for so long a period.

The House of Representatives is organized in pursuance of law. Gentlemen who have the certificates of the governors of the States from which they come, duly signed, are, by the law, directed to be put upon the roll by the Clerk of the previous House, so that before the House can perform any duties a roll of its members must have been made up in pursuance of law. And that roll is to govern in the organization of the House. So that under the present method of organizing this House, it seems to me, it would be next to impossible for a House of Representatives meeting in January to be in a disorganized condition for four months preceding the time when a President should be inaugurated.

If the House could organize at all—if it could ever be organized under the machinery provided by law and the Constitution, it could be organized during that period. But it will be found by reference to the act of February 3, 1887, providing for the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, that—

> No electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been lawfully certified to according to section 3 of this act, from which but one return has been received, shall be rejected; but the two Houses concurrently may reject the vote or votes when they agree that such vote or votes have not been so regularly given by electors whose appointment has been so certified.

So that the vote is to be counted, unless it is rejected by both Houses. A House only partially organized could perform this function which the Constitution and the laws impose upon it; and unless a vote were rejected by both Houses, it would stand as counted.

So that in view of the fact that the first provision in this resolution fixes the time for the inauguration of the President on the 30th day of April, it seems to me that proper precaution has been taken in the next provision for the convening of the incoming Congress in the beginning of January.

There are other reasons than the Presidential succession which this House should take into consideration. I think it is universally conceded by our constituents, by the country at large, that a Congress should not assemble for the transaction of business after a general election for the choice of their successors has taken place. Under the existing system Congresses have been in session, as this one is, from the first Monday of December till the 4th day of March after their successors have been elected—elected perhaps to carry out a different policy from that which the existing Congress is regarded as disposed to carry out.

If there is anything in elections—if elections elect, and if when persons are elected they should execute the will of the people, they should be permitted to do so before the old Congress elected on different issues can make it impossible for the reforms to be carried out in the succeeding body. There is nothing in our legislative system so contrary to the principles of democracy and republicanism as the fact of a Congress holding one session after it has been repudiated by the people, and at that session passing possibly more legislation than in the preceding session.

In view of this fact, I think it wise to provide that when an election has taken place in November, the new Congress shall assemble in January and at once set about the enactment of such legislation as has been demanded by the people in the election immediately preceding. If our State Legislatures were organized upon the same basis on which Congress is now organized there would not be one person in the country who would defend the system. Look all over the States of the Union now and you will see in their several capitals legislative bodies in session executing the will of the people, and those bodies composed in all cases (except as to senators holding over) of members elected in the November election immediately preceding.

Would anybody propose that a State Legislature elected in November should not assemble until December of the following year—thirteen months after its election by the people? Such a proposition applied to the State Legislatures would not receive the approbation of anyone. Where is the difference when it is applied to this body? It will not be contended that in reference to any single function of this body it is less important that we should represent the immediate will of the people than that the State Legislatures of the country should do so. The State Legislature stands upon precisely the same footing as ourselves; it is a body created by the people to represent the people, to execute the popular will.

So far as the forms of law stand in the way of the execution of the popular will as declared at the elections by the people, just so far is republicanism set at defiance and the voice of the people disregarded. There is no pretext, therefore, for requiring that a new Congress elected in November shall be kept away from this Hall until thirteen months after its members are elected, and perhaps until the conditions have been so changed that all the fruits of the victory by the people at the polls have been lost. I hope, therefore, that these two propositions will be agreed to. Both of them are reforms demanded by existing conditions, and both are calculated to promote the expression of the public will.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, all the ability and ingenuity of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] did not enable him to imagine a case in which there could be a dual House of Representatives or to give any foundation whatever for the chimerical fear which he entertains as to the danger of adopting this constitutional amendment. He seems to ignore entirely the fact that under the provisions of this resolution the House must be organized on the second Monday of January, more than three months in advance of the inauguration of the President.

Mr. COCKRAN. Suppose it is not organized on the second Monday of January? Suppose it is not organized until some weeks later?

Mr. BOATNER. Well, suppose the moon may have turned to green cheese during that interval.

Mr. COCKRAN. That has never occurred; but in our Congressional history the other contingency which I suggest has occurred.

Mr. BOATNER. But has the gentleman any idea that such a thing, if it occurred, could have any effect upon the operations of our Government? I do not propose to suppose for an instant that this Government is going into that state of anarchy. I do not propose to suppose that the House will abolish laws which it has provided for obtaining security and certainty in these matters.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does not the gentleman remember the contest in the case of the election of Mr. Banks?

Mr. BOATNER. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. Well, if you remembered that, you would not probably be so positive in the assertion that such a contingency may not arise.

Mr. BOATNER. There was no dispute about the question of the organization of the House of Representatives. The dispute was simply on the Speakership question. The House merely delayed the election of the Speaker. But the House had been organized already by the Clerk, and there was no question of what constituted the House of Representatives. It is astonishing that the gentleman from New York should ignore the fact that the Congress has by legislation required that the certificates of election of the members of Congress shall be sent to the Clerk of the House, existing at the time that election took place, and that the Clerk shall make up the list from the certificates of election so forwarded to him, which shall constitute the next House of Representatives, and the names of all of those who are put on that roll by the Clerk are prima facie those who constitute the members of the House, and it is their duty under the law to meet and organize.

Now, the gentleman from New York, either designedly or otherwise, undertakes to put me in a false position in respect to what I said of the recognition of the House by the Senate. I said that in the event of dual bodies claiming to be the House of Representatives, which contingency you can not anticipate, and which can never arise under our Constitution and system of government; but if such an unusual, unexpected, and improbable occurrence should happen, what is the result? Why, simply, there is a necessity which compels the President of the United States and the Senate to declare for the time being which body it will recognize as the lawful House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. BOATNER. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. Louisiana has had a constitution for some years, I believe?

Mr. BOATNER. Well, that question answers itself. If the gentleman is not aware of that fact, I do not think I could enlighten him upon it.

Mr. COCKRAN. Did you not have a dual government in the State of Louisiana, notwithstanding the fact that you had a constitution?

Mr. BOATNER. We had a dual government there.

Mr. COCKRAN. And that was so, notwithstanding your constitution?

Mr. BOATNER. We had two bodies there claiming to be the governor and Legislature of the State.

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, I ask the gentleman if such a thing as that was liable to happen and did happen in the State of Louisiana, notwithstanding the existence of your constitution, is there not a possibility that such a contingency might also arise notwithstanding the fact that the United States Constitution exists?

Mr. BOATNER. I do not believe it can happen at all, because the conditions existing in Louisiana at that time were different, and such as could not exist under the Constitution of the United States. Why, sir, if the gentleman found it impossible with all of his fertility of imagination and ingenuity to state a case in which a dual House of Representatives were a possibility, we may take it for granted there can be none. When the Clerk calls the roll of names of members whose certificates he has received, and they are answered in the House of Representatives, that constitutes the House of Representatives, and the action of the majority of the men who are put on that roll is the action of the House of Representatives itself and anything outside of that organization would be wholly revolutionary.

Mr. Speaker, I submit to the House of Representatives that there is nothing whatever, no foundation at all for the fears entertained by the gentleman from New York; but so far as my observations extend, and so far as I have read the public press of the country, the consensus of opinion throughout the land is almost universally in favor of a provision of this character. Now is the time to correct this evil. Now is the best time, as we have now the signal illustration of the necessity of the change and I hope, sir, that the resolution will be adopted.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I yield such time as he may wish to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I will not undertake to add anything to the admirable statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] as to the principles which it seems to me will govern the matter in dispute between him and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER], but I think I may venture to add as a detail a statement of the method in which the question might arise.

In the first place certificates are issued by the governors of States, or other proper certifying officers, of the election of members of Congress. If a question arose of sufficient importance to be a temptation, even the governor of the State might be thereby swerved. There then would be an element of confusion and of possible disaster. If upon the governor's certificate were to depend not only the seat of a member, but the complexion of a House, and not only the complexion of a House, but the character of an administration, we might easily imagine that even the governor of a State might be swerved in his duty.

Mr. CRAIN. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that no such emergency could arise.

Mr. REED. If, for instance, at the end of the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, and upon the election of its successor, the three certificates which were then in question, for there were at least that number then in dispute, carried in their decision not only the House of Representatives, but the Presidency of the United States, it is pretty difficult to judge what would have been the effect of the pressure upon the certifying officers. Then after we have passed that there comes the making up of the list by the Clerk of the preceding House, who, however good a man he may be, is more or less human. And at a time of great political excitement, even if he decided justly and wisely, his decision would be questioned just as the wise decision of the commission in the Hayes case was questioned by injudicious persons. [Laughter.] If the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] will pass in review before his mind these two details of the possible situation he can see methods whereby there might be two Houses of Representatives, each claiming the right to exist, and each claiming not only the right of existence, but the right to pass upon the Presidential election, which to say the least would be inconvenient.

Now, what are we going to run this risk for?

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman from Maine yield for a question?

Mr. REED. Would the gentleman have the kindness to wait until I get through? I will yield if the gentleman insists, but I prefer not to do so at this time, because it destroys the continuity of my argument; and I intend to connect on the leader of the House in a moment. [Laughter.] For what purpose now are we undertaking to run this serious risk? For I admit that all things in this world are worth their price. If we are going to do something for the country that is adequate to this risk, then I have no objection to taking it, because I quite agree with the idea that the wisdom that will save this country at any given time is not the wisdom of the dead people but the wisdom of the living people.

Now, what are we going to achieve? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has stated what we are going to achieve in his judgment. We are going to have a quick response to the opinion of the people. Now, I was very sorry to hear a gentleman occupying the exalted position of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] repeat what seems to me to be a very gravely mistaken notion. That is, that the second session of a Congress, after the people have decided to elect members of another party is a session which is repudiated by the country. That thing is a defiance of the Constitution of the United States; and some gentlemen on the other side think that they are in favor of it.

The Constitution of the United States, be it wise or unwise, does not contemplate an immediate response to the opinion of the people. Our institutions are not framed upon that basis nor with that idea. Our institutions are formed upon the idea that the careful determination of the people of the United States, well stuck to, shall be the law of the land; not the opinion of one election, but the opinion of a series of elections. I am not saying whether this is wise or unwise. I am only talking about the scheme of the Constitution.

Now, the gentleman proposes to put new cloth into old garments. He proposes to modify the condition of the House of Representatives so as to make it responsive to the people, but he does not propose to modify either the Presidency or the Senate. In other words, the people of the United States may move this body quickly, effectually, on condition that nothing comes of it, on account of the stability of the Presidency and of the Senate. In other words, he is trying to get this House out of tune with the system of the Constitution. That is the purpose for which we are to run these risks of disorder and misfortune which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] has so admirably portrayed.

Now, let me descend to a much smaller matter in which I want to express my individual feeling. I do not believe in extending the short session of Congress. I believe that it is wasting two months more of our time; and I do not know how it is with the rest of you, but two months of my time I think are too valuable to waste, and I do not want to help waste that time. Talk about this session not being long enough for us to do our duty! Why, I fancy I could see on the countenance of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] if he were here, a smile, as he thought of his demanding the yeas and nays on every pension bill and taking up a whole day of this short session, which it is the fancy of gentlemen every now and then in this House to imagine is yearning for the opportunity to do public business. [Laughter.]

I never have seen this session too short to do public business unless the House did not want to do it, and I do not care how long a session is, the House never will do business when it does not want to. Houses that mean business can always find time in which to do it. Houses that do not mean business can always find eternity in which not to do it; and if this House is not an example of the latter I do not remember to have met one. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now we have, every one of us, as individuals, sixteen months of work upon our hands. We start the first of December in a new Congress; we finish the first session, which is long and laborious. We then go into a political campaign and come wearied from that to the short session, which ought to be laborious also; and when we get through with that sixteen months we need a vacation, and I do not mean any sneer at Congress when I say that the country needs one too [laughter], and nine months are none too long.

Mr. SPRINGER. One word in reply. [Laughter.]

I would like to submit to the gentleman from Maine whether the evils which he so graphically pointed out are not themselves, in his judgment, the very evils which exist, namely, that a House of Representatives elected two years ago may now, under the Constitution, be required to elect a President, and that the House of Representatives may elect a President of the different political party from the one——

Mr. REED. From the one that did not elect a President?

Mr. SPRINGER (continuing). At the preceding election. In other words, this Congress was elected in 1890. It is possible that it might have contained a majority of Republicans, though it happened to contain nearly 150 Democratic majority; but, if it had a majority of Republicans, and if at this election the election had come into the House of Representatives, notwithstanding the overwhelming victory of the Democratic party at the recent election, giving Mr. Cleveland over 125 majority of the electoral college, this House would have come together and elected the President.

Mr. REED. If Mr. Cleveland had 125 majority, how could that be?

Mr. SPRINGER. I say that while at this election the result was as I have stated.

Mr. REED. In other words, if the facts had been different they would have been otherwise. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Cleveland might have had a large majority, a hundred more votes than Mr. Harrison, and still the election would have gone to the House of Representatives.

Mr. REED. Very well; if the people could not decide, they would refer it to the House of Representatives under the Constitution. It is only another case where the people do not act for themselves, just the same as where we say a committee have considered a matter and come to no resolution thereon, and leave other people to attend to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is because the people's representatives elect a President who are not chosen for that purpose, and who would elect one who did not represent the popular expression at the time when the election took place. What I contend for is that the election should have more reference to the wishes of the people after a party or person has been elected. A Congress elected at the same time that the President is elected would be more likely to be responsive to the will of the people as expressed at that election than a Congress elected two years before.

I do not mean to say that the Congress now in existence had been repudiated by the election which took place in November. I say that a Congress might be repudiated, as in the case of the Fifty-first Congress, which contained a majority of Republicans, and which elected the honorable gentleman from Maine as its Speaker, after it had gone through with one session, the first session of Congress, another Congress was elected, and that Congress was in existence but not permitted to assemble in this Chamber, while the Congress repudiated by 150 majority of the people's representatives did assemble and perform the legislative functions.

Mr. REED. They were only repudiated nunc pro tunc.

Mr. SPRINGER. A Congress which had been repudiated by such an overwhelming vote still remained here and exercised legislative powers for four months.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CRAIN. I desire to ask the gentleman as a question of parliamentary history whether it was in the first session or the second session of the Republican Congress that the subsidy bill was passed?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is a matter of history. The gentleman understands that it was passed in the second session, of course; and a great many other measures were passed by that Congress in the second session that would not have been passed at the first session, when the members were to go before the people and give an account of their actions as Representatives here; but after the election had taken place and after the place that knew them was to know them henceforth no more forever they assembled in this body and defeated the popular will, and four months is given to this kind of legislation, notwithstanding the fact that this is supposed to be a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, there seem to be two objections urged against this bill, one by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH], which is a sentimental one, and the other by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], which is a practical one. I sympathize fully with the gentleman from New Jersey in his great respect for the Constitution and for the immortal men who framed it. I will not yield one jot or tittle to any man in proper respect for those great men; yet I must candidly confess that I agree with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] in the belief that, after all, we must depend upon the wisdom of live men for our well being, and not upon those who have passed away, however glorious their memories may be.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is a positive evil existing under our institutions—I mean the lack of responsiveness on the part of the legislature to the popular will. Whether that evil is so great as to fully counterbalance other evils which might arise from a change of system is a proper question for discussion, one to which this House and the people can not give too great consideration; and I now say that it is idle—it certainly is not at all to the purpose—to conduct this argument with any reference to the legislation of Congress upon the subject of the constitution of this House. That legislation, not being a constitutional provision, is susceptible of change at any time or under any exigency of party necessity. Therefore, in looking at this question we must survey it in the abstract light of a fundamental provision upon which legislation may be founded, but which, at all events, will be paramount to that legislation and will circumscribe its limits.

The evil which I have adverted to is a lack of responsiveness to the popular will. There is one objection connected with that which is patent to all those which have followed the course of legislation in this country. You have an election to-day and a year from now your Congress meets. During that time gentlemen who get the popular ear, gentlemen who get control of the press, or of the attention of members of Congress will so change a measure that was demanded by the people or will so dwarf its importance by artificial processes, that it is hardly ever again heard of in Congress. It is during that period of delay that people who are personally interested in legislation of a doubtful character do their work and get control of public sentiment and sometimes of Congress itself.

A measure which has been earnestly supported and urged by the press you will find, in the same press, slurred over, minimized, and finally recommended to be postponed after it has served its election purpose of securing a partisan triumph. I think I could cite several instances. Take this matter of tariff reform, some papers in this country which were strongest, most positive, most dictatorial, if I may use the term, upon that subject are now advising delay, are now presenting to the people a tariff reform which was never discussed during the election, which was never contemplated, and which, if adopted, will simply result in a disappointment to the people who elected us as their representatives in the next Congress.

So it is in regard to other questions. You will find newspapers which cried aloud upon the question of tariff reform, or the question of immigration—which is to-day, next to tariff reform, the most important question before the American people—you will find newspapers that were the most strenuous for the rights and the protection of American labor during the campaign, beginning now to have doubts, to hesitate and to tell a tale which they did not tell during the election, and upon which, I may say, if they had told it then, they could never have secured public support. In this way the fresh impulse of the popular heart, the vigor, the impetus given to a reform or to a policy in legislation by the popular will is lost; it grows cold and dead.

The importance of it is eclipsed by other matters. It may be replied that these newspapers are simply expressing what is called the sober second thought. Sir, the sober second thought in the history of nations has rarely, in my judgment, tended to true progress. On the contrary, it has tended to an emasculation of vigor, of principle, and impedes directness of action. The objections made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] to this joint resolution are worthy of consideration. I desire a quicker response to the will of the people, but I do not desire to obtain that by overthrowing other safeguards or by in any way jeopardizing the future peace of the country.

I have read history in vain—though with all respect to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], I will not claim to be a proficient in that branch of study—I have read history in vain if his position is correct, that disputes concerning who shall be members of legislative bodies have been the cause of the overthrow of republican institutions. Where and when has that happened? Certainly it was not the case in Chile. That was a case of usurpation followed by revolution. Balmaceda assumed the power of continuing in office and the power of perpetuating in office after him the person who would be his mere tool and henchman. That was an unfortunate instance.

But where in the history of republics do we find difficulty of that kind? How was it under the "Long Parliament" in Great Britain? Was there any dispute as to who should be members of that body? Let us go to the Swiss republic; are there any disputes there? Let us go to France, where that noisy, turbulent, and I had almost said disgraceful assembly is in session at this moment. Do we find any difficulty of this kind there? Where in either ancient or modern times do we find a difficulty of this kind? That there might be the state of things which the gentleman dwells upon, I am not one who has the hardihood to deny. I do not choose to stake my reputation, I do not choose to stake my future in this House, upon a denial of that proposition. There are no evils connected with government which we may not fear may happen to us. There may be disputed presidential successions; there may be rival Congresses; but of the two, the disputed presidential succession is the most apt to happen, and dual Congresses the least apt to happen.

But if there is danger of that—if this proposition opens the door to the evils suggested as even a possibility, though I deny that they are probable—then do not let us turn our backs upon an evil which certainly does exist, this evil of the irresponsiveness of the Legislatures of the country to the will of the country; but let us see whether we can not devise some scheme by which the one evil may be corrected and the other evil may be avoided. To stand here and deny that the irresponsiveness of the Legislature to the will of the people is an evil and therefore to refuse to do anything to correct it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, to be opposed to the entire experience of the times.

From every part of the country the complaint comes as to the slowness of action here and the utter irresponsibility, after all, of the members of this body to the people who elect them. We have the theory that the people are the masters; but how can they be masters when their commands are not obeyed for a period of over a year, and when during that time those they have elected may change their minds, not at the mandate of the people, but under the insidious influence of interested persons who have legislation they wish to put in the stead of the legislation required by the people.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] said that we propose to put new cloth into old garments, and he speaks of that as being inconsistent. Why, Mr. Speaker, when this House comes here fresh from the constituencies it represents the last expression of their will—it is the final order given by the people; and if there is a President out of accord with them—if there is a hostile Senate—yet the House sent here is not "new cloth in old garments," but it is the entire garment, as I might say, for it can stand here and protect the people against the errors either of the Executive or of the Senate. Standing here as the true protectors and agents of the people, the House of Representatives may say to the Executive: "You shall not carry out this policy or that." It may say to the Senate: "You shall not carry out this policy or that; there is only one policy that is to be carried out, and that is the policy which the people have deputed us to enforce; otherwise there shall be nothing done except what is absolutely necessary to carry on the Government."

How long is it since among English-speaking races the value of such a power in the lower House, the House representing the people—how long is it since the value of such a prerogative in the popular branch of government, is to be called "new cloth in old garments?" It is the very body and bulwark of parliamentary liberty; it is the great restraining power upon all the other powers. It constitutes in fact this body the supreme body after all in the government of this country.

This view of the subject, Mr. Speaker, may be jocular; yet this is no occasion for jocularity. Whatever becomes of this measure, the discussion here to-day should be serious. Above all it should be honest. And therefore, while I insist upon this great evil of the irresponsiveness of the Legislature of this country to the will of the country, I also freely acknowledge that there may be danger in the opposite direction. But instead of opposing this bill for such a reason, we should get together and see if we can not destroy the one evil and protect ourselves against the other.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope I have said nothing here that would savor of passion or anger concerning this measure. It is one to which we should give our best, our most dispassionate and earnest thought. We have no right to recommend to the Legislatures of the States any measure of constitutional amendment which does not commend itself to our own best judgment. It is not a partisan matter; it ought not to be a partisan matter, and, so far as I am concerned, it shall not be such in the consideration I give it. No partisan question should be involved in the consideration of such a measure as this. If the evils predicted or the apprehensions set forth by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] have any foundation, or are even possible in the future, then I call upon the members of this House to propose such amendments to this joint resolution as will prevent these evils from even being possible, and at the same time to aid in getting rid of the other evil, which I think is paramount over all the other evils in this Government.

I reiterate, sir, there is no man, I hope, on this floor who has a greater but at the same time a more proper admiration for the past than I have. But we do not live in the past. Our duty is to the present and the future. We are living in the breathing present, not in the dead past. It is the duties of to-day which are incumbent upon us. It is the wisdom of to-day which the world needs; and so long as I have been in this House I have refused to be bound by the past simply because it is the past, or to bow down in fetich worship before the Constitution or the men who framed the Constitution. They were great men, as great men as the history of the world has ever produced, probably. But even in that we are given to the American vice of exaggeration.

We dishonor even these great men by the excess of adulation we heap upon them. Respect their worth, respect it; but remember that they in their day and generation could not conceive the country which exists to-day. Remember that men change as well as the circumstances surrounding them. Remember that the nature of man, which has been appealed to and commented upon here to-day—the nature of man of to-day—is not the nature of man over a hundred years ago. We are creatures of circumstance.

Each generation brings forth a different type of men, men of different mental constitutions and powers; and I hope it is not vanity, I hope it is not an overweening love of the present when I assert and believe that there is more wisdom to-day, more general public virtue, more capacity to govern the world than there was at the time the Constitution was formed. So that when one arises here and appeals to sentiment I join in it as I would join in the admiration of the most beautiful poem; but when another appeals to the experience of the past I answer him, "God Almighty put me here to-day to use my brain, to use my information, to use my powers in the position which I occupy, and that He has put you in the same position." [Applause.]

Mr. DE ARMOND was recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has been recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to offer an amendment.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to submit the amendment that I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 3 of Article I be so amended that the same shall be as follows:

"ARTICLE I.

"SEC. 3. That the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, who shall be chosen by a direct vote of the people of the several States for six years; and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature; and each Senator shall have one vote."

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to reserve all points of order on that amendment.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Missouri to yield to the gentleman from Indiana only for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is correct.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I rise for a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The substitute is now pending. Is this amendment of the gentleman from Indiana to the substitute?

The SPEAKER. This is an amendment to the original resolution. The substitute of the gentleman from Ohio is pending, as the Chair understands, but the original resolution may be perfected before the substitute is voted upon.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri yields to me.

I move that the House take a recess until five minutes to 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no! Let us vote now.

Mr. PEEL. Before that motion is submitted I want to say in a moment that the House will remember this morning a rule was adopted setting apart this day for the consideration of business from the Committee on the Election of the President and Vice-President, and to-morrow——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the gentleman that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. PEEL. I understand that, Mr. Speaker, but I wanted to state that to-morrow was set apart for the Committee of Indian Affairs by the special rule, and I hope we will not be deprived of the day.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 38, noes 75.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], who is leading the opposition in this measure, has agreed with me, if I understand him, that if there is no quorum present, which has been demonstrated by this vote, he will allow me to take a recess until five minutes to 12 to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not assume to give the gentleman permission to do anything, for it is not in my power. If it was, I would be very glad to coöperate with him. I suggest that the gentleman take a vote on the question now, and if that vote discloses the absence of a quorum, then I shall certainly vote to take a recess until to-morrow.

Mr. CURTIS. Perhaps the question of a quorum will not be raised.

Mr. CRAIN. I do not think there is a quorum here.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then it will be shown on the vote.

Mr. CRAIN. This vote has shown that there is no quorum.

Mr. COCKRAN. But there are many members of the House who did not vote who are about the Capitol. I think there are 175 members present.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. TUCKER. Has not a point of order been raised on that?

Mr. DINGLEY. I raised a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] reserved a point of order, but did not state what it was.

Mr. DINGLEY. That it is not germane to this bill; that it is on another subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is germane to the pending proposition. This is an amendment to the Constitution of the United States with reference to the two Houses of Congress. The Chair will observe that the last provision is in regard to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] in respect to his point of order. The gentleman will observe that one of these amendments relates to the expiration of the terms of Senators.

Mr. DINGLEY. It simply relates to the date of the commencement of the term.

The SPEAKER. The expiration of the term.

Mr. BURROWS. It does not relate to the method of election. That is another subject entirely.

Mr. HOLMAN. The subject-matter is an amendment to the Constitution of the United States touching the organization of Congress. I submit that on that ground my amendment is germane to the subject-matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will observe that there is a distinct article of the Constitution relating to the tenure or term of Senators. The article proposed to be amended relates simply, as the Chair thinks from such examination as he can give to the bill hurriedly, to the expiration of the term and the day of meeting of Congress. There is nothing in it respecting the election of Senators or Representatives. Therefore the Chair thinks that the amendment is not germane. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read again.

The substitute offered by Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR was again read.

The question being taken on the substitute, it was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the joint resolution.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. DICKERSON. I hope the gentleman will allow the question to be divided.

Mr. CRAIN. I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] to withdraw his demand for the previous question for a moment.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I will withdraw it for a moment at the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, the objections which have been raised to this resolution have come from quarters that to me were unexpected. Nevertheless in the discussion of them I have to leave that out of consideration.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not think the gentleman has recovered from his surprise yet.

Mr. CRAIN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] has, through his fertile imagination, conjured up spectacular dramas of bloodshed and rapine that may occur in this country. He has referred to cases where republics in foreign countries have gone down because of the fact that the electoral system has been perverted; and when I asked him to name a single republic that possessed the peculiar system of government that we possess, he simply said that I was ignorant of history.

I say to him that no country in the world has ever presented to the people a system of government like ours. The gentleman has referred to a question of revolution, which has no connection with our peculiar system of government. He has stated on the floor of the House that there has been a dual House of Representatives, and he suggested the case of the election of Mr. Winthrop.

Mr. Speaker, there was no dual House of Representatives, and there never has been in the history of this Government. I have before me the Congressional Globe, setting forth the facts of Mr. Winthrop's election. There was no dispute. The Clerk of the House of Representatives called the House to order, votes were taken, and Mr. Winthrop was elected. There never has been a dual House of Representatives in the history of this country. The suggestion of the gentleman, that the new House of Representatives coming from the people might be influenced by the motives and the impulses which actuated the people in the selection of the President, is futile, because, as every gentleman in this House knows, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, elected by a prior House, swears in the members; or if he does not do it he calls the House to order and an older member swears them in.

This is an organized House, just exactly as there would be an organized House in the second session. In 1876 or 1877, when the question arose between Mr. Tilden and Mr. Hayes, it was, as he says, an organized House. But why should not the objection which he raises as to the organized House at that time be obnoxious to the presentation of this question, as it is represented in this resolution. He may not know it, but older members of Congress know the fact that men have been seated in this House on the last day of the last session, and they have drawn their two years' pay.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who argued, as he always does, with sarcastic reference to the people who have succeeded his people in charge of this Government, and who always speaks well and eloquently, forgets the fact that he was in favor of this amendment at the time when there was a Republican majority in the House, and the Democrats went down to their constituents and defeated them. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] ignores a similar fact when he opposes this resolution, after having told me that he was in favor of it. There is nothing, absolutely nothing in the suggestions that have been made, although they have been eloquently made, against the proposition embraced in this resolution. It simply means what the country demands in an extra session of Congress, as has been suggested by newspapers in New York and elsewhere, and by Democratic members of this House who have prominence.

It means, Mr. Speaker, that the theory of this Constitution shall be carried out practically; that the Representatives elected in the fall elections shall come here in touch with the people. It means, Mr. Speaker, that instead of being brought here as we are in the month of December and wasting, as we do, one whole month, which no gentleman can deny, in the election of a Speaker and the selection of committees, that we shall be brought here within sixty days after our election.

The Senate, Mr. Speaker, is more in touch with the people of this country than the House of Representatives; and why? Because one-third of their members go out and their successors are elected by their respective Legislatures, and they come here and are kept in session for special purposes, whereas the House does not meet until thirteen months after its members have been chosen by the people to represent them.

Suppose that the election of the President had devolved upon the last Congress, when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] was reputed to have counted umbrellas and walking canes, what chance would the Democratic party have had for the election of a President? None, whatever. Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, that this House ought not to be for nine months without a Speaker, as it is under existing conditions. I say that the men who are elected in November ought to be here within sixty days after their election, at their post of duty, responding to the will of the people expressed at the polls.

I say that it was wrong for the Mills Congress to be in session at the short session for three months, legislating for the people after that bill had been repudiated. I say with equal force, because it is not partisan, that the Republican Congress ought not to have been in session for three months after the McKinley bill had been repudiated. The will of the people was thwarted. The representatives of the people felt that they had been repudiated; and nobody will deny the statement that a man who has been beaten by his people at the polls is not as efficient a representative as when he came here with a majority in his favor.

This measure may be beaten. I am not wedded to it, as I told gentlemen on the other side. I do think there ought to be a remedy for the evils of which the people, through the press, complain. I do not think that those evils can be remedied by legislative enactment. I am fortified in the presentation of this case from a legal standpoint by Attorneys-General of the United States. I am fortified by the statement of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I have the pleasure to say that I have at my back in the presentation of this amendment the distinguished gentleman from Maine, who represents the opposition to this matter. Having stated these facts and the principles which are necessarily evolved by them, I yield, of course, to the will of the House.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my motion for the previous question on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would suggest to gentlemen on the other side that they allow the previous question to be ordered on the adoption of this resolution, and then we can adjourn, and to-morrow, when the House is full, it can take action.

Mr. COCKRAN. Take the yeas and nays now, there is a quorum present.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 86.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 49, nays 128, not voting 152; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3564) for the relief of Josiah Pickett; and

A bill (S. 3649) for the relief of William J. Carnell and Joseph M. Carnell.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. OHLIGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 118) for the relief of the estate of Isaac W. Talkington, deceased; and

A bill (S. 3623) to amend the act of March 3, 1873, for the relief of the Columbian University, in the District of Columbia.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. PEEL, by unanimous consent, an order was made for the reprint of the bill (H. R. 9190) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee Indians of the Indian Territory, etc.

SATURDAY HALF-HOLIDAY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a Senate joint resolution (S. R. 130) to amend an act entitled "An act to make Saturday a half-holiday for banking and trust companies in the District of Columbia;" which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT, VICE-PRESIDENT, AND REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. COCKRAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the House had refused to order the joint resolution (H. Res. 98) to a third reading; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WOLVERTON, on account of important business.

To Mr. BLAND, for to-day, on account of sickness.

The House then, on motion of Mr. SPRINGER (at 5 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.), adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Claims, reported the bill (S. 730) for the relief of H. W. Shipley (Report No. 2215), which was delivered to the Clerk's desk, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 11, 1893.

Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., the Chaplain of the Senate, offered the following prayer:

O, Thou, who livest and reignest forever, the everlasting God, our Maker, in Whom we live and move and have our being, we come humbly and reverently into Thy presence as we stand again in the shadow of death. We thank Thee for this faithful and useful life. We bless Thee for its patience in suffering and for the peace and quiet of its end. We remember before Thee the home bereft. Do Thou sustain and comfort and sanctify. O, that the peace of God may dwell there, in the midst of the great darkness.

Teach us heavenly wisdom. Thou art reminding us that there is but a step between us and death, that our life is only a vapor. Help us so to live day by day in the fear of God and in the service of men, keeping our own consciences right, that whenever labor and care and anxiety and joy and sorrow shall cease, we may be prepared to fall asleep and to enter into rest.

O, Thou, who livest and wast dead and art alive forevermore, the abolisher of death, our only Saviour, our eye is toward Thee. We pray Thee lead us all through this pilgrim way over which the shadow of death is so often thrown. We thank Thee for light from heaven, and we pray Thee give unto us inspiration, that our lives may be so restrained and fashioned and molded that they may be made a blessing to men and that God may be honored in our living.

Bless us in our families; bless us in our public and social relations; and help us everywhere to walk in the fear and love of the Lord, delivered from all uncharitableness one toward the other. We ask these mercies, with forgiveness and grace, in Jesus' name. Amen.

DEATH OF SENATOR KENNA.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, it has never fallen to the lot of man to deliver a sadder message than I now bear to the Senate Chamber.

Because of the absence from this city of Mr. FAULKNER, a Senator from the State of West Virginia, the painful duty devolves upon me to announce to this body that John E. Kenna, late a Senator from that State, died in this city in the early hours of this morning. After a long and lingering illness, during which the fatal malady of which he was the victim made steady and relentless progress, the end came. About 3 o'clock this morning, surrounded by his wife and family, he ceased to live, and the soul of the great Senator passed behind the veil and made its entry into the realms of that unknown world.

In the face of this fresh and mighty sorrow the tongue fails and refuses to speak that which wells up in the heart for utterance. Measured by years, he was one of the youngest members in this Chamber, not yet 45 years of age; but measured by the accomplishments of his life, he ranked with the octogenarian. Whether as soldier or as citizen, as husband, father, or friend, he had rounded out a life and leaves behind him a record to challenge the approval of mankind. Measured as a lawyer or a lawmaker, he left his impress upon the generation to which he belonged. He has engraven in ineffaceable characters upon the history of his country his achievements here and in the other branch of the National Legislature. Kindly as a woman, unselfish to a fault, brave and unflinching in the discharge of every duty, it has never been my good fortune to come in contact with a nature more lovable, more exalted, than was that of our dead comrade.

I will not, Mr. President, trust myself to speak of him now. At some day in the early future the Senate, in obedience to its appropriate and honored custom, will set apart a day when tributes may be paid, by those who knew him and loved him, to his memory. Till then I will content myself by asking the present consideration of the resolutions I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with great sorrow of the death of the Hon. John E. Kenna, late a Senator from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That a committee of seven Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. Kenna, which will take place to-morrow, Thursday, in the Senate Chamber, at 1 o'clock p. m., and that the Senate will attend the same.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect entertained by the Senate for his memory, his remains be removed from Washington to West Virginia in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives, and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral to-morrow, Thursday, at 1 o'clock p. m., and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed as the committee under the second resolution Mr. FAULKNER, Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. RANSOM, Mr. DANIEL, Mr. WALTHALL, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. SQUIRE.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I ask for the consideration of the resolutions I now send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and the associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the diplomatic corps, the Major-General Commanding the Army, and the senior Admiral of the Navy to attend the funeral of the Hon. John E. Kenna, late a Senator from the State of West Virginia, in the Senate Chamber, to-morrow, Thursday, at 1 o'clock p. m.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously; and (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 12, 1893, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 11, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh, eternal God! as the knell once more sounds through the Capitol, and the saddening intelligence comes to us that a distinguished Senator and a man once prominent on this floor have finished their earthly journey and gone to the solemn tribunal of Thy presence, we pray that the lesson taught us may come home to every heart. "All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever."

Hear our humble and earnest petitions in behalf of the wife and children of the Senator and of the children of the general, and comfort them, we pray Thee, by the consolations of Thy word and of Thy Holy Spirit. Let all who are in trouble and distress receive the benediction of Thy grace and the sunshine of the truth of Thy word. Prepare us all for the solemn change whenever it shall come; and at the end may we quietly pass to that rest which Thou hast prepared for Thy people. We pray through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Secretary of the Treasury and the Marine Hospital Service, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

GUN AND MORTAR PLATFORMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation submitted by the Secretary of War for gun and mortar platforms; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WORN AND MUTILATED PAPER CURRENCY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, renewing the recommendation made by the Treasury Department last year for the redemption of worn and mutilated United States paper currency, and the issue of new currency therefor at the cost of the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WOLF RIVER HARBOR, INDIANA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter of the Chief of Engineers, report of a preliminary examination of Wolf River Harbor, Indiana, on Lake Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. WEST.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a copy of the finding of the Court of Claims in the case of John H. West vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORS OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House certified copies, transmitted by the Secretary of State, of final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President in the States of Indiana, California, and Kentucky; which were laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table, read twice, and referred as indicated:

A bill (S. 3564) for the relief of Josiah Pickett—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3649) for the relief of William J. Carnell and Joseph M. Carnell—to the Committee on Claims.

DEEP-WATER HARBOR, COAST OF TEXAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891.

Mr. LONG. I ask that the Senate amendment be now considered and concurred in.

Mr. WATSON. What is the request of the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. This is a House bill returned with an amendment of the Senate, which is submitted to the House under the rule. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LONG] moves that the amendment be concurred in.

Mr. WATSON. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out "five," before "years," and insert "two;" so as to read:
"That section 2 of said act be so amended as to extend the time for commencing said work two years from the 9th day of February, 1893."

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Does that amendment relate to the time of commencing the work or the time of finishing it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the amendment proposes to reduce the time within which the work may be commenced from five years, as in the bill passed by the House, to two years.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. The bill as originally introduced proposed, I believe, two years.

Mr. WATSON. The original bill on this subject was approved, I believe, only one year ago, and I would like to understand what necessity there is for passing now an act extending the privilege then granted. Is there really any company organized?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; there is a company organized.

Mr. WATSON. What prevents them from going on with this work under the authority asked in the original act?

Mr. LONG. The time would expire, perhaps, before they could complete the work.

Mr. WATSON. What prevented them from going forward heretofore and taking advantage of the act as originally passed?

Mr. LONG. I do not know.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, is this matter debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to have recognition for the purpose merely of pointing out to the House what I understand the effect of this bill is. I oppose the passage of this bill, Mr. Speaker, because I believe it bad in principle as well as in practice. The House is asked here to give a private association—a private corporation—the national work of constructing and controlling this harbor on the coast of Texas. As I understand it, this is the only feasible point for the construction of a deep-water harbor on that coast for a distance of some 500 miles. We grant away what is essentially a national prerogative to a private corporation. They have the power to levy tolls on the commerce at that point. They will virtually preëmpt that high privilege and control the operations of commerce on that coast.

I oppose it, Mr. Speaker, because whenever the United States shall hereafter find it necessary or desirable to construct a harbor on that coast at any point within 500 miles of this location—this being, as I am informed, the only feasible one—they will have to do it on such terms as this corporation may see proper to prescribe. It does seem to me to be a very dangerous principle of legislation to enter upon for the Government practically to give the construction and control of its harbors to private corporations.

This company came to Congress a year ago and asked certain privileges upon the promise that they would construct the harbor within a given time. Without its being alleged that they have turned a single hand towards the completion of the work, without it being alleged that they have expended a dollar of money on the work or have attempted in any manner to comply with their contract, they now come and ask the Government to extend the time, without alleging any reason whatever for the extension. If we need a harbor at this point, the Government should construct it, own it, and control it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, this is not out of the usual line of legislation. The bill now before the House for consideration was passed and is now sought to be amended. I do not feel that it is necessary for me to go further and present to the House any reasons for its consideration and passage at this time. The House has already acted upon it. I have asked the consideration of this amendment. I believe that when the House passed the bill before it was right, and I believe it is right now. I concur, myself, in the amendment of the Senate, and ask the House to adopt it.

I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the Senate amendment was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. LONG, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CARUTH, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BUNTING, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar and put upon its passage the bill (S. 1933) to amend section 860 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Let me ask the gentleman from Virginia if this bill has been considered by a committee of the House?

Mr. WISE. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that the bill read from the Clerk's desk was passed by the Senate a few days ago without objection and was reported by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The whole scope and effect of the act is simply to meet the decision rendered recently by the Supreme Court in the case known as "the Councilman case."

The bill provides that where a witness is examined touching any violation of the act known as "the interstate commerce act," he shall not thereafter be prosecuted for any offense committed by him in connection with the subject about which he is examined.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Is there a report made by the Senate?

Mr. WISE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will ask to have it read.

Mr. WISE. I have not the report at hand, but have stated the whole of it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. It is not worth while to take up the time of the House with the reading of the report, as I will object to its consideration in the morning hour.

LOUIS A. YORKE.

Mr. McALEER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 2260) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HARRIES. I do not think these bills ought to be considered in this manner and I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

PRINTING OF THE REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE, 1892.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a Senate joint resolution, for which I wish immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is it privileged?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is not. It is a report from the Committee on Printing on a resolution to print the Agricultural Report for 1892.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 500,000 copies of the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture for the year 1892; 110,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 360,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 30,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture; the illustrations for the same to be executed under the supervision of the Public Printer, in accordance with directions of the Joint Committee on Printing, said illustrations to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of printing said report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report [by Mr. RICHARDSON] was read, as follows:

The Committee have considered Senate joint resolution providing for the printing of the Agricultural Report of 1892, and direct me to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

The estimated cost of same is $300,000.

The committee call attention to the fact that this resolution provides for the printing of 500,000 copies of this report, which is an increase of 100,000 copies over the number printed in previous years.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I simply call attention to the fact that this is an increase of 100,000 copies of this annual report. We have heretofore printed 400,000 copies of the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture. This is an increase made by the Senate from 400,000 to 500,000 copies. The estimated cost of this document is about $300,000. This is a Senate joint resolution, and I ask for its passage.

Mr. MANSUR. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. When did the printing of 400,000 copies commence? How long have we been printing 400,000 copies?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not give the exact date, but for the past four or five years we have been printing that number.

Mr. MANSUR. This increase is to meet the growth of the population?

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is an increase to 500,000 copies.

Mr. SEERLEY. How are the copies to be distributed?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The distribution is the same relatively as in preceding Congresses.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the calling of standing and select committees for reports. The Clerk will call the committees.

The roll of the standing and select committees was called; when bills of the following titles were severally reported, read a first and second time, referred to the Calendars named below, and, except as otherwise stated, with the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

CIRCULATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. CATE. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Banking and Currency to report a substitute for the bill (H. R. 9833) to increase the circulation of national banks, and for other purposes. The committee have prepared a report to accompany this bill. It is not a unanimous report, and gentlemen of the committee having views differing from the majority have asked that the report be withheld until they have time to prepare the views of the minority, so that they may all be printed at the same time. I therefore ask leave to withhold the report until the views of the minority can be prepared and printed with the report, if there is no objection on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CATE], from the Committee on Banking and Currency, asks leave to submit a report upon a substitute for the bill (H. R. 9833) to increase the circulation of national banks, and for other purposes, withholding the report until the views of the minority are prepared. Is there objection to the bill being filed without the report?

There was no objection.

The bill (H. R. 10143) to increase the circulation of national banks, and for other purposes, was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. Is there any appropriation made in this bill?

Mr. CATE. No appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the House Calendar and printed.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

By Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce: A bill (H. R. 10042) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended March 2, 1889—to the House Calendar.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE MONONGAHELA RIVER.

By Mr. GEARY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce: A bill (H. R. 9997) to authorize the Homestead and Pittsburg Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River from Pittsburg to Homestead—to the House Calendar.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9827) to authorize the Union Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River—to the House Calendar.

HOSPITAL CORPS, UNITED STATES ARMY.

By Mr. BELKNAP, from the Committee on Military Affairs: A bill (H. R. 9925) to establish companies of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, and for other purposes—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CERTAIN LANDS, WASHINGTON.

By Mr. SWEET, from the Committee on the Public Lands: A bill (S. 216) granting to the State of Washington certain lands therein for the purpose of a fish hatchery—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

OKLAHOMA MIDLAND RAILROAD COMPANY.

By Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. 10145), as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 9994), to authorize the Oklahoma Midland Railroad Company to construct and operate a railroad through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HARVEY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 10145), as a substitute for the bill H. R. 8269, granting to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company the use of certain lands at Chicasha Station, in the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Union Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INDIAN WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 180) relating to proof of citizenship of applicants for Indian-war pensions under the act of Congress approved July 27, 1892; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF APPEAL.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Virginia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 9979) to regulate the right of appeal in certain cases; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The call of committees for reports was concluded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty minutes to 1. The call rests with the Committee on the Militia. The committee have a bill before the House.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill in relation to the militia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7318) to promote the efficiency of the militia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Before the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole the Chair will receive a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of sundry resolutions relative to the death of Hon. John E. Kenna, late a Senator from the State of West Virginia.

DEATH OF HON. JOHN E. KENNA.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the vote by which the House determined to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill indicated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] will be rescinded, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] respecting the resolution just sent over from the Senate.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the resolutions just communicated from the Senate announce to this House a fact whose impressive solemnity I shall not lessen by words of my own at this time.

For sixteen years Mr. Kenna had represented West Virginia in this House and in the Senate with the warm approval of his constituents and the applause of his countrymen.

Judged by the length of his service and the distinction of his service, he had filled out a long and honored career. Judged by the number of his years, as they are measured in the calendar, he had scarcely reached the meridian of life, or entered upon that tableland where his rare powers would have borne their ripest and most abundant fruit.

I ask leave, sir, in response to the resolutions of the Senate, to offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the resolutions from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with great sorrow of the death of the Hon. John E. Kenna, late a Senator from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That a committee of seven Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. Kenna, which will take place to-morrow, Thursday, in the Senate Chamber at 1 o'clock p. m., and that the Senate will attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect entertained by the Senate for his memory, his remains be removed from Washington to West Virginia in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms and attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives, and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral to-morrow, Thursday, at 1 o'clock p. m., and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the Senate do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the resolutions offered by the gentleman from West Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has learned with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. John E. Kenna, a Senator of the United States from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House appoint a committee of ten members, to act in conjunction with the committee appointed by the Senate, to take order for superintending the funeral and to accompany the remains to their last resting place.

Resolved, That the House accept the invitation of the Senate to attend the funeral to-morrow, Thursday, at 1 o'clock p. m., and that the Clerk of the House communicate these proceedings to the Senate.

Resolved, That, as a further tribute and mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

The SPEAKER. Before announcing the result of the vote, and declaring the House adjourned, the Chair will announce the appointment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ALDERSON, Mr. PENDLETON, Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. OUTHWAITE, Mr. TUCKER, Mr. DUNGAN, Mr. MANSUR, Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, and Mr. BINGHAM.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the terms of the resolutions just adopted, the Chair now declares the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

And accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 48 minutes) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 12, 1893.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR KENNA.

Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., the Chaplain of the Senate, offered the following prayer:

O Thou, in whom is no darkness at all, the light and the life of men, help us this day and every day to walk in Thy light. We thank Thee for the light of Thy Word and the light of the perfect life. We bless Thee for all who so live in the obedience and faith and love of the gospel that their light shines abroad, that men may see their good works and be led to glorify Thee, our Father in Heaven.

We bless Thee for this great free land, with all its institutions of education and religion and all the people free. We pray, O God, that Thou wouldest shine more and more into our hearts, making plain the path of duty, delivering us from the power of darkness and error in every form and from the bondage of ignorance and sin, filling us with Thine own mind, so that we may enter more and more into that freedom wherewith Christ makes men and nations free.

Guide us this day by Thy counsel. We thank Thee for the care of the night and the mercies of the morning.

We look to Thee, O God, as we come to these duties, and pray that as we turn toward and from the open grave we may learn lessons of heavenly wisdom, so walking in the fear and love of God, with charity toward our fellow-men, that our lives may be made a benediction.

Sanctify to us all Thy providences. Bless with us our fellowmen in every class and condition, and may our land stand more and more for the truth and justice, the equity and righteousness, of the religion of Christ. We ask these mercies, with forgiveness and grace, in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, owing to my absence yesterday I made an arrangement with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], on whom was imposed the sad privilege of announcing to the Senate the death of my distinguished colleague, Senator John E. Kenna, of West Virginia. I come from the capital of the State, where were assembled yesterday the representatives of the people of that State. I bear with me to the Senate the evidences of their sympathy at this sad bereavement, not only to the people of that State, but to the nation.

As a further evidence of their high esteem and distinguished regard for the Senator who is now departed, they appointed from the senate and house of representatives of that body a joint committee to proceed to the Capitol of the nation and to escort the remains of the deceased Senator to the capital of the State, where the interment will take place. Under the rules of the Senate it becomes my duty at this time to ask the unanimous consent that the privileges of the floor be granted to this representative committee of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until a quarter of 1 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this House has learned with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. John E. Kenna, a Senator of the United States from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House appoint a committee of ten members, to act in conjunction with the committee appointed by the Senate, to take order for superintending the funeral and to accompany the remains to their last resting place.

Resolved, That the House accept the invitation of the Senate to attend the funeral to-morrow, Thursday, at 1 o'clock p. m., and that the Clerk of the House communicate these proceedings to the Senate.

Resolved, That, as a further tribute and mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, this House do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Speaker had appointed as the committee under the second resolution Mr. ALDERSON, Mr. PENDLETON, Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. OUTHWAITE, Mr. TUCKER, Mr. DUNGAN, Mr. MANSUR, Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, and Mr. BINGHAM.

At eight minutes before 1 o'clock the members of the House of Representatives, preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms and Clerk, and headed by the Speaker, entered the Senate Chamber. The Speaker was escorted to a seat at the right of the Vice-President, the Clerk at the Secretary's desk, the Sergeant-at-Arms on the right of the Vice-President's desk, and the members of the House were escorted to the seats on the floor provided for them.

They were soon followed by the Major-General Commanding the Army, the diplomatic corps, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the President of the United States, and the members of the Cabinet; who were respectively escorted to the seats assigned them on the floor of the Senate Chamber.

At 1 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m. the casket containing the remains of the deceased Senator were brought into the Senate Chamber, having been preceded by the committee of the Legislature of West Virginia, the family of the deceased, and escorted by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, the committee of arrangements of the two Houses, the pallbearers selected from the Capitol police, and followed by acolytes and Rt. Rev. John J. Keane, rector of the Catholic University of America; Rev. P. J. Donahue of Baltimore, Md.; Rev. D. F. Schmitt, Rev. James F. Donahue, Rev. M. J. Riordan of Barnesville, Md.; Rev. J. Havens Richards, S. J., president of Georgetown University; Rev. Jacob Walter, Rev. C. Gillespie, S. J.; Rev. William J. Scanlan, S. J.; Rev. P. J. McGinney, S. J.; Rev. John G. Delaney, Rev. James Mackin, Rev. John Gloyd, Rev. Joseph F. McGee, Rev. M. P. Sullivan, Rev. P. J. O'Connell, Rev. E. E. Maynadier, Rev. B. Gordian, F. S. C.; Rev. D. J. O'Connor of Clarksburg, W. Va., and Rev. J. M. Gleason, Rev. James L. Gorey, Rev. Edward P. Dempsey, and Rev. John A. Cull of the Catholic University of America.

The prayers for the burial of the dead prescribed by the ritual of the Catholic Church were read first in Latin and then in English by Rev. James F. Donahue, assistant pastor of St. Joseph's Church, and the responses were made by attending clergymen.

After the incensing and blessing of the body,

Rt. Rev. JOHN J. KEANE delivered the following sermon:

At the request of his Eminence Cardinal Gibbons, and as his representative on this solemn occasion, it is my privilege to offer to Senator Kenna the church's tribute of respect and affection. His country, whose chief and most honored representatives are at this moment clustered around him, has given and will yet give fitting expression to her appreciation of the tireless energy, the distinguished ability, and the blameless integrity with which he filled for so many years the high offices to which his fellow-citizens had called him. Let it be permitted to his mother church to mingle her accents with those of his country, to tell of those qualities that made him near and dear to her—yea, the qualities in which lay the real secret of all his public worth.

A life is noble in proportion as it has before it a noble ideal and strives manfully to live up to it. But nowhere in all the universe of human thought and aspiration can there be found such an ideal as that which faith from his earliest years held before him; nowhere such motives and means for its attainment as his faith supplied him with.

In his early childhood faith taught him to say to his own busy mind, and to answer to all who asked of him the reason of his being: "God made me, that I might know Him, love Him, and serve Him in this world, and be happy with Him forever in the next." It showed him that he was the offspring of infinite love, and that his destiny was the perfection and the beatitude of his being in love eternal.

When, from the littleness of his finite being and from the lowliness of this earthly abode, he looked up to the far-off boundless infinite and asked "How can I reach a destiny there?" his faith showed him the one Mediator, the Word made flesh, the God Man, the bridge between the infinite and the finite, whose humanity stoops to embrace the lowliest child of earth, and whose divinity lifts those that are willing to be lifted up to their destiny in the eternal bosom. He heard the Saviour whisper, "No one cometh to the Father but through me." He saw that only through love incarnate could humanity find its way to God; and even as a child he vowed in his heart that he would do it.

Then he asked, "But tell me what this means in practice, what it implies in my daily life?" And his faith answered, in the words of our Lord, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, and with thy whole soul, and with thy whole mind, and with thy whole strength." To this his young heart responded willingly, because he knew that the sweetest of all things is love, and that the noblest of all loves is the love of God. And then faith pointed to all that his life was ever to have relations with and said, "And the second commandment is like to the first: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Thus in the light that beamed forth from the incarnate God he saw clearly, unmistakably, the spiritual nobleness to which his own life was called, while that same radiance clothing every human being in the sweetness and dignity of the eternal Father's love and of kinship to the Saviour stirred his young heart with yearnings that his life might be useful as well as holy, that it might not only give glory to God in the highest, but also spread peace and good will along his pathway on earth.

Within his soul he heard the voice of conscience and of natural benevolence echoing the Saviour's words and giving them forth as a command of their own; but how immeasurably was their persuasiveness intensified and their efficacy heightened when he recognized that they were indeed an echo of His voice who so sweetly said to him: "Whatsoever thou shalt do even to one of my least brethren thou shalt have done it unto me." He had before him the loftiest ideal, and he craved to be worthy of it.

Then, as his life developed and the horizon of his relationships and his duties expanded, his faith showed him that the same eternal Father, who has so wonderfully framed and elevated human nature, and who has so sweetly fashioned and blessed the links which bind one to family, to friends, and to the associates of daily intercourse, has also with equal wisdom and love devised and sanctioned human society in its widest and highest forms of country and of humanity; that it is He who fires the patriot's heart with love of country; that it is He who distends the heart of the philanthropist with longings for the welfare of mankind, for the progress of the race. He saw in the light of Christ that this was the noblest reach of unselfishness and benevolence; that this above all was worthy to be animated by His spirit; that whatever the life of man was capable of under the promptings of manly courage, of loyalty to duty, of broadness of sympathies, of disinterested self-sacrifice—all this, and more and higher still, was comprised in the ideal of Christian patriotism and Christian heroism; that herein was found the lofty inspiration that made apostles and martyrs for country and for humanity as well as for religion and for God. And he saw that if even the least act of charity and self-sacrifice, done for the least of human beings, would be regarded by our Divine Saviour as done to Himself, much more would noble and lofty service, achieved in the spirit of a Christian for the good of country or of mankind, be regarded by the Saviour of the world as most pleasing and meritorious service to the Divine Majesty.

Here was the lofty ideal which, from his earliest years, John Edward Kenna saw held before him by his faith. And such was the ideal by which, up to his latest breath, Senator Kenna well knew that he had to measure and to judge all the work of his life. Well has the great apostle said: "The just man liveth by faith." That life must, in the nature of things, fall short of the measure of full justice that is not thus inspired and directed by faith. For faith alone tells in its fullness all that a man is meant to be to himself, to his fellow-men, to his God; and he who measures his life by another standard measures it necessarily by a lower one, and must fall short of his full heaven-appointed duty

Thanks be to God whose providence gave this good man from his earliest boyhood no other standard by which to shape and estimate his life, and unto his last day permitted him to judge himself by no different criterion. Were I to assert that he had never in any moment of his life relaxed in his striving after the great ideal or swerved from the line of perfect fidelity in its realization, he would be first to rebuke me for the exaggeration, and I can fancy that those silent lips, erst so prompt and strong for honesty and truth, would say, "No, I was human; even while the spirit was willing the flesh was weak. Many and many a time did I strike my breast and say, 'O, God, be merciful to me a sinner.'" And now, in the language of the liturgy, his spirit cries out, "Have mercy on me, O God, according to thy great mercy, and according to the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my iniquity. A sacrifice to God is a repentant spirit; the contrite and humble heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."

"But," he would add with characteristic frankness, "whenever I approached the sacrament of penance by a good confession"—and his family can testify that he did it frequently and fervently—"I honestly deplored before God my shortcomings and sins; and every time I received my Saviour into my poor heart in the holy communion I vowed to Him that I would renew my resolve of fidelity to every duty towards my God, my country, and my fellow-men, and that I would strive to fulfill them in His own spirit."

Well did our Divine Lord know the needs of human nature when He established in His church these sacramental channels of His grace, to curb, to spur, to chide, to comfort, and encourage and cheer upward, according to our many necessities. And well do we know that no man who conscientiously has recourse to them can be a bad man. Nay, well do we know that he can not but be a good man, a better man by far than without these restraints and helps and encouragements of religion he naturally could be.

Because of his faith, because of the glorious uplifting truths it taught him, because of the potent spiritual aids it gave him, John Edward Kenna was a wiser man, a stronger man, a safer man, a more reliable and dutiful and useful man in every department of life. His career was all the more an honor to his country and a blessing to humanity because of the divine element that was in it. The links of deep and strong and sincere affection which bound him to family and to friends were all the sweeter and all the tenderer because of that spirit in the heart of Christ which he venerated, which he loved, and in which his soul yearned to participate.

Blessed be God for all that His faith did for him, for the ideal it held before him, for the ambition it implanted in his heart, for the aspirations it poured into his soul, for the holy aids and restraints with which it enriched his daily life. Blessed be God for the depths of comfort and of peace with which the ministrations of divine mercy filled his weeks of suffering and the hour of his death.

And now may eternal love repair and perfect in him whatever his life has left faulty and imperfect. May "the Father of mercies and the God of all consolation, who comforteth us in all our tribulations," pour into the hearts of his bereaved loved ones the balm of His healing and soothing grace. And may the God of wisdom and of power, the author of all that is true and beautiful and good, grant to every one of us that we may be truly wise, that we may render our lives pleasing to our Creator and profitable to our fellow-men, by living them under the inspiration and guidance of His holy faith.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee of arrangements will escort the remains of the deceased Senator from the Chamber, accompanying the body to the Pennsylvania Railroad depot and from thence to the place of burial; and the guests of the Senate will retire in the reverse order of their entrance.

The casket was borne from the Chamber, attended by the committee of arrangements, the family of the deceased Senator, the clergymen, and the committee of the Legislature of West Virginia.

The invited guests having retired from the Chamber,

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 13, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 12, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SITE FOR APPRAISER'S WAREHOUSE, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury relating to the site for the appraiser's warehouse in the city and State of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL LABORERS, INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation submitted by the Secretary of War for two laborers in the office of the Inspector-General for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL MESSENGER, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting for favorable action a request from the chief of the division of mail and files requesting that the salary of the mail messenger be increased; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

OFFICE ASSISTANT TREASURER, ST. LOUIS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting for favorable consideration a communication from the assistant treasurer of the United States at St. Louis, submitting certain increases in the force and compensation of the employés in his office; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

OFFICE ASSISTANT TREASURER, NEW ORLEANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans, submitting certain increases in the force and compensation of employés in his office; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, LONG BRANCH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, stating the necessity for an additional appropriation for the purchase of a site for the Long Branch life-saving station; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting a report of the judgments rendered in the circuit and district courts of the United States received since July 12, 1892; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House copies of the findings of the Court of Claims in the following-named cases; which were referred to the Committee on War Claims:

John Waldron, deceased, vs. The United States.

Catherine Murchison vs. The United States.

Peter Cook vs. The United States.

C. F. F. Rosenthal and J. T. Jenkins vs. The United States.

ELECTORAL VOTE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House certified copy of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President in the State of South Carolina, transmitted by the Secretary of State; which was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL QUARANTINE POWERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 2707) granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Secretary of the Treasury and the Marine Hospital Service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], who is unable to be present to-day, requests that this bill be laid temporarily upon the Speaker's table, and if there be no objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

YUMA PUMPING IRRIGATION COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 3195) granting to the Yuma Pumping Irrigation Company the right of way for two ditches across that part of the Yuma Indian Reservation lying in Arizona.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, a bill identical with that has been reported from the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill. The matter is a very simple one.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted unto the Yuma Pumping Irrigation Company, incorporated under the laws of Arizona, its successors and assigns, a right of way 100 feet wide, the center line of which right of way shall commence on the bank of the Colorado River, 300 feet west of the east line of the Yuma Indian Reservation, in Arizona (formerly the Fort Yuma military reservation); thence running westerly along said bank to the center of the angle of the flume of said company; thence following the center of the ditch of said company to the boundary line of the said reservation. Also, there is hereby granted unto said corporation, its successors and assigns, a right of way 200 feet wide across said reservation in Arizona, the center line of which shall commence at low water of the Colorado River, 150 feet westerly of the east line of the said reservation; thence running in a southerly direction to and crossing the west line of said reservation 150 feet, more or less, north of the southwest corner of said reservation: Provided, That for the distance of 250 feet from the point of beginning on said river said right of way shall be 300 feet in width. The plats of the ditches of said company through said reservation shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and such ditches shall not be so located or the rights of way herein granted so used as to in any manner interfere with any permanent building upon said reservation, except with the express assent of said Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That the rights herein granted are upon the express condition that the grantee or grantees thereof shall, at all times during the continuance thereof, furnish the Indian occupants of the lands situated south of and under either of said ditches, and within said reservation as now bounded, water sufficient for all domestic and agricultural purposes, and purposes of irrigation, on such terms and under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage, but the right to amend or repeal it at any time is hereby reserved to Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas that this Senate bill be now considered?

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, is this a grant of a right of way through an Indian reservation?

Mr. PEEL. I will state to the gentleman that this irrigating company established ditches through this reservation under the impression that it was a military reservation which had been abandoned and which they had a right to pass through under the act of Congress; but upon examination of the matter and reference to the Attorney-General it was found that inasmuch as by an Executive order this land had been added to the Yuma Reservation, it did not come under the act of Congress authorizing irrigating companies to cross Government reservations, so that this legislation is necessary. I have examined the matter very thoroughly; there are only a few acres involved, and the bill ought to pass.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. The only question about it in my mind is this: If this is an Indian reservation the bill does not provide for obtaining the consent of the Indians.

Mr. PEEL. The Indians do not occupy this land, but the bill provides that the company shall furnish the Indians all the water they need, and the plan of the irrigating ditches can not be carried out until it is first approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF SENATOR KENNA.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That at 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. to-day, the House proceed to the Senate Chamber to attend the funeral services of the late Senator Kenna, and upon the conclusion of such services the House return to its Chamber and resume its session for the day.

CHARLES M. KENNERLY.

Mr. ENLOE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 1218) for the relief of Charles M. Kennerly was read.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. If there is a report I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, the right of objection being reserved.

The report was read.

Mr. ENLOE. I wish to make a statement——

Mr. BURROWS. Before consent is given for the consideration of this bill, I wish to know whether the matter has been referred to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue——

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. And whether there is a letter from him in reply?

Mr. ENLOE. I have here the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which I will ask to have read. It shows that the amount which went into the Treasury was $339, and I propose to have the bill amended so as to cover that amount.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. B. A. ENLOE, M. C.,
House of Representatives:

SIR: In response to your request of the 7th instant for a report in the matter of the bill (H. R. 1218) for the relief of Charles M. Kennerly, I have the honor to state that the records and files of this office show the following:

March 12, 1874, two mules, a wagon and harness, and three packages of tobacco, property of Mr. Kennerly, were seized for forfeiture in the third collection district of Mississippi.

The mules, wagon and harness were libeled, and released on bond.

December 14, 1874, cause called and judgment of condemnation by default against the mules, wagon and harness, valued at $325, and that the United States recover of the stipulators the said sum of $325 and interest and costs.

Same day, forfeiture against the three boxes of tobacco.

December 19, 1874, motion filed to set aside the above-described judgment. Motion apparently not granted, since in June following the judgment was paid and the amount covered into the Treasury.

The three condemned packages of tobacco were also sold, the gross proceeds being $75.44, and net proceeds $14.12, which sum of $14.12 has also been covered into the Treasury.

No report was ever furnished this office that Mr. Kennerly had been indicted, or of any criminal proceedings against him whatever.

In view of the fact that Mr. Kennerly must have had a hearing in court on his petition to set aside its judgment, and that the court insisted upon its execution, while all the facts were then fresh and ascertainable, I do not consider that the petitioner is entitled to the relief now sought.

I return the paper received from you.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN MASON, Commissioner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BURROWS. The latter part of that letter discloses the fact that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue thought this claim ought not to be allowed. Inasmuch as this is a private bill and we are so near private bill day, I think the bill had better go over until we can have time to look into the matter.

Mr. LANE. I demand the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the committees for reports of a public nature.

COURT OF APPEALS FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with an amendment in the form of a substitute, the bill (S. 1185) to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO AT CINCINNATI.

Mr. STORER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10007) to provide for lowering the height of a bridge proposed to be constructed across the Ohio River between Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Ky., by the Cincinnati and Covington Rapid Transit Bridge Company; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF LIBRARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on the Library, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Wednesday, February 8, 1893, immediately after the morning hour, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the Library.

THE MILITIA.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m. The call rests with the Committee on the Militia.

Mr. LANE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the bill (H. R. 7318) to promote the efficiency of the militia.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7318) to promote the efficiency of the militia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that there is pending an amendment to the fourth section, offered by the gentleman from Illinois. That amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 4 by striking out all after the word "make" in line 4, and in lieu thereof inserting the following:

"Return of the militia of the State with their arms, accouterments, and ammunition, agreeably to the provisions of law, to the President of the United States annually, on or before the first Monday in January; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War from time to time to give such directions to the adjutant-generals of the militia as may in his opinion be necessary to produce uniformity in such returns."

Mr. LANE. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. CUTTING], be allowed ten minutes to explain the provisions of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from California ten minutes for debate? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. Chairman, there appears to be a grave misunderstanding on the part of some of the members of this House as to the objects of this bill.

That it tends to nationalize the militia forces of the several States I deny, and challenge any member to point out a single section in the bill pointing in that direction beyond that provided for in existing law. What it does accomplish is this: It codifies the militia law, repeals or amends all provisions of the law of 1792 that have become impracticable and obsolete, and substitutes therefor provisions in harmony with the existing conditions of the militia laws of the respective States and Territories as they stand to-day.

Some objections have been made to calling the active militia the National Guard. To this I will say, the framer of the bill selected this name because there are thirty-three States and Territories that through their Legislatures adopted that name for their State troops. Among them can be found the States of Tennessee, Mississippi, Maryland, Missouri, Kansas, West Virginia, and nearly every Northern State. At the proper time, however, for the purpose of satisfying those members who object to the name National Guard, I am willing to substitute therefor the name State Guard.

Three points regarding the bill under consideration seem to me to commend this measure not only to the careful but favorable consideration of the members of this House: First, it is absolutely nonpartisan in its character; second, it is nonsectional in its operation; and, third, when so amended (as I shall move to amend when it is considered by sections), it will not call for the appropriation of one dollar additional to that now required under existing law.

It is sufficient to state that the object of the bill is to improve and perfect the general militia law of the country as it stands to-day, and to make it uniform in its application in every Commonwealth of the country. The necessity of something of the kind is evident to everyone who has ever given consideration to the law as it exists. I presume that a plain statement of that law would be listened to with surprise by those who have not made it a subject of study. I simply state a fact of record when I declare to you that it has been one hundred years the 8th of May last since any legislation has been had on the subject-matter of the militia forces of the United States. Surely in this intelligent body, when the mind looks back over the past and sees the mighty changes that have occurred in the world during that century of time, everyone will appreciate that there has of necessity been ample reason for the lawmaking power of the Government enacting changes in this direction.

The inventive genius of man applied to development of mechanics of every phase; the vast improvements in the appliances of warfare; the advancement of contention between nations from a mere matter of superior brute force to the exhibition and application of some of the highest phases of science, have revolutionized warfare and its modes and methods as almost everything else has been revolutionized with the advance of time and the progress of mankind during that century.

It is hard to restrain a smile when one turns over the pages and reads the cold requirements of the law as it stands to-day and as it has stood for a hundred years. Listen a moment to these requirements:

SEC. 1625. Every able-bodied male citizen of the respective States, resident therein, who is of the age of 18 years, and under the age of 45 years, shall be enrolled in the militia.

SEC. 1626. It shall be the duty of every captain or commanding officer of a company to enroll every such citizen residing within the bounds of his company, and all those who may, from time to time, arrive at the age of 18 years, or who, being of the age of 18 years and under the age of 45 years, come to reside within his bounds.

SEC. 1627. Each captain or commanding officer shall, without delay, notify every such citizen of his enrollment by a proper noncommissioned officer of his company, who may prove the notice. And any notice or warning to a citizen enrolled to attend a company, battalion, or regimental muster, which is according to the laws of the State in which it is given for that purpose, shall be deemed a legal notice of his enrollment.

SEC. 1628. Every citizen shall, after notice of his enrollment, be constantly provided with a good musket or firelock, of a bore sufficient for balls of the eighteenth part of a pound, a sufficient bayonet and belt, two spare flints and a knapsack, a pouch with a box therein to contain not less than twenty-four cartridges, suited to the bore of his musket or firelock, each cartridge to contain a proper quantity of powder and ball; or with a good rifle, knapsack, or shot-pouch, and powderhorn, twenty balls suited to the bore of his rifle, and a quarter of a pound of powder, and shall appear so armed, accoutered, and provided when called out to exercise or into service, except that when called out on company days to exercise only he may appear without knapsack, and all arms, ammunition, and accouterments so provided and required shall be held exempted from all suits, distresses, executions, or sales for debt or for the payment of taxes. Each commissioned officer shall be armed with a sword or hanger and spontoon.

It is within the memory of every member of this honorable body that one of the most distinguished citizens this country ever produced, one of the most distinguished men the world ever saw, uttered the historic truth that the quickest way to secure the repeal or improvement of an unjust and ludicrous enactment of law was to cause its strict enforcement. No man within the sound of my voice to-day will doubt for one moment but had there been an honest effort to strictly enforce the grotesque provisions of this law they would have long since have been stricken from the statute books of the nation.

It is with considerable diffidence that I approach the consideration of this matter and bring the necessities of the case to your attention; but it certainly is work that someone should undertake. A reform is needed and it is necessary for someone to point out the way. I claim certainly no superior ability, but the lines of my life for many years have brought me in active coöperation and earnest sympathy with that portion of our citizenship which is willing to give its time and its efforts during peace to the end that the citizenship of the country at large may know and feel that if sudden calamity or a whirlwind of passions in the minds of men should ever make an armed force immediately necessary to preserve the majesty of the law and render safe the common citizenship of all the land, that there are organized forces able and willing to stand by and uphold the executive power of either the State or nation and preserve order and respect for law at any cost.

The services heretofore rendered by the National Guard to the States and nation is of incalculable value, as will be seen in an appendix to my printed remarks which I submit, being a portion of my report from the Committee on the Militia to the present Congress.

These men, in whatever State in the Union they may organize, have a right to expect from the people and the lawmaking power of the Government such appreciation of their spirit of self-sacrifice and their efforts for the general good as will cause their endeavors to be most effective and to be of credit to the whole country.

Our people are a people of peace. The advantages of our location and the fact that domination of our continent is easily sustained, inculcates in our people a desire for peace and a natural distaste for needless war. And yet the generation living can witness the fact that when our people, North and South, believe that duty calls upon them to assume the character of soldiers no hardships are too onerous to be borne and no amount of bloodshedding can be in excess of what they are willing to endure. We admire the valor exhibited in the past; we deprecate and mourn the great number of useful lives lost in both sections of our country, and we thank God from the depths of our hearts that we stand once again in a united citizenship with a loyalty to a common flag.

We look ahead, and while it is not given to mortal mind to pierce the veil of the future, we are strong in our confidence that never again shall the crash of internecine warfare sound within the borders of the Republic; but if the time should ever come when our sons shall go to battle, it will be when the boys North and South are touching elbows, standing in one common line in joint defense of the majesty of the Republic.

It is most plainly our duty to so legislate that citizens who have an aptitude for the ways of military life, and who have the disposition to take such advantage of military culture in times of peace as will make them most effective material in time of strife, shall have their arms upheld and shall be so equipped as to make them of the most speedy availability and of the utmost efficiency in action.

Lest it should be thought that I am too emphatic in my statements for the necessity of the change in the law, let me state, without going into detail, that every President from George Washington to the present occupant of the Executive chair has, either personally or through his Secretary of War, urged that its defects be remedied; yet no change has been made during all these years. Our people are a law-abiding people. More of them violate the law through ignorance than through design. In no respect are the laws of the United States more generally disregarded by the enforcing power than those bearing upon the militia. It is entirely within bounds to state that ninety-nine out of every one hundred of the male population of the United States between the ages of 18 and 45 are never called upon to sustain the provisions of the existing law.

In 1808 a law was enacted providiing for an annual appropriation of $200,000 for the maintenance of the militia. That continued until 1887, when the law was amended increasing the annual appropriation to $400,000. The sum thus fixed in the act of 1887, has remained the standard annual appropriation to this date. It was my intention at first to ask this House to vote an increase of $200,000, which would have made an annual appropriation of $600,000; and the bill, as it stands before you at present, does so provide.

I am frank to say that, in my opinion, the importance of this subject, considering the immensity not only in area but in population, wealth, and all other respects of this Republic, that a million dollars a year would be a sum not at all in excess of the needs and requirements of the measure under discussion. But I realize that the spirit of the hour is against increased appropriations, and I have reluctantly submitted to that sentiment, and have agreed to consent, when we reach the appropriating section, to provide simply for a continuance of an annual appropriation of $400,000.

It is a popular delusion among many who have but a superficial knowledge of this matter that the money which is annually appropriated by the United States for arming and equipping the militia is given to the militia. The law states that this money is appropriated for the purpose of providing arms, etc.; that is to say, the United States appropriates this money, and with it buys or manufactures war material; which war material, instead of being placed in storehouses, is turned over to the National Guard of the States and Territories; and while some of it is of course worn out in the drilling and disciplining of this reserve of volunteers, all of it that is serviceable, to quote the language of the law, "shall remain the property of the United States," and, in the event of need, can be and will be utilized by the United States in arming and equipping its troops. The money thus appropriated should therefore be looked upon not only as money expended for the benefit of the militia, but as funds provided for the very necessary purpose of preparing a reserve stock of war material for use by the General Government in emergencies.

In asking for a favorable consideration of this bill, it is also proper that I should call your attention to the fact that section 17 of the militia bill provides that any State or Territory may purchase at cost for the use of its National Guard stores and and supplies from any department of the Army in addition to those issued under the provisions of this act. And, furthermore, I desire to emphasize the fact that there is nothing whatever in this measure which, in the slightest degree, interferes with the autonomy of the States or which tends to place the State forces under the control of the General Government, except wherein such control is specifically and pronouncedly provided for in existing law.

It is an old axiom, and as true as it is old, that in contention a blow quickly dealt is of double force. History shows that in the past one hundred and ninety-two years, from 1700 to date, inclusive, less than ten instances have occurred in which declarations of war have preceded hostilities. On the other hand, one hundred and seven cases are recorded in which hostilities have been commenced by the various powers of Europe or by the United States of America without previous declarations of war, as shown in my report from the Committee on the Militia to this Congress during the first session, as follows:

HISTORICAL EXTRACTS SHOWING WHERE HOSTILITIES BEGAN WITHOUT DECLARATIONS OF WAR.

The year 1700 opened with profound peace, yet on March 12, without public declaration of war, 40,000 Saxons under Gen. Fleming swept down before Riga, then belonging to Sweden.

In the month of December, 1700, French troops arrived by night and took possession of the strongest places in Spanish Flanders.

On July 28, 1701, Marshal Catinat with a French corps d'armée took possession of the Alpine passes and descended into Lombardy.

During the early part of the winter of 1701 Prince Eugene seized, without declaration of war, Canneto and other places in the territories of Guastalla, Parma, and Modena.

Throughout 1701 a naval war was carried on by England and Holland against France, but a formal declaration of war was not declared for several months after hostilities had been carried on.

In 1708 the Pope of Rome attacked by surprise a body of German imperial troops and ordered them cut to pieces with great barbarity; also,

In 1708, the English fleet suddenly appeared at Civita Vecchia and by surprise dictated terms to the Pope.

In 1714 the Turks by sudden invasion seized from Venice the Morea without declaration of war.

In 1715 England in peace seized Swedish provinces.

In August, 1717, during peace, a fleet of war vessels carrying 9,000 men left

Barcelona secretly for Sardinia. Cagliari, the capital, was surrendered to the Spaniards.

In 1719, Spain secretly prepared an expedition and seized Messina and the greater part of Sicily.

The first case in the eighteenth century when declaration preceded war was in 1719, when France and England joined in war against Spain.

In 1726, without declaration of war, a British squadron under Admiral Hosin was sent to the West Indies and blockaded Porto Bello.

In 1727, Spain, at peace with England, laid siege to Gibraltar from February 11 to November 23.

In 1733, Russia invaded Poland without a declaration of war.

In 1739, reprisals preceded war between Spain and England. War was declared by England October, 1739.

1740, the first Silesian war.

1741, naval fights between France and England without declaration of war.

1742, without declaration of war, Naples, by action of an English admiral, forced to become neutral.

On June 27, 1743, the battle of Dettingen was fought, at which time no declaration of war had been made, nor was it made until March 20, 1744, when France declared war against England.

On August 9, 1744, Saxony and Bohemia were invaded by Frederick without declaration of war.

In 1747, sudden invasion of Holland by the French, in which the French secured all the advantages of sudden attack.

In 1754, France and England put forth hostile claims in America without declaration of war or notice. Fighting commenced between English and Virginia troops on the one hand and French on the other.

On May 17, 1756, England declared war on France.

In August, 1756, Frederick the Great suddenly invaded Saxony with 75,000 men. He did not publish a declaration until after crossing the frontier.

In 1759 the Dutch commenced hostilities in India against the English without proclamation of war.

In June, 1770, 1,700 Spanish soldiers and mariners with five frigates and a train of artillery and ordnance stores arrived at Port Egmont, when only two sloops-of-war and a miserable blockhouse with four guns constituted all the means of defense. Articles of capitulation were immediately concluded.

In 1777, Austrian troops numbering many thousand entered Lower Bavaria and seized every important place, no declaration of war having been previously issued.

On February 6, 1778, France signed secretly a treaty with Franklin, engaging to give assistance to the American Colonies. France did not then declare war upon England.

In 1779 Spain joined France in a war against England.

On April 21, 1784, Austria sent a detachment of troops into Dutch territories and took possession of Fort Lillo.

On December 20, 1787, before the declaration of war was issued, Austria sent six regiments into Turkey for the purpose of surprising the Turkish fortress Belgrade. Declaration of war was not made until July 10, 1788.

In July, 1789, a Spanish frigate of twenty-six guns captured two English vessels and seized a settlement.

On April 20, 1792, France declared war against the Empire of Germany.

On September 28, 1792, the French Republic surprised Nice, Montalbon, and Ville Franche, in the Kingdom of Sardinia, during peace.

In the same year, without declaration of war, the French Republic ordered invasion of neutral Switzerland.

On July 1, 1793, France declared war upon England, Spain, and the Netherlands.

In 1795 England seized Dutch colonies, capturing the Island of Ceylon without fighting, no declaration of war having previously been made.

In 1796 the French republican army, without declaration of war, seized forts and territories of the States of the Church, Naples, Tuscany, Parma, Modena, etc.

On January 28, 1798, France suddenly invaded Switzerland. Naples moved against France, and France took possession of Navarra, Suza, and Coni. No declaration of war was made in any instance.

On September 5, 1800, Russia seized two British ships in Russian ports and sent their crews prisoners into the interior without declaration of war.

On July 14, 1801, reprisals were ordered by the English cabinet. All Swedish, Denmark, and Russian vessels in English ports were seized, and a large English fleet under Sir Hyde Parker was dispatched to the Baltic, although there was no declaration of war.

On March 20 the Swedish inland steamer Bartholomew, wholly unprepared for any defense, surrendered at the first summons to a force of three regiments of foot and a detachment of artillery under Lieut. Gen. Trigge and a squadron under Rear-Admiral Duckworth.

In 1802 Napoleon sent a force of 20,000 men into friendly Switzerland and seized by surprises Soleure, Zurich, and Berne.

On November 23, 1806, the Russian army, during negotiation and after full concessions, suddenly invaded Moldavia and seized Chotsim, Bender, and Jassi.

In 1806 England sent an expedition against Curaçoa; her fleet suddenly entered the harbor, and Fort Amsterdam was assaulted and captured.

On March 6, 1807, England sent an expedition, during negotiations, into Egypt, and on the 21st of March the governor of Alexandria accepted terms of capitulation.

In 1807 the English man-of-war Leopard, 52 guns, demanded of the Chesapeake, an American frigate cruising off Virginia, the requisition of some English deserters on board the Chesapeake. The American captain denied the right of search, whereupon the Leopard fired a broadside, killing and wounding several Americans in time of peace.

In 1812 Napoleon, by sudden attack on troops of Kowno, declared war with Russia.

On June 18, 1812, the United States declared war against Great Britain. During the month of April previous, however, a general embargo was laid by Congress upon all vessels in the harbors of the United States for seventy days.

In 1815 Murat, King of Naples, attacked Austria without notice.

In 1816 Portugal invaded the Spanish possessions on the River Plate without explanation or previous declaration.

In 1818 the United States, during peace with Spain, seized Pensacola and St. Marks.

In 1821 the United States seized a French ship during time of peace.

In 1826 the King of Spain carried on hostilities against Portugal with willful falsehood, without declaring war, but professing friendship.

During the same year England, without declaration of war on Spain, dispatched troops to fight the Spaniards.

In 1827 the Turkish fleet was destroyed by Russia, England, and France without warning of war.

In 1828 the Russo-Turkish war occurred. Hostilities on both sides preceded declaration of war.

In the same year France sent an expedition against the Turks in Greece and captured five fortresses.

In 1831, without declaration of war, Russia fired into, sank, and captured Greek ships and joined in a formal attack upon Poros.

During this same year a French admiral carried off the whole Portuguese fleet and converted reprisals into war. And the King of Holland pressed his troops into Belgium and in nine days crushed the Belgian forces.

On February 22, 1832, France sent a squadron with troops and captured Ancona by sudden surprise during absolute peace between France and Rome.

In 1834 the Spanish army, without notice, crossed the Portuguese frontier and, by a forced march, surprised and defeated the force under Don Carlos.

In 1835 the inhabitants of Texas raised the standard of revolt against the Mexican Government and declared themselves independent.

During the year 1838 an invasion of Canada took place under circumstances described in the United States Congress as such "that the people were at war while their Governments were at peace."

On the 17th of April, 1840, the British ships of war in the vicinity of Naples commenced hostilities and captured a number of Neapolitan vessels, and an embargo was laid on all ports of Malta that bore the Sicilian flag.

In 1844 hostilities by France against Morocco commenced by Prince de Joinville on not receiving a satisfactory answer to an ultimatum.

On May 13, 1846, the Congress of the United States passed a resolution that, by virtue of the constitutional authority vested in them, declared that a state of war existed between the Republic of Mexico and the United States. The President in his message recited many and various acts of hostility prior to any declaration of war.

In 1847 a revolutionary junta had been established in Portugal and was carrying on a war against the Queen. The war having dragged on for some time, England, France, and Spain agreed to interfere, but no declaration of war was made.

In 1848 the Italian insurrectionary war broke out; the King of Piedmont at once joined his armies to those of the Italians, and the war from its nature, was carried on without any formal notice.

On April 25, 1849, the French General Oudinot entered citadel Civitá Vecchia. The Roman Assembly protested in the name of God and the people against this unexpected invasion. A short time after there followed the seige and capture of Rome.

In 1850 and 1851 the United States waged the "unofficial" war against Cuba.

In 1853 and 1854 the Crimean war was waged. Hostilities preceded war as follows: The Russian Government seized the Danubian Principalities.

On May 31 the order for the passage of the Pruth was passed.

On June 2, before it was known in London, orders were sent to English and French admirals to move up the Besike Bay.

On October 22 the English and French fleet, under orders from London and Paris, entered the Dardanelles in express breach of treaty of 1841.

On October 23 Turkey declared war upon Russia and crossed the Danube to expel the Russians.

In 1859, France and Italy against Austria. The Austrian Government alleged that the actual commencement of this war was on both sides (as between France and Austria) declared to be due to prior hostile acts, not words.

On May 5, 1860, Garabaldi sailed from Genoa with 2,000 troops to wrest Sicily from the King of Naples.

In 1863 war between Austria and Prussia on one side and Denmark on the other virtually commenced by the occupation of Holstein and Lauenburg by the troops of the two great powers.

In 1870, in the war between France and Germany, the declaration clearly preceded the war.

This statement shows how all-important the element of time is in this matter. I quote from a lecture delivered by Capt. D. M. Taylor, of the Ordnance Department of the United States Army, at San Francisco, in 1885:

With the introduction of steam, electricity, and arms of precision, the "pomp and circumstance of glorious war" went out, and with them departed the dignified slowness which characterized military operations of the period when combatants took their time about wars, and their duration was from seven to thirty years. Modern wars are short and sharp. In this connection the following dates are instructive:

Year.	War.	Declared.	Decisive battle.	Days.
1859..	France and Austria	May 3	Solferino, June 24	52
1864..	Dano-German	Jan. 16	Fall of Duppel, Apr. 18	93
1866..	Austro-Prussian	June 16	Sadowa, July 3	17
1866..	Austro-Italian	June 20	Lissa, July 20	30
1870..	Franco-German	July 15	Sedan, Sept. 2	49

So in many instances we see that decisive battles have been fought in fewer days from the declaration of war than is needed in shipbuilding England to prepare the plans and let the bids for one class of unarmored vessels.

As a matter of economical administration of the funds of the people this subject demands your favorable consideration. Nothing has developed since the beginning of time which is so utterly extravagant in expenditure as war. The history of the nations of the earth teaches us that the surest way for a nation to command peace is to be able, in the shortest possible space of time, to wage successful battle.

To maintain to-day a regular force of a little less than 25,000 men this Government expends about $25,000,000 per annum, while a force of 150,000 volunteers could be maintained by the General Government, with the aid now rendered by the States, for less than a million dollars.

I invite your attention to the desirability of proceeding on the lines laid down in the bill under consideration on a broader field than the one of mere desirable superiority in physical strife, and on that line I positively assert, and point, irrespective of locality, all over this land to the established citizen soldiery of to-day as proof of my assertion that the dicipline of military life which they illustrate produces better citizens and men more forceful in all avenues of citizenship. It develops patriotism; it inculcates love of home and country; it keeps the country's flag in the hearts of Americans.

Two things are the natural attributes of the true citizen soldier.

First, he learns prompt obedience to all orders from superiors; second, every officer naturally exercises such gentlemanly consideration for those who are under his command as is compatible with discipline. Some think that membership in the National Guard, a prompt performance of the duties attending membership, and a strict observance of all rules of military etiquette, involves a surrender of manhood to a greater or less extent. This is not true, and I claim that the citizen soldier stands on a higher plane than the mere citizen, and on a still higher plane than the famed knights of old, whose deeds have been the theme of innumerable song. The latter held themselves the special champions of fair damsels in distress, but the citizen-soldier knights of to-day, who compose the National Guard of our States, are protectors of all that is dearest to us, and I do not doubt, should the opportunity offer, they would have both the disposition and the capacity to show that they could have met the knights of old on their own field and vanquished them in deeds of valor and chivalry.

I consider that it is entirely unnecessary for me to argue that discipline means approximate perfection; of that I am sure you are all convinced. A body of some hundreds of thousands of men well drilled, thoroughly disciplined, and acting as one, holding themselves absolutely at the command of a responsible and competent head, becomes of ten times the force and power it would exert if acting upon individual responsibility. It becomes a thunderbolt, terrible in its power. Were it not for the intelligence, patriotism, and purity of motive which directs that power for purposes of public and private good, this power could not easily be controlled.

I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that the men who in the ranks of our citizen soldiery are alert to perceive and quick to perform the duty assigned them, who, in other words, are well disciplined, are more valuable men in all their relations of life by reason of that discipline. Through this discipline they come to consider and appreciate more than they otherwise would the force and value of deliberately ordered and promptly executed action. I assert that a military training to-day is a valuable adjunct to everyday life, and that every man who is a good soldier is, perforce, a more valuable citizen.

Prosperity makes us slow to see the necessity to protect the gains we have made. Peace and plenty, as with the old Romans, emasculate a soldiery at one time inured to hardship, but glutted by the luxury of conquest. It is when the home is invaded, rights—which are never too stable—are infringed, prosperity endangered, religion, political rights, personal freedom, or the dignity of our land is in peril, that we need these men, who in peace are always willing to use the pen but never willing to admit that it is not sometimes mightier than the sword. Our citizen soldiers ask no remuneration for their services, no reward for what to them is a simple patriotic duty. No one ever heard them ask anything of their country I demand simple homely justice, the passage of the bill which will provide for the necessities and requirements of the National Guard of this United States.

APPENDIX B.

REPORTS RECEIVED FROM THE ADJUTANTS-GENERAL, SHOWING THE NUMBER OF TROOPS FURNISHED THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT BY THEIR RESPECTIVE STATES DURING THE WAR OF THE REBELLION FROM THEIR ORGANIZED MILITIA.

MAINE.

The First, Second, Third, Fourth, and Sixth Regiments of Infantry, Maine Volunteers, were recruited almost wholly from the State militia.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The following-named militia companies were mustered into the United States service for garrison duty at Portsmouth, N. H.:

Strafford Guards, Capt. I. B. Littlefield, were mustered in May 5, 1864, for sixty days, 83 men and officers.

National Guards, Capt. J. O. Chandler, were mustered in May 9, 1864, for sixty days, 84 men and officers.

Lafayette Artillery, Capt. J. H. Tarbell, were mustered in August 1, 1864, for ninety days, 84 men and officers.

Martin Guards, Capt. George E. Houghton, were mustered in July 25, 1864, for ninety days, 83 men and officers. The Martin Guards were discharged September 16, 1864, and 54 of the officers and men were immediately mustered in again and with recruits formed Company K, First New Hampshire Heavy Artillery.

Many of the militia companies undoubtedly formed the nucleus of companies which were mustered into the United States service, but unfortunately the records were not well preserved.

VERMONT.

When the war of the rebellion broke out it found the State of Vermont with a volunteer militia organization of four regiments (principally on paper), with from four to eight companies in each battalion.

There was a meeting called of all the officers by the adjutant-general of Vermont, who in conference with the brigade commander, selected ten companies from the above organizations to be known as the First Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, which volunteered for three months under President Lincoln's call for 75,000 troops. The designated companies began at once to enlist recruits and discharge such men as were unwilling or unable to leave home, and in a few days they were each filled to the requisite number of 81 officers and men.

On the 27th of April, 1861, the adjutant-general of Vermont issued an order designating the ten companies above named as the First Regiment, with instructions to hold themselves in readiness to march to the place of rendezvous on twenty-four hours' notice. This was soon followed by an order directing the companies to report at Rutland on the 2d of May following. The first man to offer his services to the Government was the colonel of the Fourth Regiment Vermont Militia, who afterwards became Bvt. Maj.-Gen. George Jerrison Stannard, of St. Albans, Vt. He did this on the 15th of April, 1861, immediately on hearing the report of the fall of Fort Sumter.

Many of the officers and men of the Vermont militia enlisted and served throughout the war with credit to the country and themselves. If it had not been for this militia organization it would have been hard for Vermont to furnish the quotas called for as rapidly as she did.

A national guard of well-disciplined and organized men should be maintained throughout all the States, and in which the Government should be thoroughly interested.

MASSACHUSETTS.

The following is the list of organized, uniformed, drilled, and equipped militia of the State of Massachusetts that did not wait to be called, but were in readiness when the call came and responded at once by regiments. Many of the companies composing that militia had been in the State service constantly since the close of the war of the Revolution, and some still remain in the State service, with an unbroken record of over a hundred years, ready now to respond to any call. The statement given does not even show the great service rendered by the State militia during the war of the rebellion. Many of these organizations by regiments rendered two and three terms of service, besides forming regiments for three years. Many of the oldest companies entered at once for three years, and upon return from the service after the war resumed their place in the militia of the State and now continue to exist, more efficient than ever, and ready for duty.

Organizations of the active militia prior to the breaking out of the rebellion who were mustered into the United States service during the war.

Grand total..... 38,028

Sixty-four regiments, one battalion, five companies.

In 1861, volunteers for three-years service were mustered in and left the State, the Second, Ninth, Fourteenth, Fifty-fifth, Seventy-ninth, and Twentieth Regiments of militia serving as the Eighty-second, Eighty-third, Eighty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, Seventy-ninth, and Eightieth New York Volunteers, respectively, six regiments.

NEW JERSEY.

The greater part of the four regiments composing the three-months volunteer militia were either militia organizations or the nucleus thereof. Very many of the companies that entered the three-years service in the early regiments were militia organizations.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Under the forms adopted during the late rebellion, the organized militia of this State went into the United States service as volunteers, and were numbered as volunteer regiments, and not as militia. The members of the militia companies and regiments in many cases volunteered in a body, so much so that all the militia of the State practically ceased to exist, owing to the members thereof being in the United States service.

OHIO.

In 1861 the National Guard of Ohio was not very efficient, but still they furnished some troops in the first three-months call in April, 1861, in all ten or twelve companies. They were among the first to offer their services, and many of them took part in the campaign of 1861, in Virginia, and participated in the first Bull Run fight.

There were also several two-gun batteries that went into the service and served in Virginia during the early part of the war; and one battery in particular was present and took part in the fight at Philippi, Va.

In the year of 1863 the National Guard of Ohio was organized under a new law, and in the summer of 1864 forty-three regiments, from the One hundred and thirtieth to the One hundred and seventy-third, inclusive, were mustered into the United States service and served for one hundred days.

In addition to this, during the summer of 1863, the militia rendered efficient service in what is known as the "Morgan raid" through Ohio, as hundreds of them were called into service at that date.

MICHIGAN.

It appears from the records and papers of the adjutant-general's office that the First (three-months) Regiment Michigan Infantry was composed of companies accepted from the State militia, and was the first regiment, fully armed and equipped, in uniform, to reach Washington from west of the Alleghanies.

It is true that a large proportion, perhaps a majority, of the men of this regiment, were recruits, but the fact remains that the several companies of this regiment offered their services as organizations, and that they were armed, uniformed, and drilled.

It is found by the report of the adjutant-general of this State, dated December 1, 1860, that there were twenty-eight companies of organized State troops armed with muskets, eight of these companies being also supplied with one piece of light artillery. It is a matter of record that each of these organizations offered their services, were accepted and mustered as rapidly as possible, although in most companies but few of the actual active members enlisted, the organizations being filled up with volunteers.

INDIANA.

In 1861 there was no law in this State providing for organization of a national guard, there being no statute except an obsolete law. There existed in the State in 1861 a number of uniformed companies, though without any special State recognition; of these the following-named companies, almost in a body, went into the service of the United States, to wit:

Indianapolis City Grays, Company A, Eleventh Indiana, Capt. (afterwards Maj. Gen.) R. S. Foster.

Fahnestalk Zouaves, Indianapolis, Company B, Eleventh Indiana.

Fort Harrison Guards, Company C, Eleventh Indiana, Terre Haute, Ind.

Vigo Guards, Terre Haute, Company D, Eleventh Indiana.

Indianapolis Zouaves, Capt. De Witt C. Rugg and Lieut. Dan McAuley, afterwards colonel Eleventh Indiana and brevet brigadier-general.

Company H, Eleventh Indiana, Capt. Fred Kneffler, afterwards Gen. Fred Kneffler, was organized from men left out of the other Indianapolis companies by reason of cutting down the strength of organizations after going into camp.

Montgomery Guards, Capt. Lew Wallace, afterwards Maj. Gen. Lew Wallace. Company I, Eleventh Indiana.

Indianapolis National Guards, Capt. George F. McGinnis, afterwards Brig. Gen. McGinnis, Company K, Eleventh Indiana.

Company G of the Eleventh was organized, I believe, from a small company at Ladoga and filled up by the overflow from Capt. Lew Wallace's company.

These companies went into the service with their officers before the President's proclamation, and took with them the larger majority of their members, though of course all the companies received some recruits.

The above-named companies, after the three months' service, furnished about 300 officers for their Indiana regiments.

ILLINOIS.

On the evening of April 15, 1861, the following dispatch was received:

WASHINGTON, April 15, 1861.

His Excellency RICHARD YATES:

Call made on you, by to-night's mail, for six regiments of militia, for immediate service.

SIMON CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

The great but humiliating event which immediately preceded this dispatch was the fall of Sumter, at noon, on the 13th of that month, on which day, for the first time since the organization of our Government, our national ensign was struck by traitors. The event and dispatch found our Government unprepared for war. Although secession ordinances had before then been passed by Southern States—although public property had been seized, in violation of law, and strange colors displayed over our Southern forts—although food and reënforcements for a beleaguered garrison had been driven back to sea, in January—yet our people could not easily realize that we were indeed in a state of civil war.

On the same day, April 15, 1861, a proclamation was issued by the governor convening the Legislature on the 23d, and the subjects named for its consideration were, as follows: "The more perfect organization and equipment of the militia of the State and placing the same upon a war footing, and to render efficient assistance to the General Government in preserving the Union, enforcing the laws, and protecting the property and rights of the people. And also to raise such money or other means as may be required to carry out the foregoing objects; and also to provide for the expenses of such session." Orders were issued for the immediate organization of six regiments, which were equipped and mustered into the United States service.

The following equipped organizations were immediately mustered into the United States service:

Brig. Gen. Swift and staff	14
Chicago Light Artillery, Capt Smith	150
Ottawa Light Artillery, Capt. Houghtaling	86
Lockport Light Artillery, Capt. Hawley	52
Plainfield Light Artillery, Capt. McAllister	72
Company A, Chicago Zouaves, Capt. Hayden	89
Company B, Chicago Zouaves, Capt. Clyborne	83
Capt. Harding's company	80
Turner Union Cadets, Capt. Kowald	79
Lincoln Rifles, Capt. Mihalotzy	66
Sandwich Company, Capt. Carr	102
Drum Corps	17
Total	908

Capt. Campbell's Ottawa Independent Artillery, with about 20 men and two 6-pounder cannon, joined the force about the 28th of April.

KENTUCKY.

The "Kentucky State troops proper" were never mustered into the service of the United States. They were, however, placed at the disposal of the Federal commander of the United States forces in Kentucky at that time, and for their actual service under him were paid by the State, the latter being reimbursed by the United States.

KANSAS.

Kansas not only furnished in volunteers for the United States Army during the war almost double her quota of men, but maintained a large and efficient militia, organized into companies and regiments, and that in response to a call upon Governor Thomas Carney by Maj. Gen. Curtis of the United States Army, then commanding this department, twenty-four regiments of Kansas State militia, numbering 13,000 men, were ordered into the field, and, under command of Gen. Deitzler, aided in driving Gen. Price and his army out of Missouri. This valuable service was recognized by the General Government and paid for out of the United States Treasury.

Though the above-mentioned service was the most important rendered the militia was several times called out to meet a foreign foe, as in the case of Quantrill when he destroyed the city of Lawrence.

MISSOURI.

There were practically no "militia" organizations in this State in 1861. What few there were were in St. Louis, and were captured and paroled by Gen. Lyon, May 10, 1861. A number of these men went into the Union Army afterward, and others went into the Confederate service. During the late flurry with Chile every organization in this State tendered their services as organizations, and could have gone to the front with full ranks within ten days.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the time of Mr. CUTTING was extended on request of Mr. LANE.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent now that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] be allowed ten minutes to reply.

There was no objection.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, if the view of the gentleman from California [Mr. CUTTING] were correct, there could be no objection to the passage of this bill. But I submit to the committee that the view he entertains is not correct; and I submit further that this bill reorganizes our militia simply on the national plan.

Now, to show what has been done let us see what was intended to be done. The committee in its report—as gentlemen will ascertain if they turn to Appendix L, on page 32 of the report—publishes a communication from the Adjutant-General of the Army, Gen. Kelton, and that communication is made by the committee a part of its report and made an exhibit as to the purposes of the bill. Let us see now what is disclosed in this communication as to the purpose aimed at. The Adjutant-General says this:

To legalize the National Guard and bring it under the control of the General Government can be accomplished only by and through a mutual agreement between the National Guard on the one hand and the General Government on the other. This bill is the proposed mutual agreement.

Now, if anything could be stronger than that language——

Mr. CUTTING. That is simply the opinion of Gen. Kelton.

Mr. WATSON. That is true; but he says this bill is for the purpose of carrying out that idea, and I submit that it does carry it out fully. It was put in for the purpose of carrying out the idea; and the gentleman from California in framing the bill has done precisely what he was expected to do, or otherwise he would not have the support of those gentlemen who are frankly disclosing their purposes through the medium of this communication of the Adjutant-General.

Mr. CUTTING. Will the gentlemen allow me a moment?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly, if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. CUTTING. The report of Adjutant-General Kelton is a report that was made to the Fifty-first Congress——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. WATSON. I can not yield to the gentleman for an argument. I am perfectly willing to yield for a question, as a matter of course. But his reply is in the nature of an argument, and the gentleman will surely have an opportunity in his own time.

Mr. CUTTING. Very well; I have said about all I desire to say.

Mr. WATSON. That, Mr. Chairman, is the first point. Now let us examine this communication of the Adjutant-General a little further. He says:

Our 100,000 patriotic National Guard protectors are obliged to ask our citizens and State Legislatures for $2,000,000 each year to maintain them as military organizations. The $400,000 the General Government appropriates for their equipment, less than $4 for each man, not being sufficient to buy enough ammunition to make them good shots.

Mr. LANE. Will the gentleman yield now for a motion that the committee rise?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7318 had come to no resolution thereon.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR KENNA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it is the desire of those in charge of the funeral of the late Senator Kenna that the services shall begin in the Senate Chamber promptly at 1 o'clock. The order adopted by the House provides that this body shall leave its Chamber at five minutes before that time, but if there is no objection that order will be so modified as that we now proceed to the Senate Chamber to attend the funeral, the Chair being informed that the Senate is ready to receive us. Without objection, the House will at once proceed to the Senate Chamber.

There being no objection, the House (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.), preceded by its Speaker, Sergeant-at-Arms, and other officers, left its Hall and proceeded in a body to the Senate Chamber.

At 1 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m. the House returned to its Hall, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. BOATNER from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the bill (S. 3537) for the relief of M. P. Deady; which was delivered to the Clerk, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 13, 1893.

Prayer by Rev. W. WALLACE ATTERBURY, D. D., of New York City.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 3, 1887, certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the States of New York and South Carolina, at the elections held therein on the 8th of November, 1892, as certified to him by the governors of those States; which were ordered to lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the purchase of a site for an appraiser's warehouse and custom-house in the city of New York, under the act of September 14, 1888, and acts amendatory thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. WHITE presented the credentials of Donelson Caffery, appointed by the governor of the State of Louisiana a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. Randall L. Gibson; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Minneapolis, Minn., praying that the continued purchase of silver under the act of 1890 be repealed, since it "is a serious source of disturbance to our industrial interests and a menace to our sound financial standing;" which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Federation of Labor of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of legislation prohibiting foreign immigration for the next five years; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Georgia State Sunday School Association, of Savannah, Ga., praying for the passage of legislation prohibiting the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of B. L. Sutton and 16 other citizens of Adams County, Wash., praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Democratic and Republican Territorial central committees in joint session held in Phœnix, Ariz., January 3, 1893, urging upon Congress the immediate admission of Arizona Territory as a State; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. DAWES presented memorials of the Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church of Wilbraham; of the First Congregational Church of Wilbraham, and of the Worcester (South) Massachusetts Association of Ministers, all in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the repeal of the act closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PEFFER. I present a petition numerously signed by citizens of Kansas, without naming the locality, stating that the device now in general use on the exchanges and boards of trade, known as selling short, enabling speculators to offer for sale quantities of grain and other farm products many hundred-fold in excess of the amount of such articles which are actually produced, has become so oppressive upon the producers, that they feel it their duty to call upon their Senators for the passage of the Hatch antioption bill as it passed the House of Representatives at its last session, and that they will feel grateful to their national lawmakers for the relief from such burdens. As the bill is now under consideration in the Senate, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PEFFER presented a memorial of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, No. 35, and of the American Brotherhood of Steamboat Pilots, Harbor No. 15, of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the passage of legislation granting American registry and license to alien officers heretofore employed on the steamships City of New York and City of Paris; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a series of resolutions passed by the Board of Trade of Manchester, N. H., setting forth that whereas many billions of dollars have been expended for aqueducts, waterworks, sewers, telegraph lines, electric lights, and railways, and many hundred millions of dollars of the issues of securities for those purposes are held by the people of Europe who make gold a legal tender, and they have shown by a continued selling of our securities (thereby steadily diminishing our supply of gold) that they fear by a continued issue of silver certificates by our Government that the principal and interest of the securities held by them may be paid in a silver dollar of some 68 cents in value, they therefore resolve that they believe it for the interest of our people to suspend the issue of our currency based upon silver bullion or coin so as to restore confidence in our ability and intention to pay our securities in full valued dollars, and that they are in favor of the repeal of the Sherman act and opposed to the further coinage of silver dollars until the hundreds of millions now in the United States Treasury are used or placed in circulation.

I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented memorials of W. M. Butler and other citizens of Martin, Mich.; of George H. French and other citizens of Homer, Mich.; of the Sunday School Association of Savannah, Ga.; of Mrs. Helen M. Thomas and other citizens of Albion, Mich., and of Rev. S. M. Welch and other citizens of Lakeview, Mich., remonstrating against the repeal of the present law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a memorial of the Engineers' Beneficial Association of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the passage of legislation granting American registry and license to alien officers heretofore employed on the steamships City of New York and City of Paris; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Detroit, Mich., praying for the immediate completion by the Government of the Nicaragua Canal; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Maine State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill and the pure-food bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON presented memorials of the Congregational Church of Atlantic; of the United Presbyterian Church and the Young People's Christian Union of Birmingham; of the pastors of the United Presbyterian, Baptist, and Methodist Episcopal churches of Goldfield; of the Plymouth Presbyterian Church of Akron; of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Akron, and of the Presbyterian churches of Laurel and Mariposa, all in the State of Iowa, remonstrating against any repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the Ministerial Association of Lisbon, Iowa, praying for the passage of legislation restricting immigration; for the submission of an amendment to the Constitution forbidding the States legislating for a union of church and state; that the sale of liquors be prohibited on the grounds of the World's Columbian Exposition, and remonstrating against any repeal of the law closing the Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. SHERMAN presented memorials of a union meeting of representatives of the Methodist, Protestant, and other churches of Richwood; of 31 citizens of Jamestown; of 17 Protestant churches of Toledo; of R. B. Reppard and other members of the Georgia State Sunday School Association; of 7 citizens of Knoxville; of 10 citizens of McConnelsville; of a union meeting of the First Reformed and United Presbyterian churches of Cincinnati; of the Christian Endeavor Union of Belle Center; of the First United Presbyterian Church of Bellefontaine; of the First Presbyterian Church of London; and a memorial of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Springdale; all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against a repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Democratic and Republican Territorial central committees, of Phœnix, Arizona Territory, urging the admission of Arizona Territory into the Union as a State; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of the Monroeville (Ohio) Farmers' Institute Society, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 62 citizens of Fitchville, Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation suspending immigration for one year, and also for the appointment of a commission to investigate foreign immigration into the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR presented memorials of the Brookfield Association of Congregational Ministers, of Worcester, Mass.; of the congregations of all the churches of New Mayville, Pa.; of the Methodist Episcopal Church of East Bridgewater, Mass.; of the members of the Congregational and Methodist Episcopal churches of Auburndale, Mass.; of the Congregational churches of Worcester, Mass., and of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Wilbraham, Mass., remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the Merchant Tailors' Exchange, of Worcester, Mass., praying for the passage of House bill 8535, limiting the free entry of wearing apparel of foreign manufacture; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the First Congregational Church of Wilbraham, Mass., remonstrating against the sale of intoxicating liquors on the grounds of the World's Columbian Exposition; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of merchants of Salem, Mass., praying for the passage of legislation repealing the law for the purchase of silver bullion, commonly known as the Sherman act; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce, of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the repeal of the Sherman act of 1890; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of the faculty and students of Westminister College of New Wilmington; of Oak Grove United Presbyterian Congregation of Butler County; of the Presbyterian Congregation of Columbia; of William T. Johnson and other citizens of Wilkesbarre; of the Presbyterian Church of Edinburg; of Seacock Presbyterian Church of Paradise, and the First Baptist Church of York, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the repeal of the present law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the passage of legislation placing the quarantine of New York and other ports under national control; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the mayor and council of Oklahoma City, Okla., praying for the passage of legislation appropriating the Oklahoma military reservation to Oklahoma City for school purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. VILAS presented a memorial of the union meeting for national thanksgiving, held at Lodi, Wis., November 24, 1892, remonstrating against the repeal of the present law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday, and thanking Congress for its passage; which was referred to the Committe on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. VEST presented a memorial of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the passage of legislation providing for the purchase of the Cherokee Strip and the opening of the land to settlement; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL presented memorials of J. P. Fullerton, of Pleasant Hope; of Rev. A. L. Gridley, of Kidder; of Rev. R. W. Ely, of Neosho: of members of Benton family, of Lexington: of Rev. Frank Russell, of Center View; of Rev. J. N. Huggins, of Springfield; of Rev. Edgar A. Hamilton, of Springfield; of Rev. John F. Triplett, of Clayton; of M. Reed and other citizens of Center View, and of Rev. F. J. Leavitt, of Springfield, all in the State of Missouri, remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the passage of legislation providing for the purchase of the claim of the Cherokee Nation to the Cherokee Strip. This petition is similar to the one presented by my colleague [Mr. VEST]. I believe that the bill has already been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and is now upon the Calendar, and I hope that the Committee on Indian Affairs will press the consideration of the bill at no distant day.

Mr. DAWES. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that the bill in reference to the Cherokee Outlet is in charge of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and I know he and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] will engage the attention of the Senate upon the bill at the earliest possible moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will lie on the table.

Mr. WOLCOTT presented a petition of the Denver (Colo.) Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade, praying for a national quarantine system; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Denver (Colo.) Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade, praying for the passage of legislation encouraging an interchange of trade between the United States and foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Denver (Colo.) Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade, praying that the city of Denver, Colo., be selected as the headquarters of the Military Department of the West; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of J. W. McCullah and 19 other citizens of Delta County, Colo., praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain, and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill until such committee shall report; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Moore and 20 other citizens of East Fall River; of Frank Burleigh and 17 other citizens of Yankton County; of George Sawyer and 22 other citizens of Yankton County; of W. F. Shoop and 24 other citizens of Yankton County; of G. G. J. Peterson and 23 other citizens of Clay County, and of B. S. Pixley and 24 other citizens of Clay County, all in the State of South Dakota, praying for the appointment of a Senate committee to investigate the combine formed to depreciate the price of grain, and asking for the postponement of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill until such committee shall report; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WASHBURN presented a memorial of the Presbyterian Pastors' Association of Minneapolis, Minn., remonstrating against any repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a memorial of the Minneapolis (Minn.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against additional restrictions being placed upon the shipment of grain products to the northwest seacoast; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HILL presented a petition of business men and citizens of Albany, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the Sherman silver act; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of 121 members of the New York Cotton Exchange, praying for the repeal of the Sherman silver act; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HISCOCK presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, praying for the passage of legislation placing the quarantine at New York and all other places under national control; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of 121 members of the New York Cotton Exchange, praying for the repeal of the act of Congress known as the Sherman act; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Methodist Church of Ellington, N. Y., remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday, and praying that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the Merchant Tailors' Society of the City of New York, praying for the passage of House bill 8535, limiting the free entry of wearing apparel of foreign manufacture; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

FUR-SEAL FISHERIES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3629) to extend to the North Pacific Ocean the provisions of the statutes for the protection of fur seals and other fur-bearing animals, to report it without amendment. As this is a matter of considerable importance, I ask for the present consideration of the bill. In view of the meeting of the tribunal of arbitration to take place next summer in regard to the fisheries it is deemed necessary to have the bill passed, and I believe upon reading it there will be no objection to it. The bill is strongly recommended by the President of the United States and was prepared at the State Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks for the present consideration of the bill. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the Government of the United States shall conclude an effective international arrangement for the protection of fur seals in the North Pacific Ocean, by agreement with any power, or as a result of the decision of the tribunal of arbitration under the convention concluded between the United States and Great Britain February 29, 1892, and so long as such arrangement shall continue, the provisions of section 1956 of the Revised Statutes, and all other provisions of the statutes of the United States, so far as the same may be applicable, relative to the protection of fur seals and other fur-bearing animals within the limits of Alaska or in the waters thereof, shall be extended to and over all that portion of the Pacific Ocean included in such international arrangement. Whenever an effective international arrangement is concluded as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the President to declare that fact by proclamation, and to designate the portion of the Pacific Ocean to which it is applicable, and that this act has become operative; and likewise when such arrangement ceases, to declare that fact and that this act has become inoperative, and his proclamation with respect thereto shall be conclusive. During the extension as aforesaid of said laws for the protection of fur seals and other fur-bearing animals all violations thereof in said designated portion of the Pacific Ocean shall be held to be the same as if committed within the limits of Alaska or in the waters thereof, but they may be prosecuted either in the district court of Alaska or in any district court of the United States in California, Oregon, or Washington.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the bill read again. I do not know exactly what it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. In view of the meeting of the tribunal of arbitration, of which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is a member, it is deemed necessary to give the President of the United States certain power——

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, we can not hear anything going on in the way of an explanation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps the shortest statement that could be made of the matter would be to read the brief report which embodies the message of the President of the United States, but I will state the substance of it.

In view of any judgment that may be made by the tribunal of arbitration next summer in respect to the sea-island fisheries it will be necessary to arm the President of the United States with power to issue a proclamation to extend the present law, which applies only to Bering Sea, to the North Pacific Ocean. That is the judgment of all parties who know anything about the subject-matter. The bill simply gives the President of the United States the power to extend the provisions of existing law over the North Pacific, because the real trouble in the seal fisheries is in the North Pacific. The bill is recommended very clearly and forcibly in the message of the President of the United States, and was prepared by the Secretary of State. It has met with the approval of every member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the necessity for its passage now is apparent to everyone, because whatever judgment may be rendered, that instant it will necessarily involve the exercise of this power.

Mr. TELLER. I certainly do not desire to antagonize the bill when I understand it, because, as the chairman of the committee has stated, the trouble in the preservation of seals is not in Bering Sea, but in the North Pacific Ocean; and although we may succeed in the arbitration in having it determined that we can protect the seals in Bering Sea, they will be utterly destroyed if we do not extend some protection to the seals in the North Pacific Ocean.

Mr. FRYE. There is no objection to the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6969) for the relief of Elisha Brown, to report it favorably, without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. VEST. I object to the consideration of the bill until we finish the morning business. I do not know anything about the bill, but we should proceed with the routine business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the Senator from Missouri, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5705) to increase the pension of Amelia Graham, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7099) granting an increase of pension to Samuel S. Anderson, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8925) to increase the pension of Harvey Lyon, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 915) for relief of the heirs of Noah Noble, deceased, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2281) for the relief of Miss Jane Linn, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3691) regulating the employment of certain persons in manufactories, workshops, and stores in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3682) to narrow California avenue within Bellair Heights, District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the District appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL. For the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who is necessarily absent from the Senate, I report back with amendments from the Committee on Claims the bill (H. R 1036) for the benefit of Logan, Simpson, Hardin, and Hart Counties and of the city of Louisville, Ky., and of Sumner and Davidson Counties, Tenn., accompanied by a written report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 3195) granting to the Yuma Pumping Irrigation Company the right of way for two ditches across that part of the Yuma Indian Reservation lying in Arizona; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 113) providing for the printing of the Agricultural Report of 1892.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891.

The message further announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3591) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company of Virginia to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10015) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiawassee, the Tennessee, and the Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 118) for the relief of the estate of Isaac W. Talkington, deceased; and

A bill (S. 3623) to amend the act of March 3, 1873, for the relief of the Columbian University, in the District of Columbia.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3706) providing for a commission on the subject of the social vice; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3707) making an appropriation for establishing buoyage on the water front of Chicago, Lake Michigan, Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WOLCOTT introduced a bill (S. 3708) granting a pension to Helen L. Dent; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 3709) granting a pension to John E. Burnes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3710) to incorporate the Chesapeake and Washington Underground Electric Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BERRY. The junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT] was compelled to be absent this morning and requested me to introduce for him a bill and have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 3711) granting the right of way through the Arlington Reservation for railroad purposes, was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HILL introduced a bill (S. 3712) to grant the right of way for electric railroad purposes through certain lands of the United States in Richmond County, N. Y.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3713) to provide an American register for the steam yacht Golden Fleece; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 3714) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 3715) to authorize the appointment of an associate professor of mathematics at the Military Academy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MORRILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortification appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be printed and lie on the table, to be called up to-morrow.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce is instructed to inquire and report to the Senate the advantages, if any, that will accrue to the productions, industries, coastwise and foreign commerce, immigration, and other interests of the United States, by means of the additional facilities of transportation, and the reduction of the cost thereof that would be afforded by the building of a ship canal to connect the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans through Lake Nicaragua.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall call up the resolution to-morrow morning, and desire the opportunity to make a very few brief observations to the Senate upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Meanwhile the resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF SOUVENIR COINS.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the opinion of the law officer of the Government for his Department under which he is disbursing the $2,500,000 in souvenir coins in aid of the World's Columbian Exposition, appropriated by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1892, and conditioned upon Sunday closing; and also to transmit a copy of such regulations relative to the issuance and delivery of said coins as he may have established in pursuance of said opinion.

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia on the Senate resolution directing an investigation of the garbage question in the District of Columbia be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

COINAGE OF SILVER.

Mr. MORRILL. I was requested in a note from the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to ask that the joint resolution (S. R. 126) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend all purchases of silver bullion as provided in the act of July 14, 1890, be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be so referred if there be no objection.

Mr. STEWART. Is it proposed to call up the joint resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] moves that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL. I was requested by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to have it referred to that committee.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the joint resolution will not be referred. I know that several Senators wish to make some remarks upon it. I think after the Senator from New Jersey has made a speech on the joint resolution, and several Senators have signified their intention to reply to him, that to remove it from the Senate for the purpose of preventing a reply would not look well. I do not think the Senator from New Jersey would like to have that done.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think there is any such purpose on the part of the Senator from New Jersey. He desired to have the joint resolution before the committee previous to its next meeting, and I ask to have it so referred.

Mr. STEWART. I hope it will not be referred until Senators have had an opportunity to reply to the Senator from New Jersey. When such measures are retained for the purpose of debate, after a speech has been made on them it is usual to give an opportunity to reply before they are referred.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator will see that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is still before the Senate, and that brings up the whole subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. STEWART. I suppose that the question of reference is debatable?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. STEWART. Upon that question I should like to make a few remarks. This is the most serious proposition that has been presented——

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Nevada to yield. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont to withdraw the motion. He knows very well that the joint resolution can not be referred this morning if persisted in, and there is no reason why it should be referred. The speech of the Senator from New Jersey has been made, and it is no more than fair that before the joint resolution goes to the committee somebody on our side shall have a chance to reply to him. The Senator knows that Senators wish to reply, and I think he should not desire a reference.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not insist upon my motion. I merely made it at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Nevada will allow me a word, I will state that I myself do not see any special reason or any necessity for referring the joint resolution to the Committee on Finance before its next meeting. The Committee on Finance have three or four bills on the same subject-matter before them; but as the subject-matter will necessarily be considered by the Committee on Finance the Senator from New Jersey desired that his proposition should be considered at the same time. As a matter of course we would consider it anyway. It is a mere matter of form, and rather than now interject a debate upon the silver question inopportunely I hope that the request of the Senator from New Jersey will not be complied with.

Mr. HALE (to Mr. MORRILL). Withdraw the motion.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to withdrawing the motion.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the motion of the Senator from Vermont?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion has been withdrawn. The motion was that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR BARBOUR.

Mr. HUNTON. Upon consultation with my colleague [Mr. DANIEL] and at his request, I give notice that on Tuesday, the 24th instant, I shall ask the Senate to suspend its business in order that fitting tributes may be paid to the memory of my late predecessor in the Senate, Hon. John S. Barbour.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. PEFFER. I give notice that next Monday morning, as soon as the routine morning business is completed, I shall call up the joint resolution (S. R. 96) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to limit the office of President to one term for each incumbent, and that I shall ask the Senate at that time to indulge me while I submit a few remarks upon the joint resolution.

PRINTING OF QUARANTINE BILL.

Mr. HARRIS. There has been no print of Senate bill 2707, the quarantine bill as passed by the Senate, and as there are a great many demands for copies, I move that the bill be printed as it passed the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 10th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1831) to admit free of duty the wreckage of the ships Trenton and Vandalia, presented by the United States to the King of Samoa; and

An act (S. 3029) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River, in the State of Washington.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 11th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1786) granting a pension to Mrs. Jennie Gray;

An act (S. 2187) granting a pension to Margaret M. Rice; and

An act (S. 2593) granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Campbell.

The message further announced that the President of the United States had, on the 12th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 317) granting an increase of pension to John M. Roberts;

An act (S. 2592) granting an increase of pension to William C. Tarkington;

An act (S. 2990) for the relief of George W. McKinney;

An act (S. 3048) granting to the Blue Mountain Irrigation and Improvement Company a right of way for reservoirs and canals through the Umatilla Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon; and

An act (S. 3314) for the relief of E. Darwin Gage, late lieutenant-colonel of the One hundred and forty-eighth New York Infantry.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10015) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiawassee, the Tennessee, and the Clinch Rivers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 3591) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company of Virginia to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORT ON LABOR IN EUROPE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolutions of the Senate, dated December 20, 1892, and January 5, 1893, respectively, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State of the 10th instant, accompanying the reports of Mr. Walter T. Griffin, United States commercial agent at Limoges, France, and Mr. W. H. Edwards, United States consul-general at Berlin, Germany, which were called for by the aforesaid resolutions.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 11, 1893.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the message and accompanying papers be referred without printing to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there anything in the papers that ought not to be printed and made known to the public?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly not; but they are very bulky, and the committee propose to make a preliminary consideration of the question as to whether they shall be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. If they are so bulky as appears, it is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Immigration without printing.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BUREAU OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for your information a letter from the Secretary of State, inclosing the annual report of the Bureau of American Republics for the year ending June 30, 1892.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 13, 1893.

WASHINGTON FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of Order of Business No. 967 on the Calendar under Rule VIII. The reason for asking its consideration at this time (the bill being to establish a free public and departmental library and reading room in the District of Columbia) is that the library room is to be in the new post-office building, and it will be necessary for the architect of the building to make suitable preparations for its proper construction. The bill is accompanied by a short report, which explains its purport.

If the bill becomes a law no additional expense will be incurred by the Government of the United States except the expense of compensating two people to take charge of the books and the documents of the library, the books being those now received by the different Departments and surplus books in the hands of the Librarian of Congress. The Librarian of Congress strongly recommends the passage of the bill, which will relieve a great deal of the pressure now on the Congressional Library, and will get the books now in circulation in the different Departments altogether in one department. Each Department of the Government now has a library and reading room. These will be condensed into one library and one reading room.

While there is an appropriation for the compensation of two people to take care of the proposed library, yet the services of clerks in the different Departments, who now draw pay from the Government for taking care of the books of each Department, will be dispensed with; and upon the point of expenditure the Government will be the gainer. I ask that the report, which is very short, may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will first be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 1491) to establish a free public and departmental library and reading room.

Mr. MORRILL. I am cordially in favor of a free public library for the District of Columbia, but I can not quite agree with the propriety of emptying all the departmental libraries and pouring them into one spot alone. Take, for instance, the Treasury Department. There is in that Department a very considerable and valuable miscellaneous library, where the large number of clerks there employed can go, take their books as they go home at night, and, after they read them, bring them back in the morning without loss of time. If they have to go to another public institution it will be necessary for those clerks to make two journeys.

Then it seems to me that nearly all of the Departments will have to keep up a library in consequence of the public documents which they require for constant usage. Therefore, while I am in favor of a free library for the District, I do not see the entire propriety of emptying the libraries of the various Departments. I am very sure it will impose a burden upon the employés of those Departments and a very considerable loss of time. I hope, therefore, that that part of the bill will be modified.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it struck me, as the bill was being read, that it involves a pretty large enterprise. It would seem to me from the provisions of the bill as the Secretary read them, that it inaugurates not only the removal of the small departmental libraries from the different departmental buildings to the city post-office, but establishes what will be in time a great public library here in Washington in addition to the Congressional Library proper.

I think, if that is the view of the committee which reports this bill through the Senator from Colorado, that he should state to the Senate what the scope of the bill is and whether it is the intention of the committee in the bill to lay the foundation of a great public library in addition to the Congressional Library; because, if that is done, it will not be a question of a few rooms or a limited space in one of the floors of the new post-office building, but this library will advance and aggrandize, and before many years will require a large proportion of the room of a very great building.

I do not say that it is not desirable that we should have such a library here for the departmental clerks and employés and for anybody else in the District, but it should be understood clearly that, when we embark upon all these great matters, the vast amount of room and the number of books which will be required should be anticipated by the Senate.

I thought also that I noticed a provision in the bill—perhaps I am wrong about that—which is rather a novelty, and that is, that provision should be made by messenger service for furnishing books to persons outside. That is a thing which the Senator, I hope, comprehends in its full extent.

If Congress is to incorporate such a provision into this bill for a public library for the citizens of this District and the departmental employés and clerks, and is also to send them books and take them back, as is done now in a limited way for Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, it will be a very great advance in expenditure; nobody will go to the library, but orders will be given for books; and a force of messengers will be engaged in carrying the books to the houses of the persons and returning them. It may be that that is desirable; it may be that the Senator has taken all this in view. If he has, I hope he will explain to the Senate, so that we may understand what we are doing when we adopt this bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Maine has asked the questions which he has. The committee which reported this bill through me very much hope that this will be the foundation of a creditable, an extensive, and fully equipped public library for the city of Washington. We have now no library whatever here. The Librarian of Congress is forbidden by law to issue the books of the Congressional Library except to officers and employés of the Government. The general public in Washington, the departmental clerks, and the citizens of the city have absolutely no access whatever to the public library of Congress, except as they call at the Library to read there the books within this building.

Mr. GRAY. If I may interrupt the Senator by asking a question. Is he not mistaken about that?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think not.

Mr. GRAY. Is it not a fact that the citizens of Washington have on certain terms the right to procure books from the Library?

Mr. WOLCOTT. They may go into the Library and read the books.

Mr. GRAY. And take books out.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, no. The Librarian is badgered day after day by eternal requests from the public that they may get books; but he is forbidden by law to let the books go out. We have to call for them; and when we do it we become personally responsible for the books, and we violate the law when we let other persons have those books in this city, which ought to be a center of culture and intelligence; but there is no public library here, and there should be one. I hope this will be the means at a moderate expense or at no expense at all of founding here what will eventually be a creditable library for Washington.

We start upon this basis: Almost every Department has now included within its buildings certain circulating library books, which have been gradually accumulated, not including the public documents to which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] referred, but different books and different periodicals which have been presented to it, and which are forwarded gratuitously and given to that Department. The scope and theory of this bill is that we shall have all those books and periodicals put into one building. The Librarian of Congress has sent him additional copies of almost every book which is now published, which he can not now dispose of, nor can he give the public the benefit of them.

The intention of this bill is that such additional books as he can spare shall be given to this library; and I say again that the Librarian of Congress strongly urges the passage of this bill as relieving the Congressional Library from the constant demands upon it. The surplus books, not needed, are likewise to be sent to this library; there they are to be stored; and the library is to be open from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m., so as to give Department clerks out of hours a chance to use the books and use the reading room. There is no city in the United States approaching in population the city of Washington which has not already a public library.

We have not incorporated in this bill a provision that the books shall be sent for and called for, although that plan is now adopted by almost every city in the United States; but in order to meet the suggestion and criticism which the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] made, that the Department clerks would object, so far as they could, to the taking of their little circulating libraries from their buildings, we have provided that under proper regulations departmental messengers may call for and receive books, and deliver them at the various Departments. In other words, if an employé of the Treasury Department could not, if this bill became a law, go into his own library longer and get his books, he might, at proper hours and at a proper time—I suppose the clerks all sending together—send down and get what books were wanted and have them sent to the Department.

Mr. HALE. Not to their houses?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; it is limited expressly to the Departments.

Mr. GRAY. Will it interrupt the Senator if I make a suggestion?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not at all. I shall be very glad to hear the suggestion of the Senator.

Mr. GRAY. I sent to the Librarian to get a copy of the regulations.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I shall be glad if the Senator will read them.

Mr. GRAY. This is the regulation as to the loaning of books:

The Librarian may loan books to any person not a member of Congress upon deposit of the value thereof, such deposit to be returned on the return of the book or books to the Library.

The custom under that regulation is that if a person makes a deposit, say of $5, and lets it stay in the hands of the Librarian, without withdrawing the deposit, he may take the books out.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator kindly send me the copy of the regulations?

Mr. GRAY. I will do so; but that is all there is on that subject.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That, of course, destroys entirely the object of the Library. The people who read books obtained from a public library can not, as a rule, afford to pay for them, and if you require a money deposit from people who can not get it, you destroy the object of a library; but, meanwhile, we have a building which at this time, without additional expense and without trenching upon anybody, can give room for these books; we have a chance of starting this library and gathering these books together, and it will be a very happy day for me, and I think for every member of the Senate, if we can in this simple way lay the foundation of a library which will be creditable to the city and may at some day be housed in a suitable building.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have read the section which authorizes books to be transferred from the departmental libraries to the proposed library.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That will be found in the first few lines of section 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The part of the bill referred to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 3. That whenever provisions for the library are completed such books, periodicals, and papers as now belong to and are included in the circulating libraries of the several Executive Departments and offices of the Government in the city of Washington shall be transferred to the free public and departmental library and reading room, for its use, and it is hereby made the duty of the head of each Department, Bureau, or office in which a circulating library is maintained for the use of employés of the Government to deliver all such books, periodicals, and papers, without delay, to the free public and departmental library and reading room, and thereafter no circulating library but only such library as is required for its special official use shall be established or maintained by any Department, Bureau, or office of the Government in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that an amendment ought to be inserted to allow the head of a Department to retain in the Department all such books as in his opinion are necessary for the information of the clerks or for the discharge of the public business. It is very clear that all the books should not be transferred, because, as I know, in the Treasury Department there are very valuable books, which are useful only to persons engaged in the kind of business dealt with in the Treasury Department. Such books ought not to be transferred. There ought to be some discretionary power in the head of a Department to say what books should or should not be transferred to the proposed public library.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am very ready for such an amendment if, on reflection, the Senator from Ohio desires it. Inasmuch as the bill only provides for the transfer of such books as are now circulated in the Departments, it is safe to assume that the head of the Treasury Department, for instance, will not take a book wanted in that Department and permitted to have general circulation in the Department. This bill only calls for the transfer of such books as are now in the circulating libraries of the Departments, and if a book is now in such a circulating library and goes to the houses of the employés, it certainly ought to be in general circulation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator read the clause?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Certainly.

That whenever provisions for the library are completed such books, periodicals, and papers as now belong to and are included in the circulating libraries of the several Executive Departments and offices of the Government in the city of Washington shall be transferred to the free public and departmental library and reading room.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there ought to be an exception made of the books which are used for departmental purposes. Indeed the Departments encourage the use and study of many of those technical books by officers of the Government. They ought to be retained in the departmental libraries and there should be an exception as to them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suggest that they will be just as safe in the hands of the general public, if they are to be in circulation, as in the hands of clerks of the Departments, and if they are technical books, I do not know why they should be shut out from the use of the general public.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] that he accept the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and insert the words "at the discretion of the heads of the Departments." Take the State Department, where there is a very unique library, which contains the biographies and speeches of most of the eminent men of the last century. There are many such books that the head of a Department would not like to have taken out. I hope, therefore, the suggestion of having the matter left entirely to the discretion of the heads of the respective Departments will be accepted by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should be unwilling to make the exception as broad as that, for the head of a Department would naturally want to keep his library, and would not want to let anything go out if he could help it; but if we may have an amendment which will except books used and necessary for departmental purposes, and that will satisfy the Senator from Ohio, I shall be very glad that that may be added.

Mr. MORRILL. The suggestion of the Senator from Colorado that every head of a Department will be against the removal of the library now in his Department is at war with his other suggestion that all the heads of Departments have approved of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I refer, of course, to those in charge of the Department libraries. The clerks desire to have the conveniences of their own circulating libraries and the proposed library as well; but they ought to sacrifice something for the sake of the enlarged library facilities they will have.

I suggest to insert in line 5, of section 3, after the word "Washington," the words which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 5, after the word "Washington," it is proposed to insert "except books used and necessary for departmental purposes;" so as to read:

That whenever provisions for the Library are completed such books, periodicals, and papers as now belong to and are included in the circulating libraries of the several Executive Departments and offices of the Government in the city of Washington, except books used and necessary for departmental purposes, shall be transferred to the free public and departmental library and reading room, for its use, etc.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire whether the Joint Committee on the Library have in any way been consulted about this bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It does not come within the province of the Joint Committee on the Library, on which I have the honor of serving, but it comes before the District Committee. It is a facility which is to be paid for half by the District and does not touch the province of the Committee on the Library, except so far, I may say to the Senator from Alabama, as the Congressional Library may be affected. But accompanying the bill is a report from the Congressional Librarian, to the effect that he will be very glad to dispose of his surplus books and give them to a public library if one shall be established in Washington.

Mr. MORGAN. I should rather have the opinion of somebody else than the Congressional Librarian upon an important point like that. I do not think the Librarian, because he may want to get rid of the trouble of handling a lot of books, ought to dump them into some other place without the consent of the Joint Committee on the Library. If we are going to extract from the Congressional Library a very large amount of very valuable material and transfer it to a city library here, I do not think that Congress ought to act upon that until the Joint Committee on the Library has had a chance to examine this bill. I will therefore move the reference of the bill to that committee.

Before that motion is put, however, I ask leave to say a word. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado whether this bill provides that all the people of the District of Columbia shall have free access to the proposed library?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is for the purpose of giving to every citizen of the District of Columbia what no citizen now has, free access to a library, which shall comprise all the present departmental libraries and all the surplus books of the present Congressional Library which may be spared.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to know something about what the cost of maintaining this new establishment is to be to the Government and to the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Four thousand five hundred dollars a year, but relieving more than that amount by saving the employment of clerks now in the different Departments.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] will yield to me one moment, I desire to make a suggestion to him. I think he is quite right in his view of the jurisdiction of the Library Committee of Congress, but I should like to suggest to him that his difficulty might be removed by adding to the fourth section, "the list of such books, however, being first approved by the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress." If the Senator from Colorado will accept such an amendment, that will so far remove the objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I shall be very glad to accept it.

Mr. MORGAN. As far as it goes it would.

I believe the Congressional Library ought to be open to the people of the District of Columbia. I do not see why, if the Government of the United States buys books with the people's money, the people can not be allowed to read them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. They do not buy the books.

Mr. MORGAN. The Government of the United States buys them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The majority of the books are sent in exchange and received under the copyright law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ten thousand dollars is appropriated every year for that purpose.

Mr. MORGAN. No matter how we get them, there is a $10,000 appropriation every year for the purpose of buying new books that we do not exchange. The cost and value of books we print and obtain in exchange for books that come into the Congressional Library must be very great. At all events, every part of this institution, except the self-executing part, the swapping of books, must depend upon the Treasury of the United States, and the people supply the money to that Treasury. I do not see, therefore, why it is that a member of Congress should have access to that Library while a citizen of the District of Columbia should not under proper regulations.

More than that, we pay the Librarian and his employés very good salaries for keeping that Library open about five or six hours in a day. That Library ought to be kept open until 9 or 10 o'clock every night, and it ought to be open every Sunday, so that the people who want to go there to read may go and inform themselves in regard to whatever they wish to study. The Government of the United States ought to pay extra compensation for the clerks who are detained there beyond the usual hours to keep that Library open. As it is now it is a sealed book; it is a dead letter; it is not anything of advantage or of value to anyone except to some literary investigator or explorer or to members of the two Houses of Congress.

I believe that all this difficulty could be removed by referring this bill to the Committee on the Library, to see if they can not be persuaded to have some relaxation in respect of the rights of the people of this District so as to permit them to go to that Library and get books, making it sub modo a circulating library, if you please.

But there is one other feature about this bill. The Government of the United States, in so far as the entire expenses have heretofore been incurred in maintaining the Congressional Library and also the libraries in the different Departments, many of which are very valuable indeed, has put up money and contributed the whole expense. There has been no complaint about that. It is true the people have been shut out from them, but I do not think that the taxes upon the people of this District at large should be increased for the purpose of enabling them to go to a public library to get books. I do not think that one-half of the expenses of this library system ought to be fastened down upon the people of this District.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is the Senator of opinion that the citizens of a community should not be taxed to support a public library in any form, but should rely on voluntary subscriptions?

Mr. MORGAN. The citizens of this community ought not to be taxed, because they have had no voice in buying any of these books, have no ownership of them at all, and these books are contributions heretofore collected by the Government of the United States in the different departmental libraries. The people have not had to pay for them, they have got no property interest in them or no rights in them at all, and they ought not to be taxed for the maintenance of these other libraries.

The Government maintains the librarians and employés of the different Departments, and properly does so; and now to take that burden and shoulder half of it upon the people of this District, I think is simply a cruelty. I do not think it ought to be done. More than that, the drift of public sentiment and also of legislation is in the opposite direction. I understand, if I am correctly informed, that the schoolbooks which are used in the public schools in this District are supplied entirely at Government expense. While we are doing that and taking that direction, what is the reason that we should reverse our action now and take a different course in regard to supplying an opportunity to the people of this District to read books which perhaps they do not want to look at?

Why tax a man who drives a dray through the streets of this city every day, who can not read and write, to make him support a library which he can not have access to, and which he has no use for in the world? If the Government is going to do a decent thing, let us do it in a decent way; let us do as we have always been doing, take the expense of it upon the shoulders of the Government; make it a national institution; and let the Congress of the United States vote the necessary appropriations to keep it going.

I move the reference of the bill to the Joint Committee on the Library.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. ALLISON. Before this amendment is disposed of, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to what I think is a serious defect in this general plan, and that is the provision that this library shall be located in the new building which is now being constructed on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue between Eleventh and Twelfth streets. That building is being wholly constructed by the Government for a specific purpose, and every portion of it will be needed for that purpose. Now, to inject into a bill a provision that the entire plan and arrangement of a building, which is to cost two millions and a half of dollars, shall be adjusted so as to provide for a local library, seems to me to be a proceeding which will involve very great expenditure.

I should much prefer, if this bill is to pass—and I am in sympathy with those who desire the passage of some such bill—that there should be a spot of ground purchased and a library building erected for this purpose. It will cost the General Government and the District of Columbia a much less sum to do that than to rearrange a public building now in the course of construction to save the rental which we are now paying here, in the aggregate amounting to more than $130,000, and apportion it to the future needs of a library building. I shall, for one, not consent to that portion of the bill under any circumstances so far as my vote is concerned.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am willing that the bill may be referred in view of the existing criticism to the Committee on the Library. I prefer, however, that it should not be referred to the joint committee, unless the Senator from Alabama or some other Senator insists upon it, because Senators know the difficulty of getting the joint committee together. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is aware of the great difficulty we encounter when we seek to have a meeting of the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mr. VOORHEES. To insure proper consideration of this bill, it is only necessary to refer it to the Senate Committee on the Library.

Mr. MORGAN. I will modify my motion to that effect, and move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then it will receive proper consideration.

Mr. HOAR. Before the bill is referred I should like to move an amendment, so that it may go with the bill. I move to strike out in the second line of the fourth section the words "turn over to" and substitute the words "deposit in." Then, I move to add to the fourth section these words:

The same or any of them be returned when required by the Joint Committee on the Library, and the list of books so deposited to be first approved by said committee.

This will put the whole power of transferring books from the Congressional Library in the hands of the committee. Of course, they will practically take the opinion of the Librarian.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand the bill has been referred to the Committee on the Library.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Library, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the bill is referred I should like to offer an amendment for the consideration of the committee, which shall provide for the erection of a building for the purposes of the proposed library in lieu of the suggested arrangement whereby the city post-office building is to be dedicated and devoted in part to that purpose.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the Senator from Iowa that what he says as to the needs of the new post-office building is in direct contradiction to the information which the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia has. It is a great, extensive building, never intended to be used entirely as a post-office, and we were assured there was ample room in it for the proposed library. Of course we have already a public library, but I think the Senator from Iowa must know that Congress will not pass a bill to erect another building for a library.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know the source of the Senator's information, but I think I have as good knowledge on the subject of the aims and objects of that building as any gentleman either on this floor or off of it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the Senator has better knowledge. I am only speaking of the information conveyed to the chairman of the District Committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Committee on Appropriations recommended the construction of this building, we went into the whole question with the greatest care. I know perfectly well that there are people who have authority in this city in various ways who were not favorable to the construction of that building in its present form, but it was the purpose and object of Congress in authorizing its construction and providing appropriations for it, that it should be used for governmental purposes in the way provided for in the act of Congress, and for one, I shall not consent to its diversion, whatever may be the opinion of those who think otherwise.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, before the bill is referred I wish to submit some observations.

I agree entirely with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ALLISON], not only for the reason he stated, but also because the object of the bill of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] may be better attained by such an amendment to the law as will make the Congressional Library, for which a building is now being erected, open to the use of the public. The erection of a library such as is worthy of a great city is a matter of large expenditure, and you can not have a library which will be of any great value without incurring an expense ultimately and altogether of hundreds of thousands of dollars. This great Library Building is being constructed and ought to be made adequate for the uses of the whole nation and the people of the District of Columbia. The money which Congress appropriates can be much more wisely appropriated by providing for the extension of that Library. The building being now ample for all purposes, may easily be opened as desired by an amendment of the law to the use of the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply want to emphasize what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] said. I apprehend when the post-office building is completed that Congress will have some control over it, and that it will use it for some other purposes than simply for a city post-office.

Before the bill is referred I wish to move to strike out of section 6 the words:

And provided further, That the regulations adopted shall include provisions for supplying employés of the several Executive Departments with books through accredited departmental messengers.

I do not know how many messengers it would take in each of the Executive Departments to accommodate all the men, women, and children who are in those Departments in going to and from this proposed library and carrying back and forth such books as might be wanted, but it would certainly be an enormous number. It would be simply treading back and forth from the Departments at the beck of this lady, at the beck of that man, and at the beck of this boy, to bring a book to a Department and take another back, and all that. I think it would be about the most ornamental and expensive portion of the whole concern, and I hope that provision will be stricken out.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I hope the bill will be referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Library in the absence of objection.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the bill which has been pending, I suppose is now disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is disposed of by its reference to the Committee on the Library.

WILLIAM M'GARRAHAN—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the McGarrahan bill, which has been before the Senate in the morning hour, was the regular order on Wednesday morning after the routine business of the morning hour; but we had the sad announcement of the death of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], and, of course, yesterday we did no business. I ask now that the McGarrahan bill may be taken up on the same terms on which it was to have been taken up on Wednesday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the bill referred to by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] will be regarded as before the Senate. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1958) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLS. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who has gone with the committee to attend the funeral of his late colleague, wishes to speak on this bill, and the venerable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] also wishes to submit some remarks upon it. He is not yet prepared to proceed, and I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill next Tuesday morning.

Mr. TELLER. I do not understand that the Senator from West Virginia desires to speak. He informed me he did not care to make any remarks on the bill.

Mr. MILLS. The Senator from West Virginia told me at one time that he desired to speak on the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I do not, of course, expect to insist on a vote until Senators have an opportunity to speak on the bill. If the Senator from Texas wishes to speak this morning, I certainly do not expect to ask for a vote until after he has been heard.

Mr. MILLS. I am perfectly willing to submit what I have to say this morning, but I was asking that the vote might be deferred until our venerable friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], the father of the Senate, has had an opportunity to be heard upon the bill. He is not prepared to speak this morning.

Mr. MORRILL. I did not think in the first instance of saying anything on this subject. I have, however, concluded to do so; but I have been detained at my home for the last two days by a slight cold, and am not prepared to proceed now. I shall be ready on Monday to submit some brief remarks.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to the arrangement that the bill shall not be voted on until Tuesday next, as the Senator from Texas has suggested, but I wish that we should progress. If the Senator is ready to go on, perhaps he had better do so this morning; the Senator from Vermont can speak on Monday, and we will take the vote on Tuesday, if there be no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I had expected when the consideration of this bill began that I should vote for it when it came to its passage. I supposed it was a bill to submit the whole question to the investigation and determination of a court. The discussion of the bill, however, has caused me to investigate it for myself, and I have reached the conclusion that it ought not to pass. I will briefly submit to the Senate some of the reasons which have controlled me in reaching this conclusion.

The bill, in the very beginning of it, recognizes that there was a grant made by the Government of Mexico to Gomez, the vendor of McGarrahan. The report of the committee states the same fact, and all the arguments made by those who have supported the measure in the Senate maintain that the Government of Mexico granted the land in question to Gomez. If that be the fact, the bill states McGarrahan out of court, and he has no claim for the consideration of the legislative branch of the United States Government.

What can the Government of the United States do but part with its title to the grantee? I had supposed that McGarrahan had an inchoate title, a title which had to be perfected, a title which was in the process of being perfected when the separation of the sovereignty of the soil took place and passed from the Government of Mexico to the Government of the United States.

We are told that this claim is based on the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the treaty which was made when hostilities determined between the two republics; but the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo only reaffirmed a principle well recognized in international law, that when a territory changes its sovereign the rights of person and property are not disturbed by the change. This article in the treaty was only placed there to quiet the alarm of those people who had been living under Mexican authority, to assure them that they should receive the same treatment under the United States Government which they would have received had they remained under their own Government, that is, security to person and property.

But we are told that this grant came with Gomez and with the Territory of California under the jurisdiction of the United States when this treaty was made and that the grant was perfected. There is, therefore, nothing for the Government of the United States to do but to protect the owners of that property in the peaceful enjoyment of it. If this bill is mistaken, if the report of the committee is mistaken, and if the arguments of the friends of the measure are mistaken, which assure the Senate that Gomez had a grant, and if it should turn out that he only had an inchoate title, then he has a right to come to Congress and ask it to perfect his right. Then it would be the duty of the United States Government to institute an investigation to see whether he is entitled to have the grant completed and the title vested in him.

It may be possible that this grant was issued on condition, because we know the Mexican Government and the Spanish Government did issue grants to large tracts of land on condition, sometimes of settlement, sometimes that the grantees would introduce families, sometimes upon cultivation—upon one condition and another. If such had been the case, it would have been proper for the Government of the United States to ascertain whether these conditions had been complied with, and if so, to have perfected the grant by investing Gomez with all the title the United States Government had.

Can the Government grant to McGarrahan that which McGarrahan already has in as full possession, in as full title now under the Mexican grant as he would have if the Government were to issue to him a patent? If two patents were to issue, if a hundred patents were to issue for that land, the title could not have been a particle stronger than it was when the sovereign first parted with its entire title and placed it in the possession of the assignee. If he had a grant from the Government of Mexico, it would be as valid as a patent from the United States, the only difference being that United States Government grants its titles on parchment and the Mexican Government grants its titles on paper. In the one case or the other, however, either government parts with all the title the sovereign has.

It is stated in the bill that McGarrahan comes to the Congress of the United States with a paper which invests him with all the title the Mexican Government had to the territory before it transferred it to the United States. What can we do? We are asked to warrant the title by this bill. What sovereignty ever warranted a title? Where has the Government of the United States or the government of any State having public lands ever warranted a title to an assignee? The sovereign only parts with what title it has, and if it has none the assignee takes none. If the sovereign has title the assignee takes such title, good, bad, or indifferent.

I have seen titles three deep in Texas, and so has my colleague doubtless. Spain issued titles to land in that territory before the separation of the Mexican Government in 1824; then the Mexican Government issued titles; subsequently the Republic of Texas issued titles, and after 1845 the State issued titles, for it is known to every one that the State of Texas reserved her public lands when she entered the Union. The Spanish Government and the Mexican Government were very generous indeed in giving away their land. They gave it in large quantities. The grantee would sometimes go out with a grant of 11 leagues of land and start at some beginning corner.

I remember one case in my own county where the first corner calls for 150 miles north of the San Antonio road. That was about as specific as almost any other portion of the grant. Perhaps they would fix a place on some stream, mark a tree or a rock, start by courses and distances, run a hundred yards or perhaps half a mile, and if Indians were in the neighborhood take up their compass and chain and go back 150 miles to the settlement they left. Then the surveyor by his fireside would make out the plat by courses and distances to take in a territory equal to 11 leagues of land, or whatever the body of land might be. Then their title would be sent to Matamoros or some other old town in Mexico, one delivered to the grantee and the other filed away in the government archives. There was no tracing or any map of the land embraced in the grant.

Then came the Republic, not knowing that the land had been separated from the public domain, and grants a league of land in accordance with the constitution of the 17th of March, by which the State promised every head of a family who was in Texas on the 2d of March, the date of our declaration of independence, a league and a quarter of land.

Mr. GRAY. Was it the Republic or the State of Texas?

Mr. MILLS. That was the republic. This head of a family gets his certificate and goes out on this domain of 11 leagues. He starts a point on the ground and perhaps is run away by the Indians, who were then all over the country. This man gets his title, however, by courses and distances. Then in 1845 and 1846, and subsequently, the State of Texas issued patents similar to those issued by the Government of the United States, and gave 640 acres of land to the head of a family who would go and settle there. They would make their lines showing the courses and distances. Then the patent is issued and there are three titles to the same piece of land, but I have never known in the forty odd years which I have lived in that State, that any of the junior claimants had ever come before the Legislature and asked the government to warrant the title when the government had issued three titles to the land.

No government issues anything but a quit-claim title; no government guarantees a title. It gives to the assignee what the government has got, and then leaves to the junior owners of title to these lands to go into court and litigate to see which is the best owner. Sometimes the courts have decided that the junior owner was the best; sometimes they have held that he was an innocent purchaser, without notice. When the owner of the senior grant has carried it in his pocket and refused to put it on the map, and refused to give notice to subsequent locators on the land, he was held to have lost it.

Mr. President, the whole substance of the bill pending before the Senate is to ask the Government of the United States to bind itself, perhaps the first time in its history, as a warrantor of a title; and to what extent? I do not know. I have heard it said that this bill will carry millions against the Government. I do not know whether it is thousands or whether it is millions, but when it is a mere bounty that Congress is going to vote, I think some one ought to know and some one ought to inform the Senate how much this bounty is which we are to pay to Mr. McGarrahan out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States. Why does he not go against the junior holders of these titles? Why does he not go with his grant, which he says he owns and which he has held for forty odd years from the Mexican Government, into the courts? The courts are open to him, as they are to every citizen of the United States, and have been all this time. The Government has given him open courts to hear his plea, to examine his complaints, and to render full and perfect justice to him. Why does he not go and hold the owners of the junior title responsible for the damages which they have done in taking the minerals out of the soil?

But, Mr. President, I shall not pursue that subject any further. The Government is asked and binds itself by the bill to hold itself responsible for all the minerals which have been taken during this long lapse of time out of the soil in the grant. I do not say that Mr. McGarrahan has no rights which ought not to be cared for; I do not say that he is not entitled to some relief from the Government, but I do say with the President that he is not entitled to the relief he seeks; and I say he is entitled to no relief if the statement made in the bill is true, that he has had all the Government could ever give him, the Government title to the land.

Mr. President, there is one other feature of the bill that I wish to notice briefly, for I am going to be very brief. The bill makes evidence of all the papers that are mentioned in the bill. It makes them evidence for the courts whether the evidence is legal or illegal, competent or incompetent, admissible or nonadmissible under the rules of law. If we are going to do that why not just say, "Mr. McGarrahan, your title is perfect; it is no use to go through with the forms of law; we acknowledge your claim, and appoint an auditor to state the account and ascertain how much the Government of the United States is liable, and then we will make an appropriation and pay you for it?" Listen to the terms of the bill. The second section provides—

That upon the trial of questions or issues arising on the hearing of said petition herein provided for the said court shall receive as evidence of said grant and boundaries thereof the original expediente presented by the said Gomez to the said Governor Manuel Micheltorena, and the diseño or map accompanying same, or a copy thereof, the depositions and other evidence produced before said Board of Land Commissioners, or copies thereof, and all depositions, proofs, testimony, or affidavits taken before any circuit or district court of the United States, in the State of California, or the clerks of such courts, or any commissioner appointed by said courts, or before any notary public, or before any committee of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, or of any map or record of any Department of the Government of the United States, or of any act of Congress through which the aforesaid boundaries set forth in said expediente and the title to the said lands can be shown protected and established, or of any oral or written testimony or deposition or copies thereof, concerning said record touching said grant, etc.

The court has nothing to do with these papers but simply to admit the affidavits and ex parte statements whether legal or illegal. It is a fundamental principle in courts of justice established to enforce justice that both sides must be permitted to investigate; that the witnesses must be cross-examined, that both parties must be heard; but here the old fundamental rule of justice is dispensed with by this measure, and we in Congress make the evidence, and there is nothing for the court to do but simply to make a decree five minutes after they take control of the cause.

This bill is simply to prepare the way for an auditor (for it acknowledges the liability of the Government of the United States) to state how many dollars we are to pay to Mr. McGarrahan for the minerals taken out of this land during the last forty or fifty years.

I am perfectly willing, Mr. President, to send Mr. McGarrahan into the courts of the United States, where the Government of the United States shall be represented by a district attorney, where the court is empowered to summon witnesses and compel their attendance, where he can be confronted with those who may testify against him, and the Government shall have compulsory process, as he shall have it, to bring all witnesses to give their testimony, where he shall have a jury trial; and then, when the judgment of that court shall be rendered against the Government of the United States, as far as the Government has any liability, I am ready to help to discharge that liability. But I shall not vote for a bill that confesses the Government of the United States is to be held as a warrantor to pay enormous damages, which may have been incurred during more than two generations by the junior occupant of a piece of land.

These, sir, are the reasons which I have thought proper to express to the Senate as my reasons why I can not support this measure.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose the bill will go over without any further action until Monday, and with the same understanding as before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). That will be the order in the absence of objection. The Chair hears none.

WILLIAM M. WATSON.

Mr. GORDON. If the matter which has been before the Senate is disposed of, I ask unanimous consent to call up a bill to pension a very old man. It has passed the other House, has been reported by the Senate Committee on Pensions, and I think there will be no objection to it. It is House bill 8038.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8038) granting a pension to William M. Watson, of Walker County, Ga. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William M. Watson, of Walker County, Ga., an invalid soldier of the Mexican war, having been a member of Company E, First Alabama Volunteers, 1846, and in consequence of his disability, arising from a wound received in the service, grants him a pension of $15 dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. LANG.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3670) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Lang.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Charles A. Lang, who was a private in Company G, Second Regiment Dragoons, and served in the Florida war, was captain of Company G, Thirty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry, and served in the war of the rebellion, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $20 a month in lieu of the amount he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (S. 2265) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Several provisions have been stricken out by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I think the Secretary had better read the amended bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Secretary has the amended bill before him. He will first read the original bill and then state the amendments of the committee.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That course appears to me simply a waste of time.

Mr. COCKRELL. After he has read the original he will state the amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated in their order.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I submit that the provisions of the bill will prove very harsh to a great many poor people here.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator from Florida to hear the amendments stated. I see there are a great many amendments reported. Let them be acted upon.

Mr. CALL. Very well.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, line 7, after the word "hours," to insert "of daylight;" in line 9, before the word "sidewalks," to insert "paved;" and in line 11, after the word "tenant," to insert:

And such owners or tenants shall, under a like penalty, within five days after notice so to do by the Commissioners, clean off and remove, or cause to be cleaned off and removed, all dirt, sand, gravel, or other refuse matter that may fall or be washed upon any paved sidewalk or alley inside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown.

So as to make the section read:

That the owner or tenant of each house or other building, or lot or lots of ground, in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and in such other part or parts of the District of Columbia as the Commissioners of said District shall from time to time designate, shall within the first four hours of daylight after every fall of snow cause the same to be removed entirely from off the paved sidewalks opposite such house, building, lot, or land, under the penalty of $1 for each lot for every such neglect, to be paid by the said owner or tenant; and such owners or tenants shall, under a like penalty, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 5, after the word "ice," to strike out "or both" and insert "or any dirt, sand, or gravel;" and in line 6, after the word "sidewalks," to insert "and alleys;" so as to make the section read:

That in case the owner or tenant of any house, lot, building, or land shall neglect to comply with any of the provisions of the preceding sections of this act, it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to cause the removal of snow or ice, or any dirt, sand, or gravel, from all paved sidewalks and alleys in the cities of Washington and Georgetown wherever there has been a failure on the part of the owner or tenant as aforesaid to remove the same, and the cost of such removal by order and under the direction of the said Commissioners shall be assessed as a tax against the property to which the sidewalks in question belong, for the purposes of this act, and the said tax so assessed shall be carried to the regular tax roll of the cities aforesaid, and shall be collected in the manner provided for the collection of other taxes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 3, after the word "snow," to strike out "or rain which shall freeze;" in line 4, after the word "gutters," strike out "at the corners;" in line 5, after the word "crosswalks," to insert "to a width of 10 feet;" and in line 8, after the word "obstructions," to insert "and in case the crosswalks are covered with ice it shall be their duty to cause such crosswalks to be liberally sprinkled with sand or sawdust, or such other material as will insure safety to pedestrians;" so as to make the section read:

That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, immediately after every fall of snow on the crosswalks or in the gutters, forthwith to cause the same to be removed from the said crosswalks to a width of 10 feet and from out of the said gutters to the breadth of 1 foot, in the said cities respectively; and the said crosswalks and gutters shall be kept clean and free from obstructions, and in case the crosswalks are covered with ice it shall be their duty to cause such crosswalks to be liberally sprinkled with sand or sawdust, or such other material as will insure safety to pedestrians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 5, line 3, after the word "immediately," to strike out "upon the commencement of a snow or sleet storm or," and insert "after;" in line 6, before the word "and," to strike out "under the circumstances," and insert "when funds are available;" in line 7, after the word "crosswalks," to insert "which may be used as thoroughfares;" in line 10, after the word "sleet," to insert "to a width sufficient to accommodate winter pedestrian travel;" in line 17, after the word "parks," to strike out:

Provided, That the compensation allowed in payment of the services of the persons employed by the superintendent of public buildings and grounds, as aforesaid, shall not exceed 50 cents per hour for each person while actually at work: And provided further, That one overseer for each public park within the cities of Washington and Georgetown may be employed by such superintendent of public buildings and grounds, at a rate of compensation not to exceed 75 cents per hour for each overseer while actually engaged in overseeing the work.

And in line 31, after the words "provided for," to strike out:

And if the work at any of the parks has not been performed in accordance with instructions, payment of the persons so engaged shall be withheld until such time as the work is properly and suitably performed;

So as to make the section read:

That it shall be the duty of the superintendent of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia, immediately after a fall of snow or sleet, or as soon thereafter as practicable, to engage such assistance as he may deem necessary, when funds are available, and proceed to remove from all paved sidewalks or crosswalks which may be used as thoroughfares around, about, or through the public parks within the cities of Washington and Georgetown all accumulations of snow or sleet to a width sufficient to accommodate winter pedestrian travel; or in case the same be so congealed as to make removal by ordinary methods impossible, he shall cause such paved side or cross-walks to be liberally sprinkled with sand or sawdust or such other material as will insure safety to pedestrians who, in the lawful and legitimate pursuit of their respective avocations, find it convenient to pass around, about, or through said public parks; and it shall be the duty of the superintendent of public buildings and grounds, personally, or by deputy or deputies, to visit each public park in the cities of Washington and Georgetown as soon as possible after any snow or sleet storm, as aforesaid, and carefully inspect the work as herein provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEALING IN "OPTIONS" AND "FUTURES."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CALL. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 2 it is proposed to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That such contract or agreement shall not be made, settled for by delivery or settlement of differences, or by another mode of performance or settlement in or upon any board of trade, produce, cotton, hop, merchants', or other exchange, or other commercial association, or in any place or upon any premises where price quotations of said articles are announced, bulletined, or published, nor be subject to the rules or regulations of any such board, exchange, or other commercial association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when Mr. CASEY'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CASEY] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE].

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. SANDERS]. I will also announce that I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], who is absent, and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HISCOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]; otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired on the bill and all amendments with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], but I am informed that if present he would vote "nay" on the pending amendment, and I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DIXON. As I stated, I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], who is absent as a member of the committee appointed by the Senate to escort the remains of the late Senator Kenna to West Virginia. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is absent unpaired. I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Mississippi to my colleague, and upon this question I vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (after having voted in the negative). A pair has been arranged by which I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GORDON (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] has been called away for a short time to-day on business, and is paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS]. I do not know how my colleague would vote on this particular amendment.

Mr. PLATT. My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is absent. Believing that he would vote "nay" if here, and as I should vote "yea," I announce a pair with him upon this vote.

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the negative). Does the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] know how his colleague [Mr. DOLPH] would vote on the pending amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL. He would vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. Then I will let my vote stand.

Mr. IRBY (after having voted in the negative). I have just noticed the absence of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. I am paired with him and withdraw my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has a pair with my colleague [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. GEORGE. He has; but upon inquiry of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] I understood his colleague would vote "nay" on the pending question. That is the way I have voted.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then, inasmuch as I vote the other way upon the question, I ask to have my colleague's pair transferred to myself.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator from Oregon withdraw his vote?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. GEORGE. That suits me very well. I will let my vote stand, and the Senator from Oregon withdraws his vote.

Mr. MITCHELL. I withdraw my vote, and announce my pair with my colleague [Mr. DOLPH].

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum having voted, the roll will be called.

Mr. MITCHELL. How many are now required to make a quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four. The roll call will proceed.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Berry,	Gallinger,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Brice,	George,	Palmer,	Teller,
Butler,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Vance,
Call,	Hale,	Peffer,	Vilas,

Dawes,	Irby,	Sherman,
Dixon,	Kyle,	Shoup,
Frye,	McMillan,	Stewart,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present. The roll will be again called on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] whenever he is out of the Chamber.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] to my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but he and I voted the same way on the last roll call. I record my vote "nay," notwithstanding the pair.

Mr. HISCOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. IRBY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], but I transfer my pair to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). Upon this vote I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], but I understand from the Senator from Minnesota, after conversation with the Senator from West Virginia, that I am free to vote upon the bill and amendments. I am in favor of the bill and will vote "yea" on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] would vote the same way I would on this question, and therefore I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HUNTON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. DANIEL] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If they were present my colleague would vote "yea" and the Senator from Alabama would vote "nay."

Mr. GRAY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If he were present I should vote "yea." I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. HIGGINS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] would vote "yea" on the pending amendment, and as I would vote that way I will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Brice,	Gibson,	Mills,	Vilas,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Mitchell,	White,
Dixon,	Hiscock,	Palmer,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], to strike out section 10 of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Virginia is absent on official duty, and I ask that the amendment may lie over until his return.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie over if there be no objection.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will consent to its lying over unless it is to delay action on the bill. Otherwise I shall ask for a vote upon it. It has been laid over once owing to the absence of the Senator from Virginia, and I hardly feel like letting action on the bill be delayed on that account.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out section 10 as amended, as follows:

SEC. 10. Whenever any contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery of any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act shall be made, and the making thereof shall not be reported by the collector of internal revenue, as required by section 9, and it shall come to the knowledge of such collector, or he shall have reasonable cause to believe that the party by whom such contract or agreement was made as vendor was not, at the time of the making thereof, the owner of the article or articles which were the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contract or agreement, and had not then acquired, and was not then entitled to the right to the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner of such article or articles, it shall be the duty of such collector to require the party who shall have made such contract or agreement as vendor to forthwith furnish to such collector proof of such vendor's ownership, or right or title to the future possession of the article or articles so embraced in or covered by such contract or agreement, and said party shall thereupon make, and file with such collector, an affidavit stating by whom the said article or articles were owned at the time said contract or agreement was made, and, if affiant was not at that time such owner, whether at the time of making such contract or agreement affiant was entitled to the right to the future possession of said article or articles, and how such right was acquired. Such affidavit shall also state the warehouse, elevator, or other place where said article or articles are stored, or, if the same be then in the possession of a vessel, railroad, or other carrier for transportation, the name of such vessel, railroad, or carrier, and the number and date of each separate bill of lading or receipt issued by such vessel, railroad, or carrier therefor, and the amount or quantity of such article or articles called for by such bill of lading or receipt; and such affidavit shall further state the amount or quantity of other articles of the kind embraced in and covered by such contract or agreement which said affiant is then the owner of, or entitled to the possession of, and any and all contracts or agreements which affiant may have made, and which are then outstanding and remaining uncanceled, for the sale and future delivery of any such article or articles of such kind. And said party is further required if demanded by such collector, to exhibit to the collector the original receipt of the warehouse or elevator where the aforesaid article or articles are then stored, or the bill of lading or receipt of the vessel, railroad, or other carrier having possession of said article or articles for transportation. And in case said party shall fail or refuse to make and file with the collector the said affidavit when so required, or shall fail or refuse to exhibit the said warehouse or elevator receipt or said bill of lading, when so demanded, such failure or refusal shall constitute and be deemed and held to be prima facie evidence than the contract or agreement so made by said party was a "futures" contract or agreement as described and defined in section 2 of this act, and said party shall thereupon become liable and be required to pay to said collector upon the article or articles which are the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contract or agreement, the amount or amounts of special taxes imposed and required by section 4 of this act to be paid for and upon an article or articles of the same kind when sold under any "futures" contract or agreement; and if when such contract was made, the party making the same was not authorized, by a certificate issued to him under the provisions of section 5 of this act, to make "futures," contracts, or agreements, then said party shall also become liable and be required to pay the further sum of $1,000 prescribed by said section 5 of this act as a license fee for conducting the business of dealer in "futures."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WHITE. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to object to the amendment being carried over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not feel that the bill should be postponed. It has already been put over once on account of the absence of the Senator from Virginia. If there are any Senators prepared to go on with the discussion, of course I have no objection to the amendment going over further, but I do not feel that the day should be lost by having the amendment go over.

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator from Minnesota understand that the Senator from Virginia is absent on official duty and the nature of the duty on which he is absent?

Mr. WASHBURN. Certainly, I understand it.

Mr. WHITE. Notwithstanding that, the Senator makes objection. Then I ask——

Mr. WASHBURN. Of course, when it is put on that ground I shall not object to the amendment going over. I recognize the courtesies of the Senate, especially on an occasion like the one on which the Senator from Virginia is engaged. At the same time I hardly think it is a fair way of dealing to have the discussion put over on a pretext of that kind. I shall not object under the circumstances to the amendment going over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is withdrawn, and the amendment will lie over.

Mr. WASHBURN. I suppose the reading of the bill can proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read at length. There are no pending amendments. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. VILAS. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. I move to amend section 2, after line 15, by inserting the following words:

And does not in good faith intend to purchase and deliver the articles contracted to be sold and delivered according to the terms and requirements of such contract.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, it will be observed at once that the amendment proposes to distinguish, in accordance with some discussion which passed on the floor a few days since, those contracts which are undeniably legitimate, supported by the laws of every State and by a universal consensus of judicial opinion from those which are open to criticism and have sometimes been denominated on this floor as gambling contracts.

To state the proposition is to state all that I desire to say in support of it at this time. It will be observed that instead of drawing the line by the words of the amendment rigorously for the class of contracts stigmatized as gambling, I have drawn it most favorably to include them, so that in order that futures should be recognized as legitimate under the bill it will be necessary that it should be understood, or shown perhaps, that there was an intention in good faith to go into the market and purchase the articles for delivery. I do not see how the amendment can be justly objected to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

Mr. WOLCOTT. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to have the amendment printed and go over until to-morrow so that I may consider it a little further. My impression is, from what I understand from the Senator from Wisconsin, that the effect of it would be to absolutely destroy the force and effect of the bill, but before there is any vote upon it I should like to have time to consider it a little further and give Senators an opportunity to consider it further. I ask that the amendment be printed and go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado to withdraw his demand for the yeas and nays if the amendment is to go over.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado withdraws his demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS. As the two amendments are going over to a future day, I ask the Senator from Minnesota if we may not devote the remainder of the day to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. WASHBURN. I understand there are several Senators who desire to speak on this measure, and I see no reason why they should not go on this afternoon.

Mr. HARRIS. I think there are several Senators who desire to debate the bill, but it seems that no one is now ready to take the floor or proposes to do so. That being the case—of course I shall make no motion—I simply ask the Senator from Minnesota if we may not devote the remainder of the day to the Calendar under Rule VIII, in view of the fact that the two pending amendments have gone over.

Mr. WASHBURN. Senators have had about a year's time to prepare themselves on this question, and I hope the debate will be continued this afternoon.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of business on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WASHBURN. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] to my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH], and I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my own vote.

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired on the bill and amendments with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], but I have the right to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], but I am satisfied that if he were present he would vote "nay." I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. GRAY (after having voted in the affirmative). When I voted just now I overlooked the fact of my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] on the bill, and therefore do not vote on the pending question.

Mr. GORDON. I have just been informed that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] if here would vote "nay." I therefore feel at liberty to record my vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—9.

Dixon,	Hoar,	Mills,	Vilas,
Hill,	McMillan,	Palmer,	White.
Hiscock,

NAYS—36.

Allison,	Dubois,	Jones of Ark.	Ransom,
Berry,	Frye,	Kyle,	Sawyer,
Butler,	Gallinger,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Call,	George,	Morgan,	Shoup,
Carey,	Gordon,	Pasco,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hale,	Pettigrew,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Proctor,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hunton,	Pugh,	Washburn,
Dawes,	Irby,	Quay,	Wilson.

NOT VOTING—41.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Jones of Nev.	Stanford,
Allen,	Davis,	McPherson,	Stewart.
Bate,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Stockbridge,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Blodgett,	Felton,	Paddock,	Vest,
Brice,	Gibson,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Perkins,	Warren,
Carlisle,	Gray,	Platt,	Wolcott.
Casey,	Harris,	Power,
Colquitt,	Hawley,	Sanders,
Cullom,	Higgins,	Squire,

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN. Upon a little further consideration I am satisfied as to the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], and I withdraw my request to have it go over until to-morrow and be printed. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Minnesota is not in favor of the amendment?

Mr. WASHBURN. I am not in favor of it because it would absolutely destroy the force of the bill.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to know how the amendment would destroy the force of the bill when it would only provide for contracts that are unquestionably legal and proper.

Mr. WASHBURN. It is a provision that would surely be evaded. Where it comes to the question of delivery it is as certain of evasion as any provision which could be put in the bill. I regard it as absolutely disastrous to the effect of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WHITE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 15, after the word "thereof," insert "and does not in good faith intend to purchase and deliver the articles contracted to be sold and delivered according to the terms and requirements of such contract;" so as to read:

That for the purposes of this act the word "futures" shall be understood to mean any contract or agreement whereby a party contracts or agrees to sell and deliver to another or others at a future time, or within a designated period, any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act, when at the time of making such contract or agreement the party so contracting or agreeing to sell and make such delivery, or the party for whom he acts as agent, broker, or employé in making such contract or agreement, is not the owner of the article or articles so contracted or agreed to be sold and delivered, or has not theretofore acquired by purchase and is not then entitled to the right to the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner thereof and does not in good faith intend to purchase and deliver the articles contracted to be sold and delivered according to the terms and requirements of such contract.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I do not think the full scope of the amendment is understood. Under all the judicial opinions now, the rulings of all the State courts and of the Supreme Court of the United States, where a contract for the future delivery of property is made that contract is a valid contract unless proof be made that both the parties to the contract did not intend to deliver. In other words, the contract is a valid contract and can be enforced unless the party assailing the contract makes proof not that one or the other but that both of the parties never intended to deliver. That is the present law as adjudicated by all the cases.

The amendment does not go anything like as far as the adjudicated cases. The amendment makes the contract valid provided the seller bona fide and actually intends to deliver; in other words, where it is a future contract, not the intention of both parties is necessary to an invalidity of the contract, but if the seller has not the actual and bona fide intention to buy and deliver then the contract is null. As the section makes future contracts null and makes this an exceptional case, it puts the burden upon the seller to show those facts.

I certainly do not understand that there would be any possibility of evading such a provision. I certainly do not understand that the objection of the Senator from Minnesota has any force as applied to this contract. Under the law as it now stands the burden is on the party attaching the contract, and the burden is on him not only to show it as to one party, but to show it as to both, whilst under the amendment the burden is on the seller of the property for future delivery to show, before the contract can become valid, that he had a bona fide intention to buy and actually deliver the property under the contract. I can not for the life of me see how the statement of the Senator from Minnesota is accurate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I suppose I ought to beg the pardon of the Senate for obtruding upon it any further observations on the bill, but as the amendment if adopted would utterly destroy the bill, as the measure would be utterly worthless, I feel it incumbent on me to say a word or two in reference to it.

I should like to call the attention of Senators to an established fact in the testimony which has been taken in this case. What is called the future business of this country, so far as cotton is concerned, amounts to about 40,000,000 bales per year, taking the two exchanges of New Orleans and New York together. I have not my memoranda before me, and I speak in general terms. I have the exact amount of deliveries both in New Orleans and New York, but not anticipating a debate this morning, I have not the memoranda before me. I will state, however, that not more than 270,000 bales were delivered in the year 1890–'91 in New York and not more than 13,500 bales were delivered in the city of New Orleans. So we are confronted with the fact in the beginning that as to that year about 36,000,000 bales of cotton were sold on future delivery, and less than 300,000 bales were delivered.

There is another point to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. With a crop of 9,000,000 bales, taking not only that which was sold and delivered in the United States, but all that was exported to Europe and dealt with in the three exchanges there—Liverpool, Havre, and Bremen—taking all this together, without making any deduction for cotton which was exported, more than 4 bales to 1 of all the actual crop were sold. So it was impossible that there should have been a delivery; and, furthermore, it was impossible that the intelligent men engaged in these dealings should have contemplated that delivery should be made.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the great fact established by the evidence in this case, that four or five bales of cotton in the two exchanges of New York and New Orleans (leaving out the sales in Liverpool, Havre, and Bremen), were sold to one bale of cotton produced.

Now, I come to the next point. It is a remarkable fact, and I desire to call the attention of the Senate especially to it, that notwithstanding this large deficiency on the part of the crop to meet sales of "futures," nearly every man who was examined from the New York Exchange and from the New Orleans Exchange testified before the committee that every single bale of cotton of the 36,000,000 bales thus sold was sold under the contemplation of actual delivery.

Now, let us stop and mark the point there. If these honest and intelligent men (and I admit they are both honest and intelligent) could so warp their judgments, if they could so convince themselves as to a mere figment of the brain being a solid fact, then if we adopt the amendment how shall we ever be enabled to enforce the bill? They will all say, as they have said, that every single transaction was based upon the contemplation of an actual delivery.

Mr. President, I now go one step further. Having shown to the Senate that if the amendment is adopted it will be utterly impossible ever to enforce the bill effectually, and for that reason it ought to be voted down; now another point. Senators who advocate the amendment seem to think that Congress in suppressing this great evil ought not to touch a transaction which may be valid by the law of a State. It is well-settled constitutional law—settled by John Marshall and reiterated again and again by the decisions of the Supreme Court—that notwithstanding the transaction or the thing prohibited by Congress may be upheld by State law, if in fact the transaction be an interference with interstate or foreign commerce it is within the competency of Congress to make a regulation annulling that which is good under the State law. Though I did not intend to do it this morning, I believe I will read something from Chief Justice Marshall on that subject. Speaking of inspection and quarantine laws, Mr. Marshall, in Gibbons vs. Ogden, said:

> No direct general power over these objects is granted to Congress; and, consequently, they remain subject to State legislation. If the legislative power of the Union can reach them, it must be for national purposes; it must be where the power is expressly given for a special purpose, or is clearly incidental to some power which is expressly given.

Now, I call the attention of the Senate to the gist of the judgment given by Judge Marshall:

> It is obvious that the Government of the Union, in the exercise of its express powers, that, for example, of regulating commerce with foreign nations and among the States, may use means that may also be employed by a State, in the exercise of its acknowledged power; that, for example, of regulating commerce within the States.

So, if we establish the fact, as I think it has been abundantly established in this debate, that the bill is a regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, it makes no difference that in passing an effectual law upon the subject we are compelled to exercise a power and do a thing which otherwise would be within the jurisdiction of the States, for the reason that wherever Congress has a power delegated to it it has the delegation made in full and perfect terms. Wherever Congress has a power it may exercise it fully and completely, notwithstanding that in the exercise of the power it may do something which is in contravention of a State law upon the subject. That is settled. So the point made by the Senator from Louisiana that there are certain contracts which the bill condemns which are valid by the State laws is no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. I did not address the argument, in the few remarks I submitted, to the question of power. I was addressing it to the question of expediency.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; we will go on, then, with the question of expediency. I have answered that in the first part of my argument. If you accept the evidence, you will, under the view which these men have sworn to, never be able to bring any contract whatever within the operation of this bill. I think I may go a little further on that, and when I have done so I will close.

I mean now to say, and I challenge contradiction, that every single contract for futures made in the Cotton Exchange of New York, by the rules of that exchange—and every one of them is made subject to the rules of that exchange—is a gambling transaction. I make that out, Mr. President, by a very short statement of the rules of that body.

In the first place, as is well known and I read here some days ago, the form of the contract established by the New York Exchange as well as the New Orleans Exchange requires that every contract for futures shall be made in specific form, which is set out, and lest there should be some means of escape it is further enacted in the rules of the Exchange, that when the contract is verbal it shall be understood to have been made in the form prescribed by the rules and by-laws of the exchange.

What next? When an outsider, who is not a member of the exchange, gives an order to a member of the exchange to buy or sell futures for him, he is required to give it in a form which I will read to the Senate. I read from rule 1 of the New York Cotton Exchange:

> Every order, given to a member of the New York Cotton Exchange, to buy or sell a contract for the future delivery of cotton as agent or broker of the party giving the order, shall be in the following form.

Now I will read the form:

> Subject to the rules and by-laws of the New York Cotton Exchange, make for my account, and as often as cancelled, replace a contract for the sale [purchase] of 100 bales of cotton deliverable [receivable] in—
> A named month.

So not only the members of the exchange are bound by the rules, but every citizen of the United States before he can give an order to a member of that exchange to buy or sell for him—remember he can not do that himself unless he is a member of the exchange—must himself submit in writing that his contract shall be subject to the rules and orders of the New York Cotton Exchange. That brings every transaction within the rules of the New York Cotton Exchange.

I have a case before me from a very respectable court, the supreme court of the State of Illinois, to wit, the case of Lyon & Co. vs. Culbertson, Blair & Co., which is in print. I shall not read the case to the Senate, but I assert that the syllabus made by the reporter, which I shall now read to the Senate, is a correct statement of the decision of the court.

> A contract for the sale of wheat in store, to be delivered at a future time, which requires the parties to put up margins as security, and provides that, if either party fails, on notice, to put up further margins according to the market price, the other may treat the contract as filled immediately, and recover the difference between the contract and market price, without offering to perform on his part, or showing an ability to perform, is illegal and void, as having a pernicious tendency.

In that case, I might explain to the Senate, there was a contract made for future delivery of wheat in the Chicago Exchange, and the condemnation of the contract came from a rule of the exchange in Chicago, which is inserted in the report. Now, let us see if the New York Exchange has not a similar rule:

> If any party fails to deposit any margin called for in accordance with the contract and rule 3 the other party may close the contract at his option by giving written notice of his decision to do so. The party in default shall then account to the other party for the difference between the contract price and the average quotations of the cotton exchange for that day for like deliveries, with an allowance against the defaulting party of .02 cents per pound.

If that be good law, and I believe it is, this provision of the rules of the New York Cotton Exchange, which allows men who have traded and when the opposite party has failed to put up the margin, as required, to treat the contract as at an end and recover the difference, stamps every contract made in the New York Cotton Exchange as a gambling transaction. Is there any answer to that?

So, sir, I object to this amendment on two grounds: First, if there be any contracts which are legal and valid according to the laws of the State, they constitute, as I understand the Senator from Louisiana now to admit, no valid objection in a constitutional point of view to the passage of the bill; next, if we adopt it, taking this book, to which I invite the attention of Senators, containing the reports of the Senate and the House committees and the evidence taken, we shall find that nearly every one of these dealers representing these exchanges, notwithstanding the facts to which I have alluded, notwithstanding the provisions to which I have called the attention of the Senate, state that these contracts contemplate actual delivery, and if you will put the provision on the bill, I should like to see how you could enforce any law we might pass upon the subject. Admitting the contracts to be valid, it constitutes an insuperable objection, and makes the bill utterly futile; but, in addition to that, under the rules of the New York Cotton Exchange, not a single contract made there is free from the taint of illegality on the ground of its being a gambling contract.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator from Mississippi sits down I wish to put to him a question in reference to his citation of Gibbons vs. Ogden. I do not speak now of interference with national instrumentalities of government, like license laws or agencies of government. Does the Senator conceive that there is any transaction performed in the course of State commerce which may be made illegal and punishable by an act of Congress as an interference with commerce, international or interstate, which is not equally illegal as an interference with international or State commerce without the act of Congress?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know that I exactly comprehend the question of the Senator, but I will state that there are two ways in which an act may be an obstruction to interstate or foreign commerce. I do not want to go into that to-day largely, but I will show, as I have stated on a former occasion, that Congress, under its power to regulate commerce, has solely the power to determine what is and what is not a proper regulation of commerce.

It may happen that the States may exercise certain powers, which may to some extent interfere with interstate and foreign commerce, not because they are the exercise of that power, but because in the exercise of a police power they may do something which interferes with it, in the absence of regulation by Congress; yet when Congress speaks that regulation falls. An instance of that is found in the case of Gilman vs. The Mayor of Philadelphia, where a bridge was erected across the Schuylkill River, which interfered with the navigation of the river, was held to be a proper exercise of State power until Congress acted. So I believe in the case of Blackbird Creek Marsh Company similar doctrine was held. It is true, therefore, that certain things may be done under the authority of a State which, in the absence of regulation by Congress, may be good and valid; yet when Congress acts they cease to be good and valid.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator has not answered the question which I proposed to him, as I understand him. I was not speaking of the limits of affirmative legislation by a State to authorize acts, which, until Congress prohibited them, should be treated as valid. I was not speaking of that class of acts, whether attempted to be justified under State legislation or not, which are invalid as being obstructions to national commerce, foreign or interstate. I was speaking of those transactions done by individual citizens which are interferences with foreign commerce. For instance, the obstruction by a citizen of the entry into this country of persons from abroad, or the obstruction by a citizen of the bringing of goods into this country by persons from abroad, or the doing of acts like those, which have been held to be illegal by the Supreme Court as being in the nature of immoral contracts or contracts contrary to public policy, which, being performed in regard to foreign commerce, would be held void by national authority without an act of Congress, and which also might be punished with it.

What I want to know is, if the Senator can conceive of any act which can be done by a citizen which would not be held void by the courts as contrary to public policy or as immoral or as illegal or as obstructing national commerce, which can be avoided by an act of Congress? In other words, can the Senator conceive of a case where a court would say such an act is perfectly lawful and harmless notwithstanding it interferes with foreign commerce if there was not any act of Congress? Where the act of Congress simply declares the fact to be otherwise, would that alter the judgment of the court?

Mr. GEORGE. There are numerous acts which may be done by private citizens which would be proper and lawful in themselves, and which Congress may declare unlawful in the regulation of interstate commerce. In the interstate commerce law Congress denounces as illegal and as an interference with interstate commerce, a contract for the pooling of freights between independent and competing lines.

Mr. HOAR. That was an act in interstate commerce and not in State commerce.

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; I do not want to go into that, but I will undertake to show that the pooling referred not only to freights earned in interstate commerce, but to all freights, those earned in interstate and also those earned in commerce purely internal. That is a case of contract. Take another case——

Mr. HOAR rose.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator will pardon me a moment.

Mr. HOAR. I want to call the Senator's attention to the particular point he is leaving, but I will not interrupt him.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator asked me to point out acts which citizens may lawfully do under the State law and which Congress may condemn in the exercise of its power to regulate interstate commerce. I should suppose that any citizen has a natural right to make a steamboat boiler under the common law and under the laws of the State—I do not know of a single State which prohibits him—out of any kind of iron which he may see proper to use; and yet Congress has said that that steamboat boiler shall only be made out of a specific kind of iron. Is not that an answer to the Senator? There is an act of a private citizen in the pursuit of his private business which he may lawfully do according to the State law, and yet he is prohibited from doing it by an act of Congress.

I take it that those two instances answer the objection made by the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi answers my question by stating cases which are acts done by a citizen in relation to national commerce. His last answer to my question would have been a parallel one if Congress had undertaken to prohibit the entire manufacture of steamboat boilers, except of a particular pattern, although they were to be used exclusively in plying on a river within the limits of a single State and never used for the transportation of passengers or freight from State to State. So of the first illustration of the Senator in regard to pooling.

Does the Senator claim in regard to either of his illustrations that Congress could have said because of the pooling of two railroads both leading from Boston to Worcester in Massachusetts, and prohibited by their charter from carrying passengers or freight, that it would go any further; that because that was an evil example to mankind and induced railroads engaged in international commerce to follow their example and do it there, they could prohibit the pooling by State corporations? Does the Senator from Mississippi conceive that it would be in the power of Congress to pass an act regulating all the transactions of the street railways of the city of Worcester, Mass., because the forming of the gambling habit and speculating in those stocks was likely to establish habits of gambling and speculation in regard to stocks of the railroads leading from Chicago to San Francisco?

This is not the case which the Senator and the Senate are now dealing with, of Congress having the right to determine that a bridge over a particular creek or river which is navigable, like that which the Senator from Mississippi cited in his speech at the last session, may lawfully be erected, and of reconciling the claims of the local traffic across the bridge and the national traffic under it on the water. That, of course, is within the jurisdiction of Congress. Nobody will question that; but it is the case of an attempt to say that a bet as to what is to be the future price of a bushel of wheat raised in Iowa, garnered in Iowa, delivered in Iowa, paid for in Iowa, is to be three months hence, shall be illegal because the effect of the existence of that kind of transaction is an evil example in foreign commerce, or because that wheat, after that transaction has ceased to operate upon it, may some time or other become the subject of foreign commerce, and that its price may be rendered unsteady or may be raised or depressed when it gets into the markets of the world because of this transaction? That is the step which the Senator from Mississippi is endeavoring to take, as I understand, and that is the class of transactions to which my question relates.

I do not propose at this moment to go into the general objections to this bill. I wish to say a word or two about it, perhaps to-morrow, if it shall then be before the Senate. What I have to say of it now is, that if the doctrine which the Senator from Mississippi seeks to establish here be sound and constitutional, in the first place, there is not a transaction of mankind which it is not within the constitutional authority of Congress to regulate, unless it come within the direct prohibition of what we may call the bill of rights, or unless it come within the direct affirmative action of the powers of the States.

There is no other transaction which is not within the jurisdiction of Congress. You may suppress the habit of private gambling, because gamblers do not raise in equal abundance the products which are the subject of foreign commerce. You may make laws punishing idleness, because the prevalence of idleness in any State certainly diminishes the contributions of that State to the commerce of the country and of the world, and so on. There is not a transaction of life which can not be shown to have as direct control and effect in regard to the commerce of this country, if it be an evil and demoralizing transaction of life, as this particular evil of purely State transactions, which is suggested by the honorable Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, a word or two only, because I do not want to be misunderstood.

Whoever will do the Senator from Massachusetts and myself the honor to read the colloquy which has occurred between us to-day will discover that the first question propounded to me by the Senator has been fully answered, and he will also discover that the Senator was compelled to accept that answer, and has changed his ground of inquiry.

The Senator seems to conclude that I contend for the proposition that any species of gambling, because it may interfere with the industry and the ordinary vocations of men, may be denounced by Congress as an interference with interstate and foreign commerce. If the Senator had been present at the last session of Congress when this matter was fully discussed, he would have discovered that I stated distinctly that that was not my position. The Senator has not read, I fear, the evidence given before the Senate committee and the House committee by the men who represent those exchanges. I wish to call his attention and the attention of the Senate to that which is distinctly proven by the representatives of those exchanges, and which, when proven, brings this case out of the category supposed by the Senator.

I did admit that Congress can not punish gambling merely because it is gambling; but the witnesses all testified that the future system, so far as cotton is concerned—and I am speaking about nothing else, leaving it to my friends from the Northwest to speak about wheat—has been so interwoven and interlocked—I use the very language of the witnesses—with the commerce in cotton, that if we destroy it we disorganize the whole cotton trade.

I submit to the candid judgment of the Senator and the Senate, that when a business has grown up which has been so interlocked and so interwoven with interstate and foreign commerce that you can not touch it without disorganizing the whole trade, if that does not bring it within the competence of Congress to say whether that interlocking and that interweaving is not an obstruction to commerce. I went into all that six months ago; I went into it again a few days ago, and I showed that this interlocking and this interweaving of this gambling in futures affected the price of cotton, and made it higher to the consumer and lower to the producer.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I have no disposition to enter into the colloquy between these two professional giants; but there is a view of this amendment—and I propose to confine myself to it—that I think worthy of consideration.

The first section of the bill defines one class of options. The second section of the bill includes options and what are now recognized as legitimate transactions, sales in good faith for future delivery. The object of this amendment is to eliminate from the section all uncertainty and to leave it but the mere supplement of the first section. Both sections after this amendment is adopted will refer to options alone, transactions which do not necessarily imply future delivery.

The bill as it stands purports to prohibit all sales for future delivery, as well those which are to be executed between the United States and foreign countries and those which are made in one State to be executed in another, as those which are to be made in a State and to be executed in the State where the contract was made.

It is an objection to any statute that it comprehends too much. Suppose this bill should be limited alone in the manner proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. Then it would leave the law as it is, that all contracts made in good faith which contemplate an actual delivery of the thing sold, would be legitimate. All contracts for future delivery which are in the form of future delivery, which contemplate a mere adjustment between the differences in the values, the differences between the day of the contract and the date fixed for its execution, would still remain prohibited by the bill.

I might grant, if my legal perceptions were as acute as those of the Senator on my left [Mr. GEORGE], that futures, as they are termed, made in one State to be executed in another or futures made in the United States to be executed abroad, would be within the constitutional power of Congress; but what can be said of contracts made in a State to be executed in the same State? Obviously they are included within the terms of this bill.

It is a fact which I think exists—it is the law of Illinois, and I think it is the law of Indiana, probably of most of the Western States, and probably of Mississippi—that contracts payable in property, either specific property or in property generally, are recognized in the laws of Illinois and other States as promissory notes, negotiable as notes payable in money. They are not promissory notes according to the law merchant; but in Illinois a note may be executed at a date to be made payable in the future in property. Such a note by our statute is negotiable by indorsement. That note may be transferred from hand to hand or transferred by indorsement; it may be discharged in any chattel property, or it may be made payable in wheat.

I have known many such notes to be made, passed from hand to hand, given by persons who might or might not at the time be the owners of wheat, with the legal effect of the paper that the note might be discharged at maturity in wheat at its market value. That is usually the language of these notes. I think the law of Indiana and of other States sanctions such notes. I know the law of Illinois does.

Mr. GRAY. How do they read?

Mr. PALMER. I think I might furnish one if I had permission to go to my room; but they read in this manner: "Six months after date I promise to pay to John M. Palmer $100 in property at cash prices." That is the form I have in my mind.

Mr. COKE. I will suggest to the Senator that suits may be brought for the collection of such notes.

Mr. PALMER. Yes, I have brought suits and defended them on such notes, and the value of the property at the time fixed for delivery was the measure of damages.

I think it will not be denied that if this bill should pass no citizen of Illinois would be permitted to make or accept a note like that unless he has first obtained a license to deal in options, although it may be made in the neighborhood where he lives, payable at the steam mill, for I think I can recollect the simple habits of old times when it was often done and such contracts were made with the miller.

I have in early times, when money was scarcer than now, seen men borrow money of those who might thereafter desire to acquire property. In that case the note was given, and such notes were held to be negotiable and payable in anything the party might acquire before the day of payment; or if there was no delivery the measure of damages would be the number of dollars mentioned in the note at the time fixed for its payment. Such a transaction would be impossible if this bill passes, unless the farmer who gives the note should first obtain a license to deal in options.

Mr. GEORGE. Farmers are excepted.

Mr. PALMER. I ask pardon. I believe the farmers are for some reason excepted. There are men who execute such notes who as a matter of fact do not own property, but hope to acquire it. Indeed, it is a recognized transaction in Illinois. Every Senator on this floor can in his own imagination supply illustrations quite sufficient to reach the point I have in view. While the farmer may be excepted and while the miller may be excepted, which I believe is the fact in this case, he may buy for future delivery. I suppose the manufacturer, a miller being a manufacturer of flour, would have a right to buy for the use of his mill. I suppose that to be the fair interpretation of this bill. But a merchant who seeks to collect from a class of men debts, if you will, or sells them goods, is compelled to make some such arrangement. I grant that there are cases which are excepted from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. GRAY. I wish to ask the Senator a question at that point. I am interested in the history he is giving us of the traffic of early and simpler times. Suppose a man had labored on the farm of another for a year upon a contract to receive one hundred or one hundred and fifty or two hundred bushels of wheat, and he should, in the exigeney which might be upon him, seek to make one of those promissory notes to deliver wheat to his creditor, the person who wished to derive the means of sustenance from him, would he be within the exception of this bill?

Mr. PALMER. I doubt it, but I must refer questions of that kind to Senators who have studied this bill from a friendly standpoint. It seems to me not. I might give an illustration which might be somewhat difficult, because it would be a personal one. A good many years ago I had a brother to whom I was very much attached, and I assisted him in buying a little farm near the town in which I lived. It was necessary for him to incur a debt for the purpose. I became security. Sometimes in Illinois we were very successful with our crops. My brother sowed the whole tract of land in wheat.

Full of anticipation, full of expectation of the product of his harvest, he gave a note payable in wheat on the 1st of September of the following year. The wheat was of a very choice variety. I became his surety for the seed. It was sowed; but from the casualties which attend upon the life of a farmer he did not raise a bushel of wheat. I remember that I paid the cash for the wheat at the stipulated price. Now, what would be the condition of a citizen under these circumstances who, not having sown the wheat yet, but expecting a crop, gives a note payable in wheat, and the crop fails? Would he be a dealer in futures? Would he require a license or not under this bill?

Mr. President, the difficulty is that the bill goes into the minutest relations of commercial life; it covers everything. Instead of being carefully guarded so as to meet the views of the Senator from Mississippi, it goes into all the transactions of life, between all the persons in the country; it requires a license to deal in options or futures from anybody and everybody not within the exception of the law who makes a contract.

Now, I come back to the point, can a law be defended which comprehends so much? Concede that the Senator is right, that Congress may take hold of an immoral traffic, and because that immorality diminishes that material for interstate commerce or because that business renders the transactions between foreign countries and the United States uncertain and confused, can it be claimed upon any principle that it is wise or constitutional to subject those who are engaged in the ordinary transactions of life, where the idea of gambling occurs to no one, where the parties expect to deliver, not having the property now, but expect to acquire it in lawful market, to the requirements of this proposed law on the pretense that it is immoral or that it interferes with foreign commerce? It might as well be held that if you withhold a gallon of water from the Mississippi River, the mighty channel of Northwestern commerce, you would interrupt foreign commerce, as to insist upon this view of the case.

Mr. WHITE. Before the Senator from Illinois takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. I wish to ask him whether, in the line of his argument, the necessary effect of this bill is not to strike down the farmer, to compel the farmer to become a gambler, and deprive him of the benefit of the rise in the market? For instance, the transaction to which the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has referred overwhelmingly shows that the merchant who advances to the farmer money, guaranteeing that the farmer shall ship him a certain quantity of the crop, is now invariably in the habit, in order to secure the price which he is willing to take, to sell for future delivery for his own account the quantity of the product which the farmer has agreed to deliver.

Under this bill can he do that? No. Now, I ask the Senator how he can do it under the bill? He can only do it under the bill by exacting from the farmer at the time a transfer of the farmer's rights to sell in the farmer's name the farmer's cotton or the farmer's wheat. Therefore the necessary effect of the bill is to compel every farmer, before he gets to the merchant, to enter into the future market and to sell for his own account all his crop eo instanti.

Mr. PALMER. I have no doubt of the soundness of the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana; but I think it is especially to be deplored that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], who is eager, I have no doubt, that the bill shall be passed, and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who so forcibly defines the evils which grow out of the transactions he describes, have not had it in their minds in some way to exclude from the operation of the bill transactions entirely within the States. They no doubt might include some very large transactions, but in the sweeping provisions of this bill they include the most minute transactions. I take it upon myself to say that with a fair construction of this bill as it reads no sale for future delivery can be made under the bill unless it is made by or to one of the excepted classes in the bill. There is an extensive class of transactions not included in the bill, miniature sales for future delivery.

I live in an agricultural portion of Illinois; I have spent my life there, and am familiar with the operations among those people, and I venture to say that if this bill passes in its present form, there is not a man within the range of my acquaintance—I speak, of course, of men who act—who will not at some time bring himself within the letter of the law and become subject to its penalties.

I am treating the bill now as a prohibitory law. I am not at present discussing it in that attitude which I think, as I do not use the language I intended—I am not discussing it as the mere fraud that it is, an attempt to use the revenue powers of the Government as a means of prohibition, but I am insisting that it does prohibit; that it is a bill of pains and penalties, and that within its general terms, if it passes without some careful restrictions, it will bring within its net a numerous class of persons, so numerous that unless we are saved by the mercy of some mere executive officers who will refuse to enforce the law against transactions of this sort, it will produce an amount of mischief which is incalculable. It will bring into our neighborhoods, into our villages, detectives, spies, and informers, and it will, like some of the other laws passed by Congress, bring within its meshes a class of helpless people who will have no means of self-defense.

Mr. President, I have to say that this is the only view I desire to consider. I ask the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Mississippi, whatever may be the merit in the objects of the bill, while it may be wise to reach this powerful organization in New York and New Orleans and to bridle that power, is it wise for the sake of reaching that class of men to enact a law which may tell upon the very people whom it is intended to benefit? No man will dare make a sale for future delivery if this bill passes, unless he owns property in some of the particulars mentioned in the bill. I would not take a note from a friend payable in property without warning him of the danger of this law. I would say to him you can not promise, because you have neither the property now nor have you a contract under which you are to receive it.

It is one of the blessings of the bill that it comprehends so little. If it comprehended everything, all transactions, it would be worse than a pestilence, it would be intolerable; but it is limited, and one of its advantages is that it is limited to so few objects.

That is all I mean to say at present. I do intend in the future to test the question whether this is a revenue measure or whether it is a bill simply of pains and penalties, with the revenue aspect taken upon itself in order to deceive, in order to render it impossible for the Supreme Court to see what the truth is.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say in addition to what the Senator from Illinois has said—I do not know but what he has said the same thing—that this bill as drawn punishes under a severe penalty the ordinary contract by a farmer letting his land on shares.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to only a part of what has been suggested by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] in objection to this amendment, because I think, waiving for the time being the constitutional question, it does not constitute the objection which he contends for or seems to suppose.

I do not wish to be considered in proposing this amendment to be acting in an attitude of unreasonable or obstructive hostility to this bill. I have stated the objections upon which I stand in my opposition to it, but if the bill shall be passed by there being a majority of the Senate who think it within constitutional power to enact such a law, it certainly ought, and its friends should recognize that it certainly ought, to be limited so as to be the least injurious, the least destructive to the established methods of business which it is possible it can be and reach its objects.

It is said that if this amendment shall be adopted the bill will fail to reach its objects. Why should it be so? Its objects are iniquitous contracts, not lawful contracts. In order that there should be less possibility of objection to this amendment on that score, I so wrote it as that in order to put this exception in the seller must show in good faith an intention to obtain and deliver the articles contracted for. That is a good deal further, as the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] well put it, than the laws of the States now require. The answer which the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] makes to that is this: First, he says there are four bales or five bales of cotton sold on the exchange for one bale of cotton which actually exists. That is true, as I understand the facts, but I think it is true by reason of a circumstance which the distinguished Senator from Mississippi will himself acknowledge and admit to be operative to that result. If it were not for the board of trade or the cotton exchange the farmer would, I suppose, sell to A B, A B would sell to C D, and C D would sell to E F, and finally it would reach the consumer or the miller who will manufacture it.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me there just for a moment?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. If the contract of the farmer is merely transferred from A B to C D and from C D to E F, and so on—if that be the transaction, there is nothing in the bill which prohibits a bona fide contract in the beginning being transferred and assigned an indefinite number of times, if necessary.

Mr. VILAS. I recognize that; but the point I am drawing attention to is, that without the cotton exchange there would be one sale after another between the original producer and the mill manufacturer where the cotton is spun. If you were to take those several sales and bring them all together, you would have therefore 2, 3, 4, or 5 bales of cotton sold to only one bale of cotton in existence. That is just what the cotton exchange does, for the reason that by the establishment of the cotton exchange all the transactions in the market between the farmer and the manufacturer are brought on to one or two boards. Thus this apparent multiplication of cotton is not a real multiplication of fictitious and unfair trades.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to read just one sentence from the evidence on that subject?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Labouisse, at one time the president of the New Orleans Stock Exchange——

Mr. WHITE. He is not now.

Mr. GEORGE. He is very prominently connected with it; he is a gentleman of very high character, who was sent here by the New Orleans Cotton Exchange to represent their interests on this bill before the Senate. He testified as follows:

Senator PLATT. How many million bales are sold on the cotton exchange during the year?

Mr. LABOUISSE. I have not last year's record. I think they sold about 8,000,000 bales in New Orleans and 28,000,000 bales in New York; somewhere about that ratio; about 35,000,000 bales altogether.

Senator PLATT.—

The very question now which the Senator discusses—

So that the crop was sold about four times over?

Mr. LABOUISSE. No, sir; the crop was not sold four times over; but there was four times as much cotton sold as the crop amounted to.

Mr. VILAS. I do not see that that is any different from what I was stating. If you were to collect all the sales which might be made between the producer and the final manufacturer, who is the consumer for the time being of the raw cotton, you would have of course an apparent aggregrate of cotton sold greatly in excess of real cotton.

The point I am making is, that one of the uses of the cotton exchanges is to collect at one place all the dealings in cotton; and thus you do apparently multiply the dealings beyond the amount of real cotton, but only a part of that is, I think, fairly attributable to speculative dealings in cotton. That is what seems to me from the evidence to be the fact. I may be mistaken in regard to it, but it looks as if it were a reasonable explanation of the fact.

I admit also that very likely, by the facilities offered by the cotton exchanges, there is some increase of speculative transactions beyond what there would be if the trade were carried on by the actual purchase by a speculator of the cotton itself, and the holding of it until the market rose or until he saw fit to sell. The only point I desire to make there is, that it does not justly prove that all sales of cotton are speculative which are in excess of the actual amount of the cotton transactions in real cotton on the exchange.

The next point the learned Senator from Mississippi makes is, that upon the basis of those facts he feels himself able to assert that the trade upon the cotton exchanges is actually without the intent of delivery. If that be so, the learned Senator will observe at once that this amendment will have no relation to such transactions, and that the evidence which to him is so satisfactory that all of these transactions are not in good faith and was without the intention to deliver will be evidence that may just as fairly establish that fact to the court or to the officers charged with the inquiry as to the learned Senator or any of the rest of us. Therefore when he cites the case from Illinois it seems to me he is calling our attention to an authority which, rightly interpreted, ought to lead us more readily to adopt the amendment, for he shows by this authority certain propositions to which I give my assent.

First—

I read from the head notes or syllabus of the case of Lyon & Co. vs. Culbertson, Blair & Co., in 83 Illinois, page 33:

> Where there is a well-known usage which obtains in trade, it will be presumed that all who engage in that business where it prevails contracts with a view to it, unless they exclude the presumption by their contract. Hence, a usage may be proved to interpret the otherwise indeterminate intention of the parties and to ascertain the nature and extent of their contracts.

It is strictly within this rule of law that the Senator calls attention to the rules and regulations of the Cotton Exchange of New York as being evidence tending to show that all the contracts made upon that Cotton Exchange are within the prohibited contracts which courts will not enforce; but if that be true then this amendment does not protect them nor shelter them. The more easily you can show by the rules and regulations of the Cotton Exchange of New York that the intention not to deliver is necessarily inferable from their contract under those rules, the more certainly you exclude the transaction from the operation of the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. May I call the Senator's attention to a fact?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. The Senate has already voted down the amendment striking out the provision forbidding dealings on the exchange, and therefore the argument of the Senator from Mississippi is entirely irrelevant to the subject under discussion, because no transaction could take place on an exchange. If the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is adopted it would not refer to a transaction on an exchange, since the very section which he proposes to amend forbids even bona fide transactions on an exchange.

Mr. VILAS. The obvious additional force of the observation made by the Senator from Louisiana requires no comment.

Mr. VOORHEES. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have been a good deal in search of light on this subject. It seems to me that the point made by the Senator from Mississippi against the amendment raises the question that all of these fictitious transactions are claimed to be made with a view to actual delivery.

Mr. GEORGE. They all swear to it.

Mr. VOORHEES. They all swear to it, the Senator says. They would all come under the protection of the amendment, it seems to me. There is the troublesome point in my mind. It is stated here this afternoon—and makes a very startling impression upon my mind—that the cotton crop, for instance, has been sold more than four times, or in the better language of the gentleman from Louisiana, who was examined as a witness, four times as much has been sold as there is in existence. In every one of those sales, I understand (and if I do not understand it a right, I want to be set right), a claim has been made which would place them absolutely under the protection of the amendment. The objection I see to the amendment is that it would apply to fictitious sales just as much as to actual sales. In other words, there is a fraudulent method of dealing going on that the amendment does not seem to reach.

Mr. PUGH. If the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, I will state that I was one of the subcommittee with the Senator now in the chair [Mr. PLATT in the chair], which took the testimony that has been reported to the Senate, and I state that the testimony shows beyond question that 90 per cent at least of the future contracts made in New York and New Orleans during the last twenty years would be protected by the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin if it were made the law.

The testimony further shows that every one of the contracts sought by the bill to be prohibited is made in good faith with intention to deliver, and the witnesses swear that in nearly every instance there was no execution of that bona fide intention to deliver by an actual delivery. So the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin comes precisely within the terms of all the contracts the witnesses testified to be bona fide with the real intent to deliver the cotton or wheat or the commodity sold. The amendment if adopted would take all the life out of the bill.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if a contract of that kind is proved by sworn testimony to be bona fide, if it is proved by sworn testimony that the commodity sold was in good faith intended to be delivered, why should it not be delivered?

Mr. PUGH. That question can be better answered by the parties to the contract than it can be answered by me. The parties to the contract have testified that one of the terms of their contract was that it was made with the bona fide intent that there was to be an actual delivery of the commodity sold, and every one of the parties to the contract declared in his testimony that there never had been or rarely had ever been an execution of the contract by an actual delivery. I do not believe a word that they testify that there ever was an intent to deliver. How could they deliver 40,000,000 bales when there were but seven or eight million bales produced?

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to ask a question? I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama why in the cases supposed by him the question of intention should not be passed upon by the court and jury in that case, as well as in many other cases?

Mr. PUGH. In every case where that issue has been made the testimony showed that the intent to deliver existed and entered into the contract; and there has not been a single case where the issue of fact was made as to whether the intent really existed, and was bona fide where the intent not to deliver had been ascertained. How can you prove the bona fides of the contract?

Mr. WHITE. I beg the Senator's pardon. There have been cases of that kind decided in my State. The Senator says there never has been such a case. The books are full of such cases. If he desires to look at reported cases I can bring a list of them here to-morrow morning in which the courts have so held.

Mr. PUGH. They have escaped my observation. If there was any contract——

Mr. WHITE. One of them is before the Senator from Wisconsin now, the case cited by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. PUGH. Such a case is very rare; it is exceptional. I know these parties themselves testified before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee that in 90 per cent of the contracts, embracing over 30,000,000 bales of cotton, the intent entered into the contract and that there was a bona fide purchase to make an actual delivery, and when the question was asked whether there had been any execution of that intent of an actual delivery they all said there had not been, and it was very rare an actual delivery had ever been made. The amount actually delivered was trifling in comparison with the amount that was actually sold.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from Wisconsin, who is always patient, will allow me, I should like to make an observation in reply to the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. The Senator from New York suggested, in a lawyer's way, that this question is referable to the courts to try what the intention of the parties is, as if it were a matter of doubt whether the men who were dealing in four bales of cotton when there was only one in existence intended in point of fact to deliver the four. The question propounded by the Senator from New York involves the further consideration that we are to try in a court of justice whether parties who are notoriously dealing with 36,000,000 bales, with 7,000,000 bales in existence in good faith intend to deliver the 36,000,000 bales.

The proposition is made for a court to inquire solemnly and deliberately into the intention of parties when here is as notorious, open, and world-wide fraud as it is possible for the human mind to conceive. It seems to me it is trifling with the English language to suggest an issue to be tried in a court of justice, taking the statement made by the Senator from Mississippi as undisputed, that the deal embraces 36,000,000 bales of cotton and there are 7,000,000 in existence. Now, where is the intention to comply? How do you try the intention? The fact is tried, and the verdict is against you before you start.

Mr. HILL. If the question has already been disposed of, of course there is no use to have a trial.

Mr. VOORHEES. I mean to say if the statement of the Senator from Mississippi is accepted that there are 36,000,000 bales of cotton sold in this country with 7,000,000 actually in existence, then the question whether men intend in good faith to deliver the 36,000,000 bales is adjudicated in all rational minds.

Mr. HILL. I suppose the cases are not to be tried by wholesale, but that every transaction will stand by itself. If the cases are as plain as the Senator from Indiana seems to suppose, there will be no difficulty in any State in the Union in having the question fairly determined, and I think it would be so determined even in the State of Indiana.

Mr. GRAY. May I have the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin to say a few words?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. It strikes me as a little bit curious that the Senator from Indiana is willing to stake the strength of his proposition on the mere statement of the fact taken upon testimony before the committee that whereas the crop of cotton amounted to about 8,000,000 bales, say, that being all the cotton in existence, there were 36,000,000 bales sold, and therefore, for that reason, and for that reason alone, all the transactions over and above the 8,000,000 bales were necessarily fictitious and fraudulent, representing not a bona fide business negotiation.

Now, let me put him a question. When I sell him 100 bushels of wheat for 100 silver dollars or 100 gold dollars (if I may be bold enough in this presence to speak of a gold dollar as a current dollar) it is an exchange of 100 gold or silver dollars for 100 bushels of wheat, and yet we know that if you sum them up every day's transactions of all the commodities which are exchanged for silver and gold dollars in this country alone would amount to many hundred times more than the number of gold and silver dollars or the dollars current in any way in the United States. Yet according to the reasoning of the Senator from Indiana this would prove that every bargain outside of the exact number of dollars which were represented in the currency was not bona fide and did not represent a real transaction.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, the colloquy which has taken place between the distinguished Senators in reference to the point I suggested sometime ago has to a considerable extent evolved a solution of the question. But I wish to call attention again to the original proposition for a moment because of the inquiry made by the distinguished and eloquent and above all things the kindly and sympathetic Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who enters into the feelings of men, with, I was about to say, an intenser appreciation, but certainly with an appreciation as intense as any man in the whole United States.

His is the same old question, how can there be 36,000,000 bales of cotton sold when there are only 9,000,000 bales produced? Let me ask his attention for another illustration of what I was suggesting to the rule and practice on the cotton exchange. A cotton spinner wishes to buy a thousand bales of cotton. He telegraphs to his broker in New York to buy him a thousand bales of cotton or to some dealer there to sell him a thousand bales of cotton.

The dealer agrees to sell. He makes a future contract. That is one. He goes to the cotton exchange at once, and to protect himself, he sells. That is two. He telegraphs to a farmer or a factor in the South for a thousand bales of cotton and gets his terms of selling it. Having made a contract with him for the purchase of the cotton, he sells against it on the Cotton Exchange in New York. So that simple transaction by the usages of trade operates as three future transactions on the Cotton Exchange of New York.

Now, what is the value of such a transaction? No one ever demonstrated that more perfectly than the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WHITE] last summer, and I did not intend to enter upon this subject. It reduces the risk of the middleman to nothing, and therefore when he is dealing between the producer and the consumer he ought to have, and is content with having, only the mere shade of a commission, a mere moderate sixteenth or something like that—I do not know the exact amount. The tables which were produced by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana were as much of a demonstration as statistics could demonstrate the point that the difference between the producer and the consumer had been reduced since the era of future dealings from something like 3 cents a pound on cotton to about 1 cent between Liverpool and the cotton-grower in Louisiana. So in that point of view, instead of its being an injury to the farmer it is an absolute benefit to the farmer, for it dispenses with the charges of the middleman. However, I did not intend to discuss that point to any great extent.

Of course the men who are thus ready on the board of trade to buy a future, or sell a future, whenever any proponent of such a bargain comes on that board, are speculators. They may lose, but if they do they lose their money and not the farmer's money. They may gain by the change of the market, it is true, but those are the considerations of the speculator. But I do not intend to be drawn into that discussion. I only ask the attention of my distinguished friend from Indiana to that idea in respect to these transactions. I only want to point out to him now that the amendment does not touch, that it does not protect a dishonest transaction, not in terms, and not in fact.

The distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] says the evidence proves to his mind that the positive affirmation under oath of men of whom at least the distinguished Senator from Mississippi said they were respectable and excellent men is false in his judgment, so obviously false that the Senate of the United States ought to rise up at once on that evidence and put its tremendous denunciation upon the business interests of this country. If that be true, can any man say he has a right to fear that the effect of that evidence will be any less obvious to the courts of this country, who will interpret this amendment and the law as it will thus stand?

We have to leave the interpretation of our laws and the carrying of them into effect finally to the courts, who will administer the penal denunciations which the distinguished Senator from Mississippi has introduced as the sanctions of his proposed substitute. They must determine that question, and if it shall be so plain then as it is to the distinguished Senator, why does the amendment operate the least ill effect? Must we so legislate here in this crusade upon the business interests of the country that courts can not inquire into an honest intention? Must the honest and legitimate purposes of trade and business be swept away in order that we may reach this evil, which was known to be an evil but a very short time ago?

I am not speaking of it as a gambling evil. To that I agree. Whatever the evil of the gambling is I am not seeking to defend; but, as I said the other day, I am striving to draw the line so that beyond all question a gambling transaction, in whatever form it shall be, will be within its prohibitions and the honest transaction, which ought to be protected, shall be safely on the other side.

Is it possible that we can declare that the cotton-spinner shall not have the right to telegraph to a dealer in New York, "I want a thousand bales of cotton sent to me," and that the dealer shall have to say, "I can not sell it to you, for I have not got it. I can get it, of course; such are my connections that I can obtain it; but I can not sell it to you. You can not make your contract for the carrying on of your mill. You must wait until I send a man down to Louisiana, or to Mississippi, or to Georgia, or wherever the cotton of the kind he wants is to be found, and get it." But the spinner says, "I can not wait; I must know what I can do, because right here at this moment I can make a most valuable contract for the delivery of manufactured cloth, and if I can not know that I am to have the material and the price at which I am to have it I can not enter into this contract." This proposed law says, "No, make your contracts after you have made your cloth," or "Make your contracts after you have bought your cotton."

That immediately imposes on the cotton spinner a risk in respect to his business which he must in turn cast back upon the cotton producer. The more risks you introduce into the conduct of business the more the weight of the charges of those risks falls upon the original producer. I believe the distinguished Senator from Mississippi will agree with me as to that. You benefit the producer when you remove the difficulties between him and the consumer, diminishing the risks of the middleman so that his charges can safely be less. The speculator goes upon the cotton exchange and proposes to buy a considerable quantity of cotton. He would be glad to make a profit of perhaps a quarter of a cent a pound on his cotton.

But suppose he were a speculator who could not buy except he bought the actual cotton, would he take the risk of buying the cotton and holding it for a rise, thinking he could obtain or expecting to obtain no more than a quarter of a cent a pound? Surely he would not. He must see a greater margin in it and in order that he may do so he must press harder on the producer.

Although it may be true that here is a species of gambling in this business it can not, it seems to me, be denied that that gambling is a thing which removes rather than adds to the weight of the middleman's transactions.

Now, there is another effect to which I wish to call attention. By reason of these speculators there are always men on the market ready to buy. All the men in the country who otherwise would, perhaps, as under former systems, be engaged in buying produce and storing it somewhere, waiting for a rise, collect at the cotton exchanges or on the produce exchanges of the country. They furnish an instantaneous market. You can go on the Board of Trade or the Chamber of Commerce in Chicago and sell wheat any day when the board is in session. You can go on the Produce Exchange of New York and sell on any day when the Produce Exchange is in session. The banks know that. They know, therefore, that the wheat and the cotton constitute instantly convertible securities upon collaterals for loans. They can lend money for the necessary operations of business upon those collaterals without a particle of hesitation.

Take one of the extensive wheat dealers in Chicago who has perhaps a hundred or a hundred and fifty elevators under his control. He buys one day wheat throughout the whole lot of those elevators. He receives a telegraphic account of the quantity which has been purchased for him. He steps on the chamber of commerce and sells the next day a future to cover that wheat. He is perfectly safe in his transaction. He will go right into the bank and obtain all the money he wants for the next day's purchase. But if he were obliged to obtain in the beginning the money for the purchase of wheat for the conduct of his business, he would have to take an amount which he could not handle in that way at all, and if he were left to his day's transactions without the banks knowing that there was a market which would instantly take the wheat, he could not begin to borrow as he can now up to substantially the full value, and thus carry forward the transactions day by day in an easy flow that takes up all the crop of the country and moves it forward without difficulty.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me just one word?

Mr. VILAS. With pleasure.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course we are all anxious to get at the truth in this matter. I understand the Senator's argument to mean that futures facilitate the real dealing in cotton for speculation. Is that correct?

Mr. VILAS. Not quite. I admit that the system of exchanges probably tends to increase speculation somewhat, but legitimate futures are useful for the purpose of assisting genuine purchases, the movement of cotton, wheat, and other staple products under discussion.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, let me make a statement. I say that the proof taken from the reports of the New York Cotton Exchange shows that the dealing in futures, that is, the buying of this large amount of cotton without any cotton being there, absolutely destroys the purchase of real cotton for speculation. I will state the fact. In the last commercial year, 1890-'91, the report of the Cotton Exchange of New York shows that 26,000,000 bales of futures were sold, and that 1,052 bales of real cotton were sold for speculation.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I do not intend to repeat what was said on the subject of the quantity of cotton being sold, and yet, as I am reminded of it by the statement of the distinguished Senator, I will ask his attention to this question: If A should honestly agree to sell to B, with the purpose of delivering a thousand bales of cotton three months hence, and B should make a similar contract upon the faith of this to sell it to C, and C should make a similar contract to sell it to D, which is three, and D should make a similar contract to sell it to E, which is four, and E should make a similar contract to sell it to A, who subsequently concluded to buy in again, which is five, would there not be five perfectly honest transactions, and yet not a bale of cotton handled? That is the effect and operation upon the various trades and exchanges in the country, so that they come to be not less the places of honest and legitimate business than the clearing-houses, by which numerous honest contracts are set off against one another, precisely as was so well illustrated by the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] a little while ago, and as happens in the financial transactions of the city of New York.

Look at the clearing house in New York. Is there any doubt about the genuineness of the checks, the certificates of deposit, the drafts that come from all over the United States and are drawn by the citizens of New York in their various tranactions, and which all go pouring into the clearing house until sometimes their transactions run perhaps to a hundred millions a day? Yet a very moderate sum of money pays all the balance. I only illustrate by this example that much of the inference that all the sales are fictitious because the aggregate of the quantity of cotton included in the totality of the sales is so much greater than the actual cotton is not quite just, not denying at the same time that there are speculative trades among the transactions, and not denying also that probably the facilities for carrying them on have increased the speculative trades.

But, Mr. President, I had no purpose to go into so long a discussion upon this matter. I only wanted to show, irrespective of the constitutional objection which I conceive lies to the bill in any aspect, treating it as a bill which is perfectly proper that the Senate should enact with the aid of the lower House, that this exception ought to be in the bill for the interests of business and for the benefit of the community, and that it can be safely put in for the reason that all the evidence which is suggested by the distinguished Senator, and which they took with so much care to prove that many of these transactions are fictitious and without honest intent, will be just as efficacious in the minds of those who administer the law to destroy them as they are in the mind of the distinguished Senator; and in order that there might be no risk, as I said before, in drawing the amendment in perfect good faith to have it improve the bill and render its effects less pernicious if it must pass, I expressly drew it so as to make it more favorable to the view which is urged here by only rendering it necessary to destroy a contract to show that the seller did not intend—nay, it puts the burden upon him; he must show he did intend in good faith—to deliver the cotton.

As the distinguished Senator from Mississippi stated the testimony, the point was not that these men swore that there was always a bona fide intention to deliver, but that the contracts were always made in contemplation of delivery if delivery should be required. That, it seems to me, is a very different statement from the statement that they were made with the bona fide intention to deliver, and that is the requirement of the amendment.

Now, let me call attention to the case from Illinois which has been cited. To show that instead of such testimony failing to impress the court, instead of its being possible, as I understood my learned friend, the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], to intimate, that the court should be hoodwinked, here is a case where the court enforced the inference from rules and regulations such as the distinguished Senator from Mississippi has called our attention to with reference to the Cotton Exchange of New York. Let me read it:

> A contract for the sale of wheat in store, to be delivered at a future time, which requires the parties to put up margins as security, and provides that, if either party fails, on notice, to put up further margins according to the market price, the other may treat the contract as filled immediately, and recover the difference between the contract and market price, without offering to perform, on his part, or showing an ability to perform—

That is, a contract under these rules and regulations or similar rules and regulations to those which the Senator from Mississippi has spoken of so vigorously—> is illegal and void, as having a pernicious tendency.

The court, in speaking of it, speaks of it more as a question of intention, although that word be not exactly used. The judge in rendering the opinion says:

> It would by no means be a forced construction to say that this contract means that when the party elects to regard the contract as filled, if he desires to do more than to simply declare the contract at an end—if he desires to hold the other party liable for damages—he must do all things that would have been required of him in case the time for the delivery had elapsed.

Then follow other remarks, upon which the court concludes that the contract ought not to be upheld, judging of the transaction with reference to the intention of the parties.

Now, Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say upon this point, and very much more than I had the least purpose to say when I rose to endeavor to make it apparent that the amendment is not proposed in any spirit of obstructive hostility. It is proposed in the hope that if the bill is to become a law, by reason of this amendment it may lay a less violent and destructive hand upon the usages of trade and business by which they have been so many years carried on that to change them now could not but injure the producer to a greater or less degree.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the legal arguments which have been made by the intellectual giants of the Senate, but I only propose to treat this matter in a practical way and to look at it in a practical way.

With the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] I listened to the testimony that was taken before the Judiciary Committee, and I confirm every word he has said with regard to the testimony there given. It came out distinctly before the committee that of the transactions on the Chicago Board of Trade not more than 5 per cent were legitimate, where there was any property at stake——

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to ask him a single question?

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish the Senator from New York would allow me to finish the sentence.

Mr. HISCOCK. No, right there I want to make an inquiry.

Mr. WASHBURN. Very well.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it not true in point of fact that these futures do cover practically all the wheat that goes into the market?

Mr. WASHBURN. They cover all the wheat that goes into the market and about a thousand per cent more.

Mr. HISCOCK. If you take the two statements together, they do in fact cover all the wheat.

Mr. WASHBURN. No, I do not think they cover all the wheat——

Mr. HISCOCK. Practically all?

Mr. WASHBURN. They cover the wheat that never does go into the market.

Mr. HISCOCK. The point is whether in fact, so far as the great markets are concerned, futures and future contracts do not practically cover all the wheat that legitimately goes into the market, and whether the legitimate business to-day in wheat, corn, and cotton is not covered by this proposed law.

Mr. WASHBURN. There is an amount of wheat in actual existence that is sold for future delivery. There is no doubt about that; but the great bulk of such transactions cover sales of no property whatever, and it is not pretended that they do. Now, for instance——

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand——

Mr. WASHBURN. If the Senator will allow me to make my speech, he can make his afterwards.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well.

Mr. WASHBURN. For instance, on the Chicago Board of Trade, one day last April, one of the great operators sold 5,000,000 bushels of wheat of which he did not own a bushel. The result was that it broke the market 5 cents a bushel. That transaction reduced the value of the wheat crop of this country in one day $20,000,000. He never expected to deliver the wheat, yet he had made a contract in due form with somebody to deliver it. How are you to show that he did not do that in good faith? He comes up and says, "I sold that wheat. I expected to deliver it. I have made a contract. There is the contract." How are you going to contradict him? How are you going to show that that was not his intention? Is not his intention in his own heart and in his own mind? He is not going to swear that he made a contract to deliver wheat when he had no expectation of doing it. Take the cotton exchange.

Senators talk about the resales accounting for all this immense amount. Take the dealings of the cotton exchange in November—22,700 bales of actual cotton sold there; 8,100,000 bales of future contracts or bets. Does anybody believe for a moment that the 22,000 form the initial step for selling the 8,000,000 bales? It is simply preposterous. The whole thing is a fraud. The whole thing is gambling and a bet. When you undertake to draw the distinction proposed by the amendment you open the door widely. I would not give a rush for the bill in its practical effects when you say as the amendment does, "and does not in good faith intend to purchase the article." Is a man going to stultify himself after he has made a contract for delivery and another one for purchase by saying that he did not intend to deliver, that he was not acting in good faith? Not for a moment. It would be a rope of sand. I would not give a rush for the bill with any such provision in it.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he does not think he could find as a juryman the intention upon the same evidence on which he is willing to find it as a Senator?

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask in reply whether the Senator from Wisconsin thinks for a moment, if there is a provision of that kind placed in the bill, there will ever be a case where a man is brought up and it is shown that he did not make an actual sale with the intention to deliver?

Mr. VILAS. I shall have no difficulty in answering that question. If the facts be such as the distinguished Senator says they are, there will be numerous cases or there will be a cessation from that line of conduct.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. President——

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to have a vote on the amendment to-night, if nothing further is to be said.

Mr. SAWYER. I was going to move an executive session.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to have a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]?

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not insist on a vote now, but that there may be a brief executive session. It is very important to have one.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to have a vote on the amendment to-night. We have spent a great deal of time here——

Mr. VOORHEES. A roll call would develop the lack of a quorum.

Mr. HOAR. The executive session will only take three minutes. I appeal to the Senator from Minnesota to allow a brief executive session without making any point that would require a call of the Senate and the presence of a quorum. He can certainly depend on it that it will not make any difference in the time when a final vote on his bill will be reached.

Mr. PALMER. I should be glad, before the Senate adjourns, to give notice of an amendment which I shall offer to the bill at the first opportunity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be received and printed.

Several SENATORS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Illinois will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, line 5, strike out the words "five cents" and insert "one-sixteenth of one cent;" and in line 8 strike out the words "twenty cents" and insert "one-eighth of one cent;" so as to read:

That special taxes are imposed as follows: Every dealer in "options" or "futures" as hereinbefore defined in this act, shall pay annually the sum of $1,000 as a license fee for conducting such business, and shall also pay the further sum of one-sixteenth of 1 cent per pound for each and every pound of raw or manufactured cotton, hops, pork, lard, or bacon, and the sum of one-eighth of 1 cent per bushel for each and every bushel of any of the other articles mentioned in section three of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

Mr. WASHBURN. I suppose it is very doubtful whether there is a quorum present. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 14, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 13, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPECIAL ORDER FOR TUESDAY, JANUARY 17, 1893.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Tuesday next, instead of Saturday, may be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAYNER. I object to that, because I think it ought to go to the Committee on Rules, and let the Committee on Rules determine it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will say to the gentleman that I have talked with the Committee on Rules about this.

Mr. RAYNER. If the Committee on Rules are willing to give Tuesday it is all right.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will say to the gentleman that it will be perfectly satisfactory to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RAYNER. Then I will withdraw my objection, if the Committee on Rules have agreed to give Tuesday.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Maryland withdraws his objection to my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] that Tuesday next, instead of Saturday, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is that instead of to-morrow, which has been assigned to the Judiciary Committee, that that committee be permitted to occupy the time on Tuesday next. This request, as the Chair understands, arises from the fact that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] are absent attending the funeral of the late Senator Kenna, and there is a bill to be called up respecting the direct-tax account of the State of West Virginia, upon which these gentlemen desire to be heard; and therefore the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] desires to substitute Tuesday for Saturday for the Judiciary Committee. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9828), and that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE], from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, asks that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report, and that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9828) to encourage the construction of electric railroads, to facilitate the rapid transportation of the mails, to promote the interests of commerce and travel, and to aid in demonstrating the feasibility of the distribution of electrical power for agricultural and other purposes along the line of electric roads, and especially to aid in the construction of a pioneer electric railroad between the cities of Chicago and St. Louis by the Chicago and St. Louis Electric Railroad Company, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, at existing rates.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will clear the table, and will then recognize the gentleman from Michigan.

EMOLUMENTS OF OFFICERS OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an abstract of the official emoluments of officers of the customs service received by them during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

PAYMENT TO INFORMERS, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement showing all payments made to informers and seizing officers under section 3 of the act of Congress, approved June 22, 1874, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

PLEASANT OWEN AND C. A. PENGE, DECEASED, VS. UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a copy of the findings of the Court of Claims in the cases of the following-named persons against the United States: Pleasant Owen and C. A. Penge, deceased; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ELECTORAL VOTE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a certified copy of the ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President in the State of New York, transmitted by the Secretary of State; which was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SHIVELY, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. RAINES, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the House whether an executive order has been issued to restoring to the public domain any portion of the Navajo Indian Reservation, lying in the Territory of Utah; and if so, that he furnish the House with a copy of said order.

The report (by Mr. STOUT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, have had the same under consideration, and report it back with the recommendation that it be adopted with the following amendment:

Add after the word "order," in the last line, "with a report of all proceedings thereunder."

Mr. STOUT. I move the previous question on the amendment and the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. STOUT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On January 5, 1893:

An act (H. R. 9417) to incorporate the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia.

On January 7:

An act (H. R. 6644) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of title of the United States in lot 3 in square south of square 990," approved March 3, 1891;

On January 9:

An act (H. R. 6737) granting a pension to Delzell R. Bradford, Twenty-fourth Michigan Volunteers;

An act (H. R. 8907) to increase the pension of John Malloy;

An act (H. R. 9487) to amend an act approved April 22, authorizing the Natchitoches Cane River Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Cane River in Louisiana; and

An act (H. R. 9488) to amend an act approved March 2, 1891, authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River, Louisiana, by the Rapides Bridge Company, limited.

DISEASES OF CATTLE AND CATTLE FEEDING.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound of the special report of the Bureau of Animal Industry on diseases of cattle and cattle feeding 60,000 copies, of which 20,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 40,000 for the use of the House.

The report of the Committee on Printing (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The committee have considered the various resolutions which have been referred to them for the printing of the special report of the Bureau of Animal Industry on diseases of cattle and cattle feeding. There are several of these resolutions pending before the committee, and they call for different numbers of this work to be printed. There have been already printed by the Secretary of Agriculture, under the discretion given him, 10,000 copies of the work. The estimated cost of printing and binding this work is about 65 cents per copy. They recommend the passage of the resolution herewith submitted, providing for the printing and binding of 60,000 copies of the work, the estimated cost of which, as shown, will be about $39,000. They recommend that the other resolutions on the subject herewith returned lie on the table.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will in a few moments.

Mr. Speaker, this publication is one which has recently been made by the Secretary of Agriculture, and up to this time members of Congress have no copies of this work for distribution. I do not desire to comment improperly upon the action of the Secretary of Agriculture, or of anybody in that Department; but I ask to have read an article which I send to the Clerk's desk, which has been sent broadcast over the country through the United Press. This article must have been inspired at the Department of Agriculture. It is a misstatement of fact. It must have been known by the gentleman who sent it out that it did not convey a proper impression to the country.

The sending of it out has caused persons in all sections of the United States where the United Press dispatches are read, to correspond with members of Congress, in both branches, frequently sending the clipping with their letters calling upon their members for copies of this publication. The gentleman who inspired it, whoever he was, in the Department of Agriculture or elsewhere, must have known and did know that members of Congress have no copies of this work for distribution. The only copies that have been distributed were printed upon the requisition of the Secretary of Agriculture. He had printed 10,000 copies of the work, and distributed them himself through that Department, except that he has sent one copy, I believe, to each member of Congress——

A MEMBER. Five copies.

Mr. RICHARDSON (continuing). With a statement that no more could be furnished.

Now, this morning, through the mails, we get a second letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, saying that four more copies can be furnished. But, Mr. Speaker, I imagine that there is not a gentleman here—perhaps I ought not to say that there is not one—but there are very few members who have not received letters from their constituents asking for this book, based upon this publication which I have sent to the Clerk's desk, in which it is pretended to give information to the country that members of Congress have these books for distribution.

Mr. COGSWELL. Will the gentleman allow me for a moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will in a moment, when the Clerk shall have read that article.

The Clerk read as follows:

REPORT ON SHEEP INDUSTRY.

WASHINGTON, January 2.

One of the most valuable publications ever issued by the Government is a report upon the sheep industry of the United States, prepared under direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. It treats of the history and conditions of the industry from the early settlement of the country down to the present day, and is handsomely illustrated. It bids fair to rival in popularity the work on the diseases of the horse, published by the Department some time since. It is ready for distribution by the Secretary and through members of Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The fact that I want to impress, Mr. Speaker, upon the House and upon the country is, in making this statement to the public that members of Congress have copies of this work for distribution, the country has been misled. But it is to the latter part to which I make objection more particularly. I do not want to detract from the value of the work. The declaration is made here that it is going to rival the Horse book in popularity. I do not know whether that is true; it may be true. The fact that I want to controvert and what I want the country to know is, that members of Congress have no copies for distribution. And when the resolution I offer passes and the book ordered for members, it will be six months or longer before we will receive a copy for distribution. It will require that length of time to get it out at the Printing Office.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. RICHARDSON. In a moment. We have reported this resolution calling for the printing of 60,000 copies—40,000 for the use of the House and 20,000 for the use of the Senate. These, I think, in addition to the 10,000 copies that have been published by the Secretary of Agriculture for his own distribution, will meet the demand. It will give each member of this House more than 100 copies, and it seems to me that ought to be sufficient.

As I have said, we have several resolutions before the committee calling for the printing of this book; one calls for 250,000 copies. According to the estimate which the Public Printer has furnished to the committee, these books will cost about 65 cents per copy. Therefore, the 60,000 copies which the resolution recommends will cost about $40,000. That, as I have said, is in addition to the 10,000 copies already published. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will yield to my friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES] for his question.

Mr. OATES. It does not come in quite so pertinently at this point, but I wanted to ask my friend from Tennessee whether he knows who is responsible for giving out that information?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know, but it must come from some person in the Department of Agriculture. I do not know who gave the information, but I do not think that such publications ought to be made, because they impose upon members of Congress an immense correspondence in answering the inquiries to which they give rise.

Mr. OATES. Does the gentleman think that the statement was authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not pretend to say that it was authorized by the Secretary.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Can the gentleman tell us by what authority the Secretary published the 10,000 copies that he did publish and distribute?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is a pertinent inquiry. He made that publication under the authority given him in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which sets apart for the Secretary of Agriculture, as it does for the other heads of Departments, a certain amount of money to be used in printing. In this instance the Secretary of Agriculture may have taken a part of the money that is appropriated for the promotion of the interests of the Bureau of Animal Industry and used it in printing this book.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Speaker, my question is hardly covered by that of the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] says that this publication, which has embarrassed us so much—and in that respect I fully sympathize with the gentleman from Tennessee—must have been inspired by the Department of Agriculture. I want to ask him what authority he has for saying that, because I know that he wants to be just, and this is a pretty serious matter?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, I want to be perfectly fair towards everybody. I stated that that was a mere assumption on my part. I made that assumption because I imagined that nobody except some one in the Department of Agriculture knew at that time that such a book was on the press.

Mr. COGSWELL. The Printing Office knew it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Undoubtedly; but it was hardly given out there. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, because of the publication which has been read from the Clerk's desk I have received, I suppose, some fifteen or twenty communications from my constituents in Philadelphia asking for copies of the report upon the sheep industry and also of the report upon cattle diseases and feeding. In pursuance of the knowledge that I had from the Department of Agriculture that each member was to have but 1 copy—although since that we have received communications stating that we are entitled each to 5 copies of the report on sheep industry and 4 copies of the report on diseases of cattle and feeding—I offered a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Printing, requesting that they would examine into the subject and report to this House a provision for publishing not only the report upon cattle diseases and feeding, but also the report upon the sheep industry. Now, I do not find that the committee have included the report on sheep industry in their report to this House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have here a report which I will present in relation to the sheep industry as soon as we take action on the pending one, but we have to take one thing at a time.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Very well, Mr. Speaker, then I take back that part of my remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. As soon as the pending resolution is disposed of I will present the one in relation to the publication of the report on the sheep industry.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. Speaker, while it is the fact that in the district of the city of Philadelphia which I represent, embracing very intelligent and cultured people, there is not one acre of farming land, yet there are among my constituents many gentlemen who have the means to own country seats, and who want information either for themselves or for their farmers upon such subjects as are embraced in these two reports.

Now I wish to say—perhaps other members would be glad to say it if they had the floor—that I hope this little discussion may get fully into the papers through the Associated Press, so that our constituents may know that when members of Congress receive these books we will distribute them as we are asked. And I will gladly send a copy to any individual who writes for it, as long as my quota lasts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I am aware that in the opinion of a number of gentlemen of this House the Government ought to print a larger number of this publication, but I do not agree with them, for this reason: each copy of this book costs 65 cents, and if the Government undertakes to print enough to supply the demand—a fictitious demand in part—that can be created by such publications as that to which I have now called attention, it will be impossible to accomplish it. I think that if men of means, such as are spoken of by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL], have sheep or cattle they ought to be willing to pay 65 cents per copy for such a book, and the Government ought not to undertake to supply such people with these books gratis.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I do not propose that my constituents shall buy these books; but, so far as my quota may go, I shall distribute them. I do not want people, however, to expect to receive these publications very soon, because many weeks must elapse before they can be printed and ready for distribution. I will keep lists of those who ask.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the proper plan would be to pass the general printing bill (if I may be pardoned for referring to that subject), and adopt the plan which is therein proposed, that after the Government has collected this information and prepared it for publication and distributed it in the first instance the plates should be sold to some printer that he may publish the work and sell it at a reasonable price to the people throughout the Union who are anxious to receive it. In this way only can we meet the legitimate demand for books of this kind.

So long as members of Congress undertake to make the distribution, one constituent may receive a copy while another constituent, owning perhaps more sheep or cattle, may receive none, and thus injustice will be done. These books can not be distributed so as to meet all the demands; and the proper method it seems to me would be to adopt a plan by which they may be sold at a cheap price and the people get the benefit of the information which the Government has superior facilities for collecting and collating.

Mr. SCOTT. Is there any provision in this report for giving the people these books in that way at the present time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all; but there is in the general printing bill to which I have referred.

While I have the floor I wish to have read an announcement which I tore from a copy of this book which was sent to me by the Secretary of Agriculture. I do not think such an announcement ought to be placed in a public document by any head of a Department or any bureau officer of the Government. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

This book is mailed to you by direction of J. M. Rusk, Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, the law provides that no head of a Department or any other officer of this Government may send out Government publications with notice to the person receiving them that they are sent with the officer's "compliments." That is a provision of law passed by this Congress during the last long session, and I charge here and now that this law is evaded when any public officer puts in any book a notice such as has just been read from the Clerk's desk. Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question.

Mr. FUNSTON. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why not?

Mr. FUNSTON. Some of us would like to say a word in defense of the Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. FUNSTON. Five minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has, unintentionally I doubt not, reflected upon the Department of Agriculture by producing here this morning the first article which was read at the Clerk's desk and stating that it evidently had come from some one in the Agricultural Department. That Department is authorized to use the means at its disposal in the manner they have been used for the publication of this book, and while it was being published enterprising newspaper men obtained a knowledge of the facts and gave them to the public.

Now, so far as the Agricultural Department had something to do with it, and no further: It was only an item of information that was given by the newspapers of this country to the public; and the Agricultural Department is no more responsible for its having been given out to our people generally than for any other items of news given out which are matters of public knowledge. So much for the Agricultural Department.

Now, as to the law to which the gentleman refers, and which the Secretary has violated, according to his suggestion: I am not acquainted with the law, but I prefer that the chairman of the committee, who makes such a grave statement, would produce the facts, if he has them. I am unfamiliar with the law myself, but it can be very easily settled if he will produce the facts which he alleges.

Mr. MCKINNEY. They are in the book.

Mr. FUNSTON. It is probable; but this is a custom that has been followed by all the heads of the Departments for a long time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; the custom was to say "sent with the compliments" of the Secretary or officer sending it.

Mr. FUNSTON. How does this differ from that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why, this contains a notice that it is "sent by J. M. Rusk, Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. FUNSTON. But what is the difference?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No difference, as I insist. He simply changes the mode to evade the law, which says they shall not be sent with his "compliments."

Mr. MCKINNEY. Let me ask the gentleman from Kansas if it is sent with the "compliments of Mr. Rusk" when you or I send it to our constituents?

Mr. FUNSTON. No, sir.

Mr. MCKINNEY. Then why is it sent in that form now? Why should it be included in the book?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It should not be, and that is what I complain of.

Mr. FUNSTON. My idea is to show that the Department is not at all responsible for the publicity that is given to this matter, and is not responsible for these facts having been made a subject of newspaper comment, as I understand. Everything, of course, that occurs in the Department is known to the public, and it is unjust to the Secretary to say that by his action or connivance or otherwise facts are given to the public in advance of any action being taken upon them by members of Congress. This information was properly given out, as any other fact is given out and which the public have a right to know.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman will notice that I have not objected to that matter, but only to the fact that this places members in the attitude of refusing these books to their constituents when they are told as by authority that they are on hand for distribution. It is a mistake to assume that the members have these books for distribution.

Mr. FUNSTON. But the Department never gave out that information.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How then did it come to the notice of the United Press, which had the information and gave it out some weeks ago?

Mr. FUNSTON. It was a matter of public record. It was put on your desk and mine, and it would not be strange if the newspapers did get the information and publish it to the country.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That notice went out some weeks ago; long before the book was on your desks, and it was evidently given out by some one who knew of the contemplated publication.

Mr. FUNSTON. Yes; because the matter has been before the public for some time and known to the newspapers.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question, Mr. Speaker, upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. OWENS. I hope the gentleman will allow me to ask a question of the gentleman from Kansas.

I want to ask him by what authority he states that the Department of Agriculture did not give out this information.

Mr. FUNSTON. I did not make that positive statement; but simply say, when the gentleman from Tennessee intimates that it was given out by the Department, that there are other means by which it could have reached the public than through the Department.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But the gentleman from Tennessee admits that he does not know anything about that.

Mr. OWENS. And the gentleman from Kansas admits that he does not know anything about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman from Tennessee makes a charge that he does not follow up.

Mr. FUNSTON. It is unreasonable to presume that the secretary is guilty until proven innocent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But he admits that he does not know anything about it.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee as to the number——

The SPEAKER. The resolution on which the House is to vote will be reported.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to make an inquiry of the Committee on Printing as to whether it would not be well to submit this matter to the Committee on Ways and Means, with a view to ascertaining whether a greater number may not be necessary to fully inform the farmers of the country on the subject. We are told that it is the purpose of the gentlemen in the majority to give the country free wool, and it is important that the farmers engaged in raising sheep should know how greatly they are to be benefited by that policy.

I think therefore that a measure of this kind should come before the House after a conference of the two committees. Let the farmers have a large edition of this valuable work, that they may proceed at once to prepare for the proposed new and beneficent policy of rearing sheep without any protection upon wool.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In my part of the country we do not raise wool from cattle, and as this resolution relates exclusively to cattle I do not see that the question of the gentleman has any application to the matter in hand. [Laughter.]

I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; under the operation of which the concurrent resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PRINTING OF SPECIAL REPORT ON SHEEP INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now submit another report from the same committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], from the Committee on Printing, submits another privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound, of the special report of the sheep industry of the United States, 60,000 copies, of which 20,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 40,000 for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report upon the resolution.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON) was read, as follows:

The committee have considered the several resolutions which have been referred to them to print extra copies of the special report on the sheep industry of the United States.

There are several of these resolutions pending before the committee, calling for the printing of different numbers of this work. There have been already printed by the Secretary of Agriculture, under the discretion given him, 10,000 copies.

The estimated cost of printing and binding the work is about $1 per copy. The committee recommend the passage of the resolution herewith submitted, providing for the printing and binding of 60,000 copies of the work, the estimated cost of which, as shown, will be about $60,000. They recommend that the other resolutions on this subject, herewith returned, lie on the table.

Mr. CURTIS. This is the report which I understood was before the House when I made my inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee a few moments ago.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I simply call the attention of the House to the fact that this publication costs more than the cattle book which we have just ordered printed, and that comes not so much from the fact that there are more pages in it, but because there are more plates, as I understand, and these plates cost more. This book will cost a little more than a dollar a copy, and the 60,000 copies will therefore cost about $60,000. The Secretary of Agriculture, under the same discretion to which I referred a moment ago, has also had printed 10,000 copies of this work for his own use and distribution.

I now move the previous question on the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Is the resolution amendable?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not unless you vote down the previous question.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Then I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. We can publish the book in installments, and have some more printed next year.

The question being taken on the demand for the previous question, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. O'FERRALL), there were—ayes 120, noes 21.

Pending the division

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana said: Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] desire to amend the resolution?

Mr. O'FERRALL. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. To have more copies printed?

Mr. O'FERRALL. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. So do I.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, my object in voting against the previous question——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object to debate.

Mr. O'FERRALL (continuing). Was that the resolution might be amended so as to order the printing of 100,000 copies.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I therefore raise the question of no quorum, and call for tellers.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. RICHARDSON and Mr. O'FERRALL.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 136, noes 32.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on concurring in the resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask that the other resolutions relating to this subject, reported by the committee and sent to the Clerk's desk, may lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the other resolutions on the same subject reported by the committee will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER FOR TO-MORROW.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as last Wednesday was set apart by the Committee on Rules for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Indian Affairs, which day was lost on account of the death of Senator Kenna, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow (Saturday) be substituted and set apart for that work, as the Judiciary Committee have abandoned that day?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], from the Committee on Indian Affairs, asks unanimous consent that in lieu of Wednesday, which was lost to that committee, they may be assigned to-morrow, to be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER AT CINCINNATI.

Mr. DICKERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10007) to provide for lowering the height of a bridge proposed to be constructed across the Ohio River between Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Ky., by the Cincinnati and Covington Rapid Transit Bridge Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Cincinnati and Covington Rapid Transit Bridge Company be, and is hereby, authorized and permitted to construct a general traffic highway bridge across the Ohio River between the cities of Covington, Ky., and Cincinnati, Ohio, at the place and according to the plans of said bridge approved by the Secretary of War, except that the height of said bridge above low water shall be 105.3 feet instead of 115 feet as now required by law and as shown by the plans approved by said Secretary of War: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of the law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt this bridge from the operation of the same.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out the words "one hundred and five and three-tenths feet," in line 9 of the first section of said act, and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and five feet and four inches."

Insert after the present ending of section 1 of said act the following:

"And provided further, That the rights and privileges herein granted shall be null and void if actual construction of this bridge be not begun within one year and completed within three years from the date of the approval of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky for the immediate consideration of this bill? (After a pause). The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DICKERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls for the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The Clerk proceeded to call committees for reports.

ROCKPORT, TEX., A SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9531) to make Rockport, Tex., a subport of entry; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER ABOVE NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. GEARY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2345) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River above New Orleans; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MONONGAHELA RIVER AT WEST ELIZABETH, PA.

Mr. GEARY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 9786) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River at West Elizabeth, in the State of Pennsylvania; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MONONGAHELA RIVER AT BELLEVERNON, PA.

Mr. GEARY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 9897) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River at the foot of Main street, in the borough of Bellevernon, in the State of Pennsylvania; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GOSPORT NAVY-YARD.

Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 1543) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the purchase a lot of land opposite to the Gosport navy-yard; which was referred to the Union Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HIRAM R. RHEA.

Mr. SNOW, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. 10167) granting a pension to Hiram R. Rhea.

The SPEAKER. That is a private bill and goes through the box.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to suggest that the bill was prepared and reported by the committee, together with the report. Although it is a private bill, we were undecided as to how it should be reported.

The SPEAKER. Is it not a private bill?

Mr. MARTIN. It is; but it is reported by the committee with a report showing why it should pass. It is a committee bill.

The SPEAKER. Reports on private bills are made through the box.

Mr. MARTIN. Permit me a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand. This is a private bill, is it not?

Mr. MARTIN. Allow me to make a suggestion, Mr. Speaker. This bill is prepared by and reported from the committee with a favorable report. It is a bill for the repeal of a special act, and we did not know but what it ought to be reported upon the call of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10167) granting a pension to Hiram R. Rhea.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the report, will be printed.

The call of the standing and select committees was concluded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, this being the day fixed by the rule for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for that purpose.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] will please take the chair.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman rise before the announcement?

Mr. HOOKER of New York. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair accepts the gentleman's statement.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 5.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. No quorum.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 159, nays 29, not voting 141, as follows:

Mr. BLAND with Mr. HULL.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. RICHARDSON in the chair.

HIRAM JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1219) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Chairman, the status of that bill, as I understand it, is that there was a vote being taken upon it by tellers when the committee rose at the time the bill was last considered, and I suppose we shall resume the consideration of the bill at the point where we left off.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I think that the bill and the report ought to be read for the information of the House.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. There is no objection to the reading of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the respective sums of money as hereinafter provided, to the respective persons named herein, or to their heirs or legal representatives, to wit:

To H. Johnson, $659.86.
To Stephen M. Johnson, $659.86.
To D. J. Franklin, $130.48.
To Josiah Franklin, $156.60.
To Nat Buckley, $261.20.
To John Tull, $313.49.
To Elias Bray, $391.92.
To Dr. G. Johnson, $156.60.
To Harrison Trice, $261.20.
To Jeremiah Crook, sr., $522.41.
To Willis Arnold, $5,213.89.
To Arch McCorkle, $391.92.
To G. L. Ross, $1,306.91.
To S. L. Ross, $1,306.91.
To John M. Hart, $522.41.
To William A. Brummer, $801.69.
To John D. Smith, $261.20.
To A. B. Crook, $261.20.
To Daniel McCollum, $261.20.
To Jeff Jones, $130.48.
To Thomas McGill, $156.61.
To James Ledbetter, $156.61.
To William Ozier, $522.41.
To Elijah Bond, $261.20.
To John L. Cawthon, $522.41.
To William Hall, $522.41.
To Carroll Beaver, $522.41.
To John West, $659.86.
To James Clifford, $261.20.
To O. F. Hendrix, $784.04.
To Frank Cawthon, $313.49.
To James Cawthon, $130.49.
To S. E. Grider, $130.49.
To Silas Grider, $130.49.
To John Robinson, $240.34.
To Hugh McKnight, $200.25.
To John G. Smith, $79.96.
To Caleb McKnight, $200.25.
To James Thomas, $200.25.
To William P. Walker, $120.06.
To A. S. Rogers, $341.55.
To Tison G. Maness, $561.02.
To William H. Bond, $120.06.
To F. M. Ballard, $240.04.
To Stephen Massengill, $120.06.
To William Swink, $440.80.
To Keton M. Jones, $361.15. In all, $22,271.26.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, while the Chair is looking up the status of this bill, can not we have the report read?

There being no objection, the report (by Mr. ENLOE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1219) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others, submit the following report:

The facts of this claim are fully set forth in a report made by this committee to the House in the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, hereto annexed and made a part of this report.

Your committee therefore adopt the said report as their own, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

[House Report No. 14, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The facts out of which this claim for relief arises and the reasons of the committee for recommending the passage of the bill will be found stated in the report of the Committee on War Claims, submitted to the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, by Gen. Bragg, of Wisconsin, who was then chairman of said committee, which report is as follows:

[House Report No. 1345, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Hiram Johnson and others for relief, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this claim for relief arises will be found stated in House report of the Committee on Military Affairs, No. 184, second session, Forty-fourth Congress, and in reports from the Secretary of War, with correspondence attached, on file with the papers in the case, and are in substance as follows:

On the 25th day of November, 1862, a party of rebels made a raid upon a small force of Union troops stationed at Henderson, in the State of Tennessee, on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. The raiding party captured the Union troops, with their arms and camp equipage, burned a quantity of cotton belonging to the United States and to private individuals, and also destroyed the depot buildings and water tank belonging to the railway corporation.

Thereupon, on the 2d day of December following, the commandant of the Union forces at the post of Bethel, Tenn. (Col. J. N. Haynie, Fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers), appointed a board of officers to investigate the losses sustained and appraise the damages suffered from the raid, with a view to an assessment by way of reprisal upon rebel sympathizers in and about Henderson.

The board so appointed assessed the value of the property captured and destroyed as follows:

Cotton burned belonging to the United States	$1,900.00
Arms and camp equipage belonging to the United States	3,180.00
Total belonging to the United States	5,080.00
Cotton belonging to private persons	18,171.36
Railway property	3,500.00
Grand total	26,751.36

Upon this report being made, Col. Haynie ordered an assessment of this amount to be levied upon the rebel sympathizers in and about Henderson, which action was approved at the headquarters of the district of Jackson, in the Department of Tennessee, Brig. Gen. Sullivan commanding, on the 12th day of December, 1862; and an order bearing date on that day was issued from said last-named headquarters directing the collection of the tax.

Col. Haynie proceeded in the execution of the order, and collected of the said assessment the sum of $23,325.16, leaving a deficit of $3,426.20 not collected, by reason of the absence of the persons against whom the same was assessed. And thereafter, but at what precise date does not appear, Col. W. W. Sanford, Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, commanding post at Bethel, made an additional and supplemental assessment for $4,326.20 to make up such deficit; and of this amount there was collected $4,026.20, making the total amount collected to repair losses and damages sustained by said raid $27,351.36; all of which sum was paid by the persons now asking relief by this petition.

The right of the military commandant in time of war to order and enforce assessments upon hostile communities by way of reprisal, and to prevent the giving information and encouragement to enemies outside of his lines by enemy sympathizers within his lines, is well settled and affirmed by all writers upon the laws of war, and is a most salutary check upon predatory incursions by making the friends of those who commit the damage bear the brunt of the injury suffered.

At the time of the appraisal of the damages and of the levying and collecting these assesments it was supposed to be under and in execution of an order of Gen. Grant, then commanding the troops in that department. But it appears from the papers filed that Gen. Grant disavowed the construction put upon his general orders by the local officers, and declared the purpose and intent of his general order to be that reprisal should be made by way of levy and assessment in case of raids within our lines, like the one at Henderson, only to repay such losses as the Government might sustain in its property thereby, and he refused to recognize the right of private claimants to reimbursement by such levy and assessment; and on the 23d day of January, 1863, ordered the proceeds of such assessment and collection to be turned over to the Provost-Marshal-General; and it appears by the papers filed that his action in denying the right of private claimants to reimbursement for losses sustained by the raid out of this fund was approved by the Secretary of War, on the report made thereon by Gen. M. C. Meigs, which report maintains the law to be that the power existed to levy and collect an assessment to pay private losses in the discretion of the general commanding; but as against such general's construction of his own order and purpose no right whatever could accrue to a private claimant for reimbursement.

The logical sequence from these facts, and this declaration and construction by Gen. Grant of his orders, seems to be that the subordinates, in the execution of the orders of the commanding general, should have made an assessment only for the losses sustained by the Government, viz:

For cotton burned belonging to the United States	$1,900
Arms and camp equipage belonging to the United States	3,180
	5,080

Had the Government rebuilt or repaired the injury to the railway property, as an essential for their use of it, that also should be included as a proper item for assessment; but the evidence shows that the railway company repaired their injuries at their own expense.

Deducting this amount, for which the assessment was authorized, from the total amount collected, there remains a balance of $22,271.26 taken from the petitioners under a misconstruction of the order of the commanding general, as certified to by his own action and the evidence of an officer of his staff.

This committee have maintained, and still adhere to the doctrine, that no nation is liable for the willful torts of its soldiery.

But was this assessment a tort, within the meaning of such well-established doctrine? It is submitted that this wrong is clearly without the rule, because this assessment was collected by an officer of high rank, commanding a military district, in the execution of an office giving him colorable authority, to say the least, to do the act he did; and that act was ratified by the general commanding, impliedly at least, by not ordering restitution when the excessive assessment came to his knowledge.

But if the reasoning on this point may be deemed questionable, there is, upon the facts, another and complete answer to the application of this principle. The proof shows, to an absolute certainty, that of the money so collected $23,325.16 was applied by the United States to its use, knowing the source from whence it was derived, and the remainder of the sum, $4,026, by all reasonable presumption, was likewise applied to the use of the Government. And the committee is so constrained to hold, as a contrary conclusion would compel us to impeach the integrity of a gallant officer who fell before Vicksburg without a stain upon his citizen or soldier life.

The law of the case, then, may be stated to be, that if the officers, agents of the Government, committed a tort originally, it was approved by the principal, the Government, when it knowingly accepted the benefits of the tortious acts. And no proceedings by way of confiscation or condemnation have ever been had to divest the persons so assessed of their right in the surplus fund.

Hence your committee are constrained to hold that the claims of the petitioners to the amount collected of them ($22,271.26) in excess of the requirements of Gen. Grant are valid, and that the Government ought in right to refund the same; and report herewith a bill, redistributing the same to the persons who paid the same ratably, in proportion to the sums originally paid by each of them, respectively, and recommend its passage.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report herewith a substitute for the bill and recommend its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the status of this bill. On June 10 last it was considered by the Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] moved that it be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. Upon that motion a vote was taken, and the Chair will have the Clerk read from the RECORD what occurred.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] that House bill No. 1219 be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House. The tellers will resume their places.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 126, noes 6.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

Mr. ENLOE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers appointed by the Chair on that occasion were the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. ENLOE, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as so long a time has elapsed since this bill was discussed that members of the House may not be familiar with its merits or with the objections to it, I ask unanimous consent that twenty minutes' debate be allowed; ten minutes to be used by those in favor of the bill and ten minutes by those opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BELTZHOOVER] asks unanimous consent that twenty minutes be allowed for debate upon this bill; ten minutes in favor of the bill and ten minutes in opposition to it. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] to control the time in favor of the bill, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAYLOR] (who made the point of "no quorum" when the bill was last under consideration, and who was a teller) to control the time against the bill.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER] desires to occupy ten minutes in opposition to this bill, and I ask him to take his time now so that I may hear his argument and have an opportunity to answer it.

Mr. STORER. Mr. Chairman, this bill purports to return to certain persons living in Tennessee the amount of an assessment which was collected from them under the order of Gen. Grant during the war. The report gives the facts, and the gentleman from that district of Tennessee, Col. COX, gave us at the last session a most interesting personal account of the circumstances under which this claim arose. There is but one point that I desire to address myself to, and I think this committee should consider it very carefully before passing the pending bill.

The assessment made and collected was $27,000. The report sets up that, by mistake, $27,000 was collected, whereas only $5,000 was intended to be collected; in other words, that Gen. Grant intended to assess and collect only the value of the Government property destroyed, which was $5,000. The $27,000 having been assessed and collected as is alleged by mistake, and $5,000 having been paid to the Government, this bill is an attempt to refund to the people who paid the assessment of $27,000 the sum of $22,000. It seems from the history of the legislation pertaining to this case, both that mentioned in the report of the committee and that which may be found in the various volumes of the Statutes at Large, that after that money was deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the captured and abandoned property fund, there was a race of diligence as to who should receive payment out of that fund.

The Government, it seems, was paid for arms and camp equipage destroyed $3,180, and for Government cotton burned $1,900, making in round figures the $5,000 which was paid out of this assessment, and this bill takes for granted that that leaves $22,000. The race of diligence, however, was not confined to the Government or to the parties for whom this bill is now brought in, because we find a special act approved on March 3, 1875, whereby John Aldridge, of McNairy County, Tenn., was paid out of this identical assessment the sum of $9,606, to make reimbursement for cotton belonging to him which was burned at that time at the town of Henderson, Tenn. That act provided that—

The sum so paid to be charged to the account of captured and abandoned property—

The identical fund into which this money as assessed and collected from the people was paid.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is, the assessment was made to cover losses not only by the Government but by private individuals in the burning of their cotton.

Mr. STORER. There is no doubt of the fact which the report shows, that the officer who actually made the assessment supposed that the order of his superior officer included private property destroyed, and made his assessment accordingly. The point I make is that instead of there being $22,000 of this assessment left in the captured and abandoned property fund of the United States, out of which this money can be restored to the people who paid it, $9,606 was paid out in 1873, leaving only $13,000 in round numbers to be paid out.

Mr. BOATNER. Could the Government properly take the money of one body of private citizens to pay it to other private citizens for property destroyed by the ravages of war?

Mr. STORER. The report of the committee is conclusive on that point. It admits the right to make the full assessment. The letter of Gen. Grant, which is cited as justifying the restoration of this money, concludes that point; for there it is asserted, and nowhere contradicted, that the Government had the right to assess the full amount. So that now the plain question presented is whether we can pay $5,000 and $9,000 out of a fund of $27,000 and then have $22,000 left.

Mr. BOATNER. I understood the gentleman to say that the order of Gen. Grant contemplated only an assessment sufficient to reimburse the Government for its losses, and that a part of the assessment which was collected has been appropriated to reimburse a private citizen for his property which was destroyed on that occasion. Now, my question is, whether we can properly take the money of these citizens which was paid in under this order and use it in the reimbursement of another private citizen, whose property was destroyed by the ravages of war. In other words, do we not owe to these people the reimbursement of their money, notwithstanding that we have improperly applied it for another purpose, for which it should not have been used?

Mr. STORER. I look on this question in the way in which it would be treated if we were discussing a case in court. There was this money there to be distributed, and all parties were before the court when the case came before the Congress of the United States. The parties now seeking this $22,000 were then before the court with opportunity to be heard; and this House and the Senate, acting like a court, decided that $9,000 of this fund should go to John Aldredge and should not go to the people named in this bill. That leaves only $13,000 to go to them, even supposing that the money was erroneously collected. This John Aldredge was a citizen of that county——

Mr. BOATNER. Were these parties before the court then?

Mr. STORER. They are before Congress now.

Mr. BOATNER. You mean, they might have been.

Mr. STORER. This is not like a case in the Court of Claims. I look upon this as the distribution of a fund of which Congress orders the distribution, and every citizen of the United States is before that court. If from this fund of $27,000 there be paid $5,000 and then $9,000 it can not leave more than $13,000, whether the fund arose in the first place wrongfully or rightfully. That is my objection, as the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Louisiana will remember, to this bill.

I will remind the gentleman from Tennessee that I called his attention to this prior act, and said that so far as I was concerned I had no objection to voting to refund all the money there was left pro rata to the people who paid it, but I did not see how the captured and abandoned property fund could pay out more money than it had received on this particular item.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. DICKERSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. STORER. I reserve the residue of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER] has three minutes left.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there is but one question in regard to this matter and that is the question raised by the gentleman from Ohio as to whether the $9,000 paid to John Aldredge and others was properly taken from this fund. I claim that when John Aldredge came to present his claim to Congress to be reimbursed for property that had been destroyed at Henderson Congress should have been governed by the facts as they appeared in the official order providing for the levy of this assessment. This money either belonged to those people who paid it to the Government or it belonged to the Government. It could not have belonged to John Aldredge. It certainly did not belong to the Government, in equity at least.

The assessment was collected, and after discharging the Government claim the excess was turned into the public Treasury. President Grant was appealed to by these same cotton speculators, and when he was asked to pay them out of this fund he stated emphatically that he did not levy that assessment to protect cotton speculators.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, when they applied to the War Department Quartermaster-General Meigs, for whose legal ability I think the House will entertain as high respect as it does for that of the gentleman from Ohio, stated in response to the application:

Gen. Grant, then commanding, ordered a war levy upon neighboring rebels, and the full value of the United States property and of the cotton (private property) destroyed appears to have been collected. Col. Hillyer states that the money thus collected exceeded the amount which Gen. Grant had intended to have collected, and that Gen. Grant refused to permit it to be applied to the payment of private losses and damages.

Gen. Hillyer, in a letter to Gen. Grant, called attention to these facts, and on the 25th day of February, 1882, in reply to a communication from the Senate committee investigating the claim, Gen. Grant said in regard to this:

Gen. Hillyer's letter as printed above is, no doubt, entirely correct. I certainly never intended any collection for the benefit of cotton purchasers.

Now, it turns entirely on the question as to whether or not Congress, in dealing with this fund, may disregard the purpose in view in the collection of it, and take from one claimant against the Government a certain proportion of the fund in its hands and turn it over to somebody else who is not entitled to receive it. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that the Government retains this fund as a trustee, and by the terms of the order under which it was collected it was a violation of the trust on the part of the Government to take any portion of the fund and apply it to the payment of these speculators claims. That is all I want to say in response to the gentleman from Ohio, and the objections which he raised to this bill.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Before my colleague takes his seat will he permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ENLOE. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Do you know who this man Aldredge was?

Mr. ENLOE. Not personally, but he lived in McNairy County.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Have you any personal knowledge of him?

Mr. ENLOE. No personal knowledge. The evidence in connection with this claim says that he was a cotton speculator, but it does not appear that he was possessed of any such amount of cotton at any one time. And besides, Gen. Grant, in dealing with the question, said that the cotton was used for breastworks, and if it was destroyed it was in connection with military operations, and the Government was not responsible to the speculators under the circumstances.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Does the gentleman know whether any other parties were paid at the same time, and why they were not paid?

Mr. ENLOE. None of them were paid, and I suppose because they were not as smart as Mr. Aldridge was. He came here and succeeded in getting an allowance in his behalf.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Had they a bill pending for their relief?

Mr. ENLOE. They had a bill subsequently introduced, but whether or not it was introduced at that time, or was then pending, I do not know. But one of my predecessors, Mr. Atkins, introduced a bill here which was reported favorably by Gen. Bragg, of Wisconsin, then chairman of the Committee on War Claims, and that report has been reaffirmed time after time by Congress after Congress, and this bill has passed both branches at different sessions, but never at the same session.

Mr. BURROWS. Was this presented to the Southern Claims Commission or to the Quartermaster-General?

Mr. ENLOE. I think not.

Mr. BURROWS. Then it is barred under the law as it is now.

Mr. ENLOE. It would be, I suppose, if presented to the court. But it is not a case that could go before the court. I do not think it is a case that could go under the act providing for the references of cases to the Court of Claims. It is a case sui generis. There is no other case like it, as far as I am aware.

Mr. BURROWS. Would it be referable under the Tucker act?

Mr. ENLOE. I think not. That act expressly provides that war claims shall not be referred.

Mr. DICKERSON. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee this question: Whether or not this $9,000, which was paid as alluded to by the gentleman from Ohio, is the only amount that has been paid out of this fund?

Mr. ENLOE. I think that is all. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. STORER. Mr. Chairman, if I have any time remaining——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. STORER. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky desired to ask me a question when I was on the floor a few moments ago. I will now yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. DICKERSON. I wanted to ask whether the $9,000 to which you referred was the only amount that had been paid out of that fund?

Mr. STORER. That is all I have been able to discover.

Mr. DICKERSON. Have you asked the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. STORER. I have not. I confined my search to the legislation. I have not asked the Treasurer. I have no interest, I will state, for or against the bill any more than any other member of the House.

Mr. DICKERSON. Then the committee has no information from the Treasury Department whether that fund has been exhausted or not?

Mr. STORER. The report fails to state.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. May I inquire of my colleague what objection there would be to referring this bill to the Court of Claims in conformity with the practice of the House under the Tucker act?

Mr. ENLOE. If the gentleman is familiar with the Tucker act he will remember that the reference of a war claim is expressly forbidden under that act. I doubt if a reference under that act would give the court jurisdiction.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I am quite familiar with the Tucker act, and understand the construction of the act given by the gentleman, and I think, perhaps, it is the correct one; but the practice of this House is, under section 14 of that act, to send such claims as this to the Court of Claims to ascertain the facts, and if they see proper to enter judgment.

Mr. ENLOE. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. The only claims that have been referred under the Tucker act by the practice of the House—the correctness of which I doubt very much—are claims for stores and supplies and for use and occupation of property.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have no doubt that this House, as it has done in very many cases, can give the Court of Claims jurisdiction to pass upon this case, and enter judgment if they find it proper under the law.

Mr. ENLOE. The Court of Claims might, by special act of Congress, be vested with jurisdiction in the case. There is no question about that.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. What objection is there, then, to allowing an amendment to the present bill, referring it to the Court of Claims and giving them jurisdiction to inquire into the equities of the claim, and, if they find favorably, to enter judgment against the Government for the amount.

Mr. ENLOE. My objection is that I believe this House is about as competent to determine questions of law and equity as is the Court of Claims, and I am satisfied that the House itself has as much confidence in its capacity to pass upon the question as it has in the ability of the Court of Claims to do it. There is no dispute about the facts, and no occasion that I can see for referring it.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. The suggestion I make is only in the interest of economy of time in the consideration of this Calendar. I think all claims of every description that can be properly considered by the Court of Claims ought to go to that court, under just such a process as that I now suggest.

Mr. BURROWS. That is right.

Mr. ENLOE. I would assist the gentleman to provide some tribunal for the settlement of all claims against the Government, for I think the most unsatisfactory tribunal that I ever saw, to deal with private claims against the Government, is the Congress of the United States. Under our rules a few men can defeat the will of the majority.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I agree substantially with the gentleman, but what better disposition can we make of this claim, in view of its situation now before the House; that is, in view of the declination of members to vote on the bill, and the consequent delays to other bills on the Calendar? If the gentleman finds that this bill will not pass the House, for any reason, why not refer it to the Court of Claims under such a suggestion as that which I now make.

Mr. ENLOE. I would suggest to the gentleman that these people have been waiting for twenty-five years or more already, and it seems to me that this is a perfectly plain case. There is no dispute about the facts, and I do not see any reason why the House should not dispose of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The twenty minutes allowed for debate have expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. STORER) there were—ayes 38, noes 39.

Mr. ENLOE. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of no quorum?

Mr. ENLOE. I want tellers, and if necessary to make the point of no quorum I will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can decide that for himself.

Mr. ENLOE. I will make the point of no quorum, then.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. ENLOE and Mr. STORER.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 5.

Mr. PAYNE and Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois made the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is made. The rule requires that when the Committee of the Whole finds itself without a quorum the roll shall be called and the names of the absentees reported to the House.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Inasmuch as my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] has already, during the last session of Congress, secured the passage of several bills on this Calendar, I suggest that he withdraw this bill, to which there seems to be serious objection, and let us get to some other to which there is no objection.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I desire to concur very earnestly in that request.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. This is in the nature of an agreement.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. To save time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] does not seem to be regarding the request, however.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] will give his attention. I hope the Chair will call his attention to my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] is addressing the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], who will please give his attention.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I desire to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I hope he will withdraw this bill, to which there seems to be serious objection, because he had the ear of the House and passed several bills on the Private Calendar last session, and he ought to allow a debated bill to be laid aside and let us get to the consideration of bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. ENLOE. You make an appeal to my conscience. If you had your claim up for consideration, and the committee had reported in favor of it, how would you justify your action in withdrawing it to your constituency?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I voted for your bill and made the speech that passed it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order, and the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The roll was called; and the following-named members failed to respond:

Alderson,	Cowles,	Hayes, Iowa	Peel,
Allen,	Cox, N. Y.	Heard,	Pendleton,

The committee rose; and Mr. COMPTON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole, having under consideration the Private Calendar, found itself without a quorum. Under the rule the Chair caused the roll to be called, and 201 members have answered to their names. I report the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee, chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reports that the committee, having found itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, and 201 members have answered to their names. The names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal, and the committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers will take their places.

The committee again divided; and, after sometime spent in the count, the tellers reported—yeas 92, noes 9.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this question the yeas are 92, the noes 9.

Mr. PAYNE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, under the rule the Chair will again direct the roll to be called.

The roll was called, and the following-named members failed to respond:

Alderson,	Dixon,	Johnson, Ohio	Robinson, Pa.

Culberson,	Houk, Tenn.	Raines,	Wolverton.
Cummings,	Huff,	Randall,
De Forest,	Hull,	Reyburn,
Dickerson,	Johnson, N. Dak.	Rife,

The committee rose; and Mr. DOCKERY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole finding itself without a quorum, the Chair ordered the roll to be called, when 196 members answered to their names. I report the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee, chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reports that that committee finding itself without a quorum, the Chair had directed the roll to be called, when 194 members answered to their names. The names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal, and without further order the committee will resume its sitting, the presence of a quorum having been disclosed.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers will take their places. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The Chair is informed that one of the tellers is temporarily absent, and will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAYLOR] to act as teller in place of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STORER].

The committee again divided, and tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 2.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 82, noes 2.

Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois. No quorum.

Mr. REED. Let us have the roll called again.

Mr. PAYNE. Why not count?

Mr. ENLOE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON, chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 1219, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ENLOE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN. Would not the effect of adjourning now be to vacate the order for to-night's session?

The SPEAKER. It would.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ENLOE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 70.

Mr. ENLOE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 129, not voting 126; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of this day:

Mr. OATES with Mr. FLICK.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. PIERCE with Mr. TOWNSEND.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts with Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] demands the regular order. This being Friday, it is in order under the rule to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. ATKINSON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINSON. I understand that under the rule the first thing in order would be unfinished business on the Private Calendar. Paragraph 5 of Rule XXIV provides that—

It shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of all other unfinished business whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order.

And the first clause of the sixth paragraph is:

Unfinished business, if any, having been disposed of, motions shall be in order as follows.

And among the motions enumerated is the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, etc.

Now, there is unfinished business on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. What business?

Mr. ATKINSON. A bill (H. R. 1466) for the relief of the personal representatives of Henry H. and Charles K. Sibley, which will be found on page 78 of the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that a vote has been taken upon that bill, and a motion to reconsider entered. That motion has not been called up, and, under the rule, it will not be acted upon until it is called up.

Mr. ATKINSON. There is a motion to reconsider pending; now I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ATKINSON. I do not call it up, but I make the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. But it is not before the House; it has not been called up.

Mr. ATKINSON. It remains, however, upon the Calendar as unfinished business, and it seems to me that it comes within the provision of the fifth paragraph of Rule XXIV, to which I have called attention.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that where a bill is reported from the Committee of the Whole it is in the House for consideration, but the bill to which the gentleman refers was considered in the House and voted down, whereupon a motion to reconsider was entered. That motion, not having been acted upon at the time it was entered, is now pending and can be called up at any time when such business is in order; but, the House having once voted upon it, the Chair does not think that it would necessarily come before the House as unfinished business unless called up by somebody.

If there had been no vote upon the bill, then, in the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman's position would be correct, and it would be the duty of the Chair to submit the bill to the House as having been reported to it from the Committee of the Whole; but as the House has already acted upon the bill and as a motion to reconsider has been entered, the Chair thinks the matter might rest in that position until the end of the session unless called up by some gentleman.

Mr. ATKINSON. That is the question that I wish to submit to the Chair, whether this is unfinished business under the rule or not.

The SPEAKER. The impression of the Chair is that unless the motion to reconsider is called up it is not the duty of the Chair to announce it as unfinished business.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, the evening session to be confined to the business prescribed by the rule for Friday evening sessions.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN. If this motion be adopted can we meet regularly this evening under the rule?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as the Chair understands it, is that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock, the evening session to be held as under clause 3 of Rule XXVI of the House, which provides for Friday evening sessions for the consideration of pension bills and bills removing disabilities.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BELTZHOOVER; and there were—ayes 73, noes 43.

Mr. ANTONY. No quorum.

Mr. BELTZHOOVER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 56, not voting 148; as follows:

So the motion for a recess was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. GEISSENHAINER with Mr. BERGEN.

For the rest of the day:

Mr. SNODGRASS with Mr. LODGE.

Mr. PAYNTER with Mr. RIFE.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have been detained from the House by a committee meeting, and for that reason did not answer to my name on this roll call. The same remark applies to the other roll calls of this afternoon.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 3195) granting to the Yuma Pumping Irrigation Company the right of way for two ditches across that part of the Yuma Indian Reservation lying in Arizona; and Joint resolution (S. R. 113) providing for the printing of the Agricultural Report for 1892.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. COX of Tennessee, for the evening session, on account of important business.

To Mr. COOMBS, for the evening session, on account of important business.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask leave of absence for the evening session.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. RAYNER, by unanimous consent, Senate bill 2707, granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service, was ordered to be reprinted for the use of members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TARSNEY] will discharge the duties of the Chair at the evening session.

The House then (at 4 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.), in accordence with the vote just taken, took a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., Mr. TARSNEY in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, under the order for Friday night sessions.

Mr. BAILEY. Pending that motion, I move that the House adjourn.

The motion of Mr. BAILEY was rejected.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MARTIN,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 31, noes 4.

Mr. BAILEY. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. BAILEY and Mr. MARTIN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 2, no quorum voting.

Mr. MARTIN. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now call the names of the absentees, during which call excuses are in order.

Mr. JOLLEY (when Mr. COBURN'S name was called). I move that Mr. COBURN be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY (when Mr. CULBERSON'S name was called). I ask that my colleague, Mr. CULBERSON, be excused on account of the sickness of his wife.

Mr. OWENS. I object.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the gentleman from Texas be excused on account of the sickness of his wife.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY (when the name of Mr. FYAN was called). I ask that my colleague, Judge FYAN, be excused on account of his physical condition.

Mr. OWENS. I object.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that Mr. FYAN be excused.

Mr. OWENS. Now I insist on the point of order, that it is out of order during this proceeding to ask for the excuse of anybody.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is mistaken. This call is for the purpose of giving an opportunity for excuses to be made for those members who have failed to respond, and this is the only time it is in order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DOCKERY, it was agreed to.

Mr. KRIBBS (when the name of Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois was called). Gen. HENDERSON was here this evening——

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that Mr. ALDERSON, Mr. PENDLETON, Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. CAPEHART, Mr. OUTHWAITE, Mr. TUCKER, Mr. DUNGAN, Mr. MANSUR, Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, and Mr. BINGHAM are absent by order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They have been excused by order of the House.

Mr. KRIBBS. Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois did not go with that committee on account of sickness, and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

When the name of Mr. HOAR was called,

Mr. CROSBY. I move that my colleague, Mr. HOAR, be excused on account of sickness.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 22, noes 6.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. OWENS. No quorum has voted, Mr. Chairman.

I wish to ask if in these proceedings less than a quorum can excuse a member?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this call is for the purpose of obtaining a quorum. Less than a quorum can excuse a member on the call.

Mr. MARTIN (when the name of Mr. HOLMAN was called). Mr. Chairman, I desire to move that my colleague, Mr. HOLMAN, be excused on the ground that he is not physically able to be here to-night.

There was no objection.

Mr. OWENS. I desire to move that Mr. KILGORE be excused on account of not being here. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that he is too late in making the motion. The name of the gentleman from Texas having been already passed over on the call.

Mr. MOSES (when the name of Mr. MONTGOMERY was called). I ask that the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. MONTGOMERY, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. COGSWELL (when the name of Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts was called). I ask that my colleague, Mr. O'NEIL, be excused from attendance to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Massachusetts has already been excused.

Mr. WINN (when the name of Mr. PEARSON was called). I move that Mr. PEARSON be excused on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KENDALL (when the name of Mr. STONE of Kentucky was called). I ask that Mr. STONE of Kentucky be excused from attendance to-night.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN (when the name of Mr. SHIVELY was called). I move that my colleague, Mr. SHIVELY, be excused from attendance, he being absent on account of the sickness of his wife.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Indiana has been granted leave of absence by the House.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR (when the name of Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR was called). I ask that Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR be excused from attendance to-night.

There was no objection.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. WALKER, be excused, he not being able to be here on account of illness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa, be excused from attendance to-night, owing to his inability to come.

Mr. OWENS. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I move that my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa] be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BULLOCK] be excused from attendance on account of physical inability to be present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire make that as a motion?

Mr. MCKINNEY. I do.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I have just been informed that my colleague, Mr. ENOCHS, is ill; otherwise he would be here. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, owing to the extreme severity of the weather, I do not feel like pressing the proceedings under the call of the House further, although I do desire to say in all kindness that at the next Friday evening session I shall feel like asking that the call be pursued to the end. In view of the situation to-night, I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. MOSES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat. Did not the gentleman know the condition of the weather this afternoon, while urging a meeting this evening?

Mr. MARTIN. I did.

Mr. MOSES. Then why did not the gentleman dispense with this evening's session without bringing here those of us who are here? I notice that many of the very men who voted to come here this evening are not here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that with the number here who have turned out this cold night we should insist upon at least those men who voted in favor of the evening session being brought forward to make excuse for not being here. For my part I think it is the duty of the members present to insist upon the members of this House coming here on Friday evenings. Here we have a large number of claims upon the calendar that can not be reached, even if we have a session and business is attended to promptly every night during the balance of the session. Many of these claims are meritorious, and they should be attended to. I think it is our duty to insist upon this call, and that we should have it understood by the people of the country that we are endeavoring to do what is proper and right by these people who have good claims against the Government. Night after night I have come here, called here by men who never appear at these Friday night sessions. These seats, which should be occupied by men who insist on our coming here, are vacant. My idea is that we should insist on their making proper excuse for not being here.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that I think it wise and I probably shall at the proper time introduce a resolution to have a regular physician employed, so that these sick men may be attended to properly. There are so many men sick to-night that it seems to me that we need a sort of Congressional quarantine or something to look after their health. They get excused so easily and so readily that we ought to have their health looked after or there will be more of these great men who will die. I make this suggestion, that at the proper time I will introduce such a resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to inquire of the Chair as to how many actually answered to their names?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Sixty-nine gentlemen have responded to their names.

Mr. OWENS. And all the balance are sick.

Mr. MARTIN. Then I ask a vote on my motion.

Mr. DOCKERY. That number being only 98 short of a quorum, I believe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN) there were—ayes 38, noes 17.

Accordingly all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. MARTIN. There being nearly 100 less than a quorum present, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Also, petition of citizens of Wyoming County, Pa., in favor of restricting immigration—to the Select Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 14, 1893.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress, approved February 3, 1887, certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President, appointed in the States of South Dakota and Oregon, at the elections held therein on the 8th of November, 1892, as certified to him by the governors of those States; which were ordered to lie on the table.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, my newly appointed colleague, Mr. Donelson Caffery, is present, and I ask that he be sworn in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator recently appointed by the governor of Louisiana will come forward and take the oath of office.

Mr. Caffery was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. WHITE, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending the passage of a law vesting in the Secretary of the Treasury exclusive control and custody of public buildings erected under the supervision of the Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, transmitting a list of the stockholders and a report of the receipts and expenditures of that company for the year ending December 31, 1892; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a petition of the Coryell County (Tex.) Farmers' Alliance, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLS presented a petition of the mayor of Dallas, Tex., and numerous other citizens of Texas, and a petition of citizens of Bowie, Tex., praying for the passage of legislation opening up the Cherokee Strip for settlement; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, praying for the establishment of a Federal Bureau to be known as the department of national roads; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the passage of legislation creating an Ohio River Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of John E. Brandt and other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., and of Charles J. Harrison and 30 other citizens of Somerset, Pa., praying for the appointment of a commission to examine into and report upon immigration evils; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of the United Presbyterian Church of Airville; of A. L. Cressler and other citizens of Wilkesbarre; of the Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, and other churches of Smithfield; of the Methodist Church of Shiremanstown, and of the Baptist ministers of Philadelphia, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against any repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. HOAR. I present resolutions adopted by the Cold Cut Club of Waltham, Mass., which are in the nature of a petition, and which declare, among other things, that banking corporations give us a volume of money only as their profit allows, and they therefore shamefully reduced the volume of money in this country between 1880 and 1890, which made it necessary for Congress to increase its purchases of silver to supply us with money; and that thereupon the bankers began to increase the volume of bank notes, thereby throwing great discredit upon the wisdom of Congress and its silver law of July 14, 1890. Wherefore they pray that all private corporations be prohibited from issuing money, and that Congress take measures to compel the retirement of bank notes already out.

I commend the resolutions especially to the attention of my honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I think he will derive great pleasure from their perusal. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of Rose Valley Union, No. 104, of Saline County, Mo., praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the passage of legislation to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee Nation of Indians of the Indian Territory, and to make appropriations for carrying out the same; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the affidavit of Dr. J. W. Snowden, of San Jose, Cal., in support of the petition of Mrs. Gabrilla P. Moody, praying to be granted a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUTLER presented the memorial of C. E. McDonald, R. N. McMaster, and other members of the Bethel Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church of Winnsboro, S. C., remonstrating against any repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. GEORGE presented memorials of citizens of Columbus, Miss., and of members of the Methodist Episcopal Church (South) of Lauderdale County, Miss., remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10015) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiawassee, the Tennessee, and the Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee, to report it without amendment, and I ask that it take the place on the Calendar of Senate bill 3525, which has been heretofore reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce. The bills are identical, and I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and Order of Business 1173, Senate bill 3525, being a bill of the same title, will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8162) to pension Mary E. Trimble, widow of Montague N. Trimble, of the Mexican war, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. VEST. Let the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1007) to provide for lowering the height of a bridge proposed to be constructed across the Ohio River between Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Ky., by the Cincinnati and Covington Rapid Transit Bridge Company, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print and bind 60,000 copies of the special report of the Bureau of Animal Industry on diseases of cattle; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print and bind 60,000 copies of the special report of the sheep industry of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and a joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 9824) to amend "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891;

A bill (S. 3195) granting to the Yuma Pumping Irrigation Company the right of way for two ditches across that part of the Yuma Indian Reservation lying in Arizona; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 113) providing for the printing of the Agricultural Report for 1892.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PEFFER introduced a bill (S. 3716) for the relief of James Richardson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3717) for the relief of John Kircher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 3718) to authorize the Oklahoma Midland Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway, telegraph, and telephone lines through the Indian and Oklahoma Territories, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HIGGINS introduced a bill (S. 3719) for the relief of Jasper Hanson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 3720) to set aside the verdict of a court-martial in the case of George J. Barnes, late private in Company F, Second Regiment United States Sharpshooters, and Company H, Fifth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3721) for the relief of George Rushburger; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 3722) to increase the pension of William G. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3723) to reimburse the Miami Indians of Indiana for money improperly withheld from them; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3724) granting a pension to Henry Hahman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUAY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 134) authorizing the exhibition at the World's Columbian Exposition of the picture entitled "The Recall of Columbus," by Augustus G. Heaton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, the amendment providing for the purchase of the historical manuscripts lately compiled by Erastus Thatcher, relating to the District of Columbia, the city of Washington, and the towns of Alexandria and Georgetown, etc.: which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

MARITIME CANAL OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be directed to inquire what sums, if any, have been expended by the Maritime Canal Company, the Nicaragua Canal Construction Company, or any company allied to either of said companies, in and about the construction of said canal or otherwise, with the items of said expenditure, since the accounts of expenditure heretofore rendered to said committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can only say that a recent report has been made which probably the Senator has not examined. However, I do not know that that gives the items called for in the resolution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think possibly the Senator from Ohio will not object to the resolution after I make a statement.

Some two years ago testimony was taken by the Committee on Foreign Relations showing the expenditures made by the different canal companies up to that date. At that time a bill was pending in the Senate proposing Government aid for the Nicaragua Canal to the extent of the indorsement of $100,000,000 of bonds with the deposit in the Treasury of 70 per cent of the stock of the Maritime Canal Company as collateral security. Since that time the scheme has been entirely changed. While that bill was pending testimony was taken showing the expenditures made by the Canal Construction Company and the Maritime Canal Association, aggregating some $3,000,000.

As I said, the whole scheme has been changed, and now the Government of the United States is to indorse $100,000,000 of bonds; the construction of the canal is to be taken from the construction company, where it was placed some two years ago, and is to be intrusted solely to the Maritime Canal Association; and in consideration of its past expenditures that company is to receive $6,000,000 of the bonds of the company guaranteed by the Government and $12,000,000 of its stock. All the other stock except the stock that goes to Costa Rica and Nicaragua is to be vested in the Government of the United States as a gift.

The testimony taken two years ago shows that upwards of $3,000,000 or about $3,000,000 was expended, and that was to be paid back to the construction company, which was then to have the profits of construction. Now it is proposed to give them $6,000,000 of bonds and $12,000,000 of stock. I do not suppose it is seriously contended that $9,000,000 have been expended since the last testimony taken two years ago; but before the Senate can act intelligently upon the question as to how much stock shall be donated to this company, the Committee on Foreign Relations should certainly desire that we shall have before us some testimony to show how much has been expended. It was with that purpose in view and with the idea of facilitating the progress of the bill that I offered the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. I ought to say a word or two, although I have no objection to the passage of any resolution calling for information in regard to the Nicaragua Canal.

The Senator from Colorado is mistaken in regard to the recent report made by the Committee on Foreign Relations in two very important particulars. The company now building the Nicaragua Canal is called the Maritime Company. It is working through a construction company. They had expended a year or two ago, when the first report was made, about $3,000,000, according to their own statement. They now claim to have expended considerably more, quite as much as $6,000,000. The aggregate maximum was inserted. The amount that has actually been paid in money in the construction of the Nicaragua Canal is to be ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State, but the maximum shall not exceed $6,000,000 when all is paid.

In respect to the $12,000,000 of stock, under the first bill that was proposed there was $30,000,000 of stock left in the hands of the two countries through which the canal runs and the Maritime Company, but it was thought better that the Government of the United States should assume a more direct and absolute control and ownership of the canal and that it should be built upon guaranties furnished by the Government. Therefore the bill requires that all stocks, all securities of every kind, all bonds shall be extinguished and liquidated except stock that was issued to the Governments of Costa Rica and Nicaragua and also $12,000,000 of stock that had been issued in payment of the concessions, etc., which had been granted.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is $12,000,000, as I stated.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amount is $12,000,000. The Senator is correct about it. But that was simply to cover the concessions. As to the value of that stock it is a matter for anybody to form his own opinion upon. However, all the facts in regard to it and all the information we can gather has been printed with the recent report, as the Senator will see if he will look at it; but if there is anything further in the way of information that may be given we will give it with great pleasure.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have read the report and I fail to find any statement of the expenditures since the last testimony was taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. The detailed expenditures were not given, and the reason why we did not exact that was because those expenditures were going on day by day, and we were willing to trust to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of State, whoever they may be in the next Administration, if the bill is passed, to fix and limit and liquidate the amount that has actually been expended.

Mr. HOAR. I simply desire to say in this connection, before the resolution is adopted, that the recent experience of another country and our own experience in relation to the transcontinental railroad from 1862 to 1864 make it very important that Congress, through the Committee on Foreign Relations, should see to it that in the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, if the Government is to have any relation to it whatever, daylight shall constantly be turned in upon every transaction, and that nothing shall happen either of expenditure or receipt of Government aid, or conduct of the officials, or engineers, or the agencies charged with that structure which shall not be instantly made known to all mankind. It is a matter which concerns very much indeed the good name of this country and the pure and upright expenditure of our public moneys.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MORGAN. I prefer that the resolution shall go over until to-morrow and be printed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let it go over until Monday.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the resolution be read again.

The resolution was again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow and be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10007) to provide for lowering the height of a bridge proposed to be constructed across the Ohio River between Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Ky., by the Cincinnati and Covington Rapid Transit Bridge Company, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT ON DISEASES OF CATTLE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound of the special report of the Bureau of Animal Industry on diseases of cattle and cattle feeding 60,000 copies, of which 20,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 40,000 for the use of the House.

REPORT ON THE SHEEP INDUSTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound of the special report of the sheep industry of the United States 60,000 copies, of which 20,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 40,000 for the use of the House.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MORGAN was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce is instructed to inquire and report to the Senate the advantages, if any, that will accrue to the productions, industries, coastwise and foreign commerce, immigration, and other interests of the United States, by means of the additional facilities of transportation, and the reduction of the cost thereof that would be afforded by the building of a ship canal to connect the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans through Lake Nicaragua.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the resolution of the Senate which was adopted in executive session, under which the Committee on Foreign Relations got jurisdiction of the inquiry in respect of the Nicaragua Canal, was directed more particularly to the political aspects of that question, by which I mean of course the foreign aspects of it, than to the material questions that might affect the people of the United States in their commerce, in their productions, in their enterprises, and in their coastwise and foreign trade. So that committee, taking the instruction of the Senate, went very earnestly to work to ascertain what was the situation of the canal project under the concessions of the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and to ascertain what explorations and surveys had been made through that country to justify the expectation that a canal there, advantageous to the commerce of the world, could be constructed at a reasonable cost, and also to consider how far the Government of the United States had become engaged with the Governments of Costa Rica and Nicaragua in the effort to promote the building of the canal.

The committee did not feel that it was necessary or proper perhaps for them to go into a very broad inquiry in regard to the commercial advantages which would result from the canal to the people of the United States. It has occurred to me that that is an important inquiry. It is one to which the attention of the people of the United States has been very sharply directed and which they are now considering broadly through the land in a great many different ways and in a great many different conventions, tribunals, and Legislatures.

So I ventured to offer the resolution which has been read, with the view of getting the superior knowledge of the Committee on Commerce upon these particular topics, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the canal was after all to be of great commercial advantage to the people of the United States. I offered the resolution without consultation with the Committee on Foreign Relations and by no means as reflecting upon that committee in any sense at all, but for the purpose of getting before this body an expression of the proper committees concerned in such matters of the advantages or disadvantages, the propriety or impropriety of the building of this great work.

If the resolution should have the effect of delaying action upon the bill which has been reported the second time now with some changes, of course I would withdraw it. I would deprecate an action of that kind, for, while the country may not be fully informed in regard to all of the merits of the canal project, I think the Senate certainly must be if it has devoted any attention at all to the examination of the question, for the Committee on Foreign Relations has presented heretofore a sufficient statement in regard to the advantages of the canal to warrant all of us, I think, in believing that this work is one of great magnitude and great importance to the commerce and industries of the United States, to say nothing of its political effect upon our country, its effect in respect of its relations with foreign countries, and its effect also in respect of the communication between the Eastern and Western States of the American Union, and more particularly its effect upon a coastwise line of intercommunication between the Eastern and Western States.

The extent to which this subject has been investigated in the United States may be briefly stated by reference to the fact that memorials and resolutions favoring the Nicaragua Canal are pending before several of the Legislatures of the States. My own State has adopted a very earnest memorial to Congress in favor of the building of this canal by the Government of the United States or through its assistance. Then the two great national conventions took the subject up, and while their committals were not to any particular plan or project, they were broad and sweeping as to the necessity of the communication and the importance of it to the people of the United States, and I may say to the territorial defense, and perhaps I might further add the territorial integrity of this country of ours.

The national conventions that acted upon this subject, in substantial agreement, followed a much more specific resolution which the Democratic party had the honor of originating at the time when Mr. Buchanan was nominated for President of the United States, in which this canal was selected as a work that was committed, as far as they could commit it at least, to the care and custody of the Democratic party of the United States. That was a noble resolve of the Democratic party, as it is now of both the great parties. The disturbing influences of the political quarrels in our own country deferred action upon that subject, and the matter was dropped until recently both the national conventions have taken it up, and they have broadly espoused the idea advanced by Mr. Hayes and by all the Presidents in fact who have written upon this question in their messages, that this was to be an American canal and under American control; that it was a matter which was obliged to be consummated; that the sooner it was consummated the better; and that all proper and constitutional means are to be employed for the purpose of facilitating the progress of this very great work.

There are more than 6,000 newspapers in the United States that have committed themselves fully and completely to this project. There are not 100 newspapers in the United States that are opposed to it. Besides that, almost every commercial city in the United States has through its boards of trades, boards of exchange and the like, committed the governments of the cities to the proposition that the Government of the United States ought to build this canal, getting as close to the subject as a proper regard and respect for the sovereignty of Nicaragua and Costa Rica will permit us to approach it.

Besides that, many of the governors of the States have recommended the canal in messages to their respective Legislatures. Conventions have been held by five States—I may say State conventions have been held in five States—and in the State of New York there have been four or five different meetings of the leading commercial boards upon this question. The resolutions of every one of these conventions are specific to the purpose that the Government of the United States must assist in the construction of this canal in some form or other.

The control which the Government of the United States must have and can gain over this canal must depend entirely, I think, upon its opportunity and the use of its credit or money for assisting in its construction, for the nations of the earth with very jealous care have watched over the disposition which was to be made of this transit between the two oceans, and they have resolved and we have admitted that it was to be for the benefit of mankind. They have all further resolved openly or tacitly that some government must control it. No nation which has yet spoken on the subject has even conjectured that a mere private corporation or a corporate embodiment of private citizens would be able, without the control and assistance of some government, to build, operate, and control this canal.

Nicaragua and Costa Rica, who own the land, the lakes, etc., which furnish the opportunity and facilities for the building of this canal, who are sovereign within their own domain, and whose sovereignty is almost as precious in the eyes of the United States as our own, have concluded solemnly that they could not construct this canal. They have not the power to do it; they have not the credit; they have not the money; and they are obliged to have those resources of credit and money drawn from other countries or other people than their own. These Governments have therefore reserved the sovereignty over the territory in which the canal is to be built, and they are content with that reservation. They united in granting concessions, solemnly made by the legislative and executive authorities of their respective countries, to American citizens for the purpose of enabling them to do what? Not to build a canal out of their own money or through their own exertions or upon their own credit, but to organize, according to the terms of these concessions, a company of execution, which company of execution receives its baptismal name in the concessions themselves, and is to be called the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua. That company of execution is to have its principal place of business in New York or elsewhere, as the company may determine; but New York is mentioned.

These two governments have conceded in respect of the canal and the properties which are essential to its construction, maintenance, and operation, everything which could be required, except the ultimate sovereignty over the territory. They have conceded, in accordance with the treaty they made with Great Britain in 1860 and in accordance with the treaties made with us heretofore, in 1867, a free port at Brito and at Greytown, those ports being the terminals of this canal. They have conceded to these gentlemen a right of way across that Isthmus for the canal as broad as may be requisite for its construction and maintenance; they have conferred upon them the power of condemnation so as to reach, under their laws, private property that may be necessary to be condemned for this purpose. They have withheld nothing at all which might be advantageous in the construction and operation and maintenance of this canal.

I think human ingenuity would overtax itself to find that Nicaragua and Costa Rica could possibly confer upon any company of execution any higher or greater advantages than are conferred in these concessions in respect of all the material assistance which can be given by the grant of the right of way, the right of free navigation, and the remission of tolls of every kind and character on the part of the governments in connection with this enterprise.

When these concessions had been made—and I will here remark that these concessions provide for the impartial use of this canal by all the nations of the earth—Nicaragua and Costa Rica had therein made engagements in respect of it, which have equal solemnity as if they had been announced in a treaty between two governments. They are engagements made with American citizens; they are engagements which relate to the physical geography of the western hemisphere they relate practically to our coast lines, our coastwise trade, certainly, and to our trade with foreign countries.

They have a very peculiar relation to the United States in the fact that when this canal is constructed we shall save the necessity of expending twice the amount of money in building ships of war which we now find necessary to protect our interests upon the two great oceans which wash our shores on the east and on the west. Other facilities of a like kind, of a military kind, I will say, or of a naval kind, are of the highest possible importance, and they also are guaranteed in these concessions. All these rights are guaranteed to American citizens. One hundred thousand dollars in money was paid by them for these concessions into the treasury of Nicaragua, and other large sums were paid by them and by the United States for surveys.

In addition to what I have mentioned, however, Nicaragua also conceded a dowry of public land of very great value and of immense extent to this canal company in absolute right, with the right and privilege of not merely taking the land for the purpose of building the canal, but the company may proceed to sell it; they may proceed to cut the valuable timbers from it, and to export them to foreign countries. The company entered into the possession of these properties in absolute right, not even determinable, as I understand, by the ninety-nine years termination of the concession, and another renewal, if it should not be renewed for another period of ninety-nine years, or indefinitely. Both these governments have declared these concessions to be permanent.

The Government of the United States, finding that it could facilitate the building of this canal, and could accomplish the great American purpose, that it should be an American canal and under American control; finding that these concessions had been made in this broad and solemn form in favor of our own citizens; finding that Costa Rica and Nicaragua, in pursuit of a policy from which they have never deviated at all, preferred that the Government of the United States should have the dominant control in the building and management of this canal, and with that view had made all of these concessions and grants; the United States Government, in view of those things, granted a charter here to the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, using the same name that had been employed in the concession; and thereby gave its consent to the entire plan.

In respect of that legislation the Congress of the United States pursued exactly the same lines of jurisdiction and the same breadth of control which they would have done if this had been a domestic corporation; just the same control over it as if all of the corporate functions were to be exercised completely within the United States. We limited the amount of the capital stock; we limited the amount and described the nature and character of the bonds which the company might issue; we prescribed to them who should be their directors and how they should be chosen; first of all, who should be their stockholders and company of organization, and we named the incorporators. Then we prescribed how their directors should be chosen and what their powers should be.

We gave to that company powers which were to be derived simply and solely from the sovereign power and authority of the United States, thereby corresponding in concurrent sovereign power with the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica in this great international project, which was to be accomplished by parallel legislation, and not by treaty, because we had failed to do it by treaty. In thus responding to these Governments and accepting their overtures we bound our Government in honor and good faith that our citizens, under this charter and those concessions, should enjoy the rights and privileges and powers and immunities which we conferred upon them as a body corporate. Not only so, but we reserved to ourselves the right to repeal or alter or amend that charter, as Congress might see proper to do.

In estimating the importance of that reservation, let us observe for a moment who are the stockholders in this canal. By the concessions themselves and also by the charter which we granted, Costa Rica and Nicaragua, as sovereign republics, are stockholders in the canal. They reserved in those concessions, one of them six millions of stock and the other one and one-half millions as a part of the consideration of making the concessions, with the accompanying right to appoint directors in the board of directors.

We have according to that charter a corporation created here with fifteen directors, one of whom shall be appointed by the Government of Nicaragua and one appointed by the Government of Costa Rica. So, virtually and actually, three republics are engaged as stockholders and directors and managers and legislative controllers of this great international corporation.

The powers conceded to the United States in these grants include the full legislative power to create, organize, and control the canal corporation and to be the owners of stock therein and to take mortgages upon all the property and belongings of the company except the concessions themselves.

Some question has been made about this being a private corporation. I pity the man who does not know the distinction between public and private corporations sufficiently to see at once a distinction between this corporation and any private corporation. It rises even above that, and it attains to the peculiar distinction, justified perhaps only by the situation in this particular instance, of an international corporation not created by treaty, but created by legislative obligations assumed by the respective powers through the agency of their own legislative tribunals, which, in our own country, and I believe in the others also, stand above the treaty-making power.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If it will not interrupt the Senator from Alabama, since he is speaking so interestingly upon the charter of this company as passed by the Government and having relation to pending legislation, I should like to ask a question. The charter of the company provides that none but stockholders shall be directors, a provision which is inserted in the charter of every corporation of which I have any knowledge, whether created by the Government or by any State of the Union, and the pending bill provides as to ten or fifteen directors that it shall be a condition precedent to their being directors of this company that they shall not own stock. I should like to ask which will govern, the charter heretofore granted, or this bill if it should pass?

Mr. MORGAN. I will come to the minutia of the Senator's objection when I reach the Senator's point. I will not deal with it just now. That is too small a question to come up just in this connection.

The Government of the United States, however, has committed itself to these concessions and to these acts of Nicaragua and Costa Rica by admitting these two Governments to be stockholders in a corporation chartered by itself, and also to the right to appoint directors in this company. Costa Rica and Nicaragua, on the other hand, have so far submitted their rights as sovereign powers into the control of the Congress of the United States—which, as I remarked, is the supreme controlling power in our land over treaties and obligations of every kind with foreign countries—as that we can alter or amend a charter to which Nicaragua and Costa Rica are parties. And they have each accepted and ratified all that Congress has enacted.

More than that. In order to show how clearly and how fully the Congress of the United States understood its relations to this canal project, how truly it is an international project, and how far it is under the control of the Government of the United States, we further provided in that charter that the president and secretary of that company annually, or as often as might be required, should make a report to our Secretary of the Interior of all of the assets and debts and obligations of this corporation, and all of its doings, not merely in matters of construction, but also in matters of maintenance and operation, thereby retaining on the part of the Government of the United States, through one of its departments, a continual supervision over every step that is taken in respect of this canal work and the management and control of the canal.

Therefore, we shall have to divorce ourselves from this canal company before we can escape these obligations, or else the canal company will have to divorce themselves from us before they can escape the control and management which we are going to exercise over them. I do not doubt that they could do it; I do not doubt that Nicaragua and Costa Rica could consent—I doubt if they would do it without great reluctance, however—that the Government of Great Britain should step into our shoes and charter this company and take advantage of these concessions and go on and do what we are proposing to do about them.

Logically, the Government of Great Britain has just as much right as we have, under those concessions, to charter a company, to supply the money, and to take the control of it which we propose to take. I think nobody can deny that. If Costa Rica and Nicaragua were to tender an overture of that kind to that Government, and if the owners of these concessions—we are not the owners of these concessions—were to take them to the Parliament of Great Britain and offer them what they have offered to us, and he British Parliament should accept it, we should have but one plea to present in opposition to it; and that is the worn and torn and fragmentary Monroe doctrine, which we have succeeded in the Senate of the United States in nearly destroying.

We would have no other plea for resisting the transfer of the right to create and control such a company of execution to Great Britain, except that this must be an American canal, under American control, and that this is an essential feature of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the Senator state in this connection, in case objection is made to the pending bill, that in some way or other the owners of the $12,000,000 of stock, who have received it for the concessions which have been granted by those two governments, will have an undue influence in governing and controlling this corporation and be able to regulate its tolls, that the view taken by the Committee on Foreign Relations is that the power of the corporation is absolutely under the control of the Government from the very beginning of its operations.

Mr. MORGAN. Upon the bill reported there is no doubt that the power of the Government is reserved in control of the operations of this corporation in many ways. The first and most important matter in that connection is that we are to own absolutely eighty-one and a half million dollars of the stock of this company.

Mr. SHERMAN. Eighty million five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought it was $81,000,000 of the stock of this company out of $100,000,000. That gives us the whole power of control, so far as the direction of the company is concerned; and I do not understand that anybody desires to have greater control than that within the limits of the powers of the corporation upon the basis of the concessions.

Then we go on to prescribe various matters of settlement between this company and the Government of the United States before anything can be done in the way of the issue of bonds or the transfer of stock to the United States Government. One of these is that all contracts existing for work upon that canal of every kind and character shall be considered as abrogated, wiped out, so that we shall have tabula rasa when we start out again to make new contracts. Another is that all the work to be done upon this canal and all the expenditures to be made for the payment of that work is to be made under the supervision of a board of United States engineers, having no connection whatever with this canal company, no interest in it, and no dependence upon it at all.

We concede in this bill $12,000,000 of stock to the present owners of it, which $12,000,000 of stock was placed beyond the power of the canal company before Congress commenced to deal with this question, and when they had just as much right to dispose of that stock as any Senator here has to dispose of any piece of property he owns. We found the canal company in that situation. A company had been formed, under a charter in Colorado, I believe, with a capital of $12,000,000 for the purpose of owning and working under these concessions. In the first estimate of what they would do the Colorado company was considered to be the nucleus around which the whole structure of this canal was to be formed.

Finding, however, that the people of the United States—not the people of Colorado—had great and material interests in this canal, and that it was proper and better and necessary that the people of the United States, through their Congress, should grant powers of incorporation, the Maritime Canal Company was chartered here. That did not dissolve or in any way affect the Colorado Construction Company, who owned the concession. They had paid for the concession to the gentlemen who bought it and paid the money out of their pockets for it, and paid for the surveys in large part which were made through that country. They had paid for this concession, and the construction company sold it to the Maritime Company for what? Twelve million dollars of their stock.

What was that worth at the time? In the market it was worth nothing; it was something that was entirely problematical and conjectural. They expected, of course, if the canal should be built, that it would rise perhaps to par and might even go above par, for I am one of those people who believe that in twenty years from to-day, if this bill is passed, the $80,000,000 which the United States proposes to own of the stock in this canal will be worth $160,000,000. But at the time that they paid $12,000,000 of the stock of the Maritime Canal Company for stock of the construction company under the Colorado charter that stock was practically worth nothing. It was a mere exchange of stock from the construction company into the Maritime Company. We found it there. What did the Senator expect us to do? Take it away from them? We had not any right to do it. They had done nothing contrary to the powers of legislation which Congress exercised in respect of the transfer of that stock. The canal company had the right to purchase the concessions and pay for them in their stock. Finding it there, we were compelled to respect the ownership. Congress could not annul that purchase and sale except by repealing the charter of the canal company.

More than that, the Maritime Canal Company in raising money for the purpose of doing the work which had been already done upon the canal—and a very large amount of it has been done—to a greater or less degree consented to the sale of this stock to raise the money to enable this construction company or its contractors to go on and build this very work. How did they raise it? By selling this stock through the country. It is now in the ownership of American citizens, and a number of American citizens own this stock.

How are we to get this back? Are we to hunt around through the country and find the different individuals in the United States who, under the authority of law, have made these purchases in order that we may capture it? When we get it under this bill or under any bill that shall be passed, all the stock that we shall take away from the purchasers from the Maritime Company or the Maritime Company itself, which they bought and paid for, and which was delivered to them for cash in hand paid out—all of that stock would have to be merely added to the eighty millions of stock donated to the United States, got without paying a cent for it. How can we assume an attitude of that kind? We say to the Maritime Company, "Deliver up to us $80,000,000 of this stock in absolute right as a part of the consideration of our indorsing your bonds for $100,000,000."

After we have done that they say, "Why, here is $12,000,000 of stock in addition, which we have actually sold, in the hands of private citizens." Shall we say to them, "Get that also and add that to the $80,000,000 of stock"? Shall we take it out of the hands of private citizens of the United States and put it into the Treasury as an asset of the Government? Certainly not. We might just as well say to Nicaragua that your reservation of $6,000,000 and to Costa Rica that your reservation of $1,500,000 of stock, in the concessions themselves, you also shall deliver into the hands of the United States before we will vote a dollar or before we will do anything to assist any person in building this canal.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me another question, which I trust he will not consider as unimportant as the other?

Mr. MORGAN. I considered the Senator's question important, but I had not got to a point where I could answer it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator stated that under this arrangement the United States would have $80,000,000 of ownership in stock. What the United States does for this company, in view of the vast importance of the undertaking, is to guarantee the payment of $100,000,000 of its bonds, principal and interest, at maturity, and in consideration of that guaranty of its bonds the United States is to receive a gift of $80,000,000 of stock, or eight-tenths of the stock of the company, which is to be marked by law "full paid and nonassessable."

Mr. SHERMAN. Eighty million five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Eighty million five hundred thousand dollars. As I read the bill, it is $80,000,000 of the stock of the company. If this were a private corporation this would be considered the most atrocious watering of stock that was ever heard of, and any court would set it aside on the ground that it had not been issued for value. I ask the Senator from Alabama if he believes this Government can take good title for $80,000,000 of stock, for which it has not paid a penny and is not obligated to pay a penny?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know anything about that. I do not know any judicial establishment in this country that would set it aside. There is no question that the United States would take good title unless some court should overturn it. I think that no court would hold that Congress has no power to make such a provision of law.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will ask the Senator from Alabama if he thinks it is a good precedent to set to other corporations, to tell them that they may water their stock to any extent, provided they can get somebody to indorse their bonds?

Mr. MORGAN. There is no other corporation like this in the world, never was, and I suppose never will be. Therefore the question of precedent does not have any great effect upon the morality of any contracts hereafter made under which works are hereafter to be built and constructed. Moreover the Government of the United States is dealing with this subject as a sovereign, and the Congress of the United States is exercising in this matter that sort of relationship to foreign governments which is a very close approximation to the diplomatic power. Indeed, this seems now to be the only procedure that is left open to us. I have not heard yet that nations are always controlled by sentiment or ideas of strict morality in their dealings with each other in respect of matters which concern their destiny and the interests of their people.

Wars are not usually very moral methods of redress, yet nations resort to war sometimes for the right, sometimes for the wrong; even diplomacy is not always severely moral.

So, while I, with some considerable shrug of my shoulders, received the suggestion that we should absolutely own the $80,000,000 of stock, because I thought it a hard exaction on the company, when I came to think it over I found that after all we were putting up the $100,000,000; that we were relying upon our ability to control the operations of the canal and upon the income from the canal to return to us the $100,000,000 after it had been expended. I thought therefore we might as well have stock in the ownership of the United States as to make it a very valuable property for gentlemen who would otherwise own it and who had expended no large amount of money upon it. That was the conclusion to which I came. Now that we are at that conclusion, I feel firmly fortified in the belief that it is strictly honest and high-toned in every respect, and I have not any sort of qualms about it.

If the owners of the concession are willing to this proceeding, as I am informed they are, they have the right to donate all the stock, not otherwise disposed of, to the United States, and they will not suffer in doing so beyond the speculative advantage they might find in the ultimate building of the canal with foreign money. This is as repugnant to them as it would be to any other patriotic Americans.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I wish to suggest another thing. The $12,000,000 of private stock held by individuals, together with the stock held by the two governments of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, is utterly valueless except as subject to the payment of the entire cost of the whole work. Practically, therefore, it is very much like a good deal of other stock which has been issued by railroads in the United States of America, where stock and bonds have been issued, the bonds issued to build the road and the stock given in the nature of a benefit to the successful builders of the road. That has been very common. As a matter of course, this stock of $12,000,000—that is one thing I would like to have in the RECORD—together with the stock owned by the two governments, is absolutely mortgaged as well as the stock owned by us; so that they have no property whatever until every dollar of the debt contracted in the building of this work is paid off in full.

Mr. MORGAN. That is all true, Mr. President, and it is a very forcible illustration of the fact that it is right and proper in morals as well as in national legislation that where a government comes forward and furnishes its credit to give value to whatever is contributed or allowed to be reserved by other people, they have not any right to complain (and in this case they do not complain) that we are making for them the par value of $12,000,000 in this stock after the canal has been entirely completed, whereas that stock at the present moment and under existing circumstances may be said to have no value.

If we lift the $12,000,000 of stock to par in money; that is a good reason why they should accept our offer; but until the canal is completed and paid for they can get no dividends, neither can they sell the stock.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] referred also to a mortgage which is provided for in the bill. I was a little averse to putting a mortgage in the bill, because it is a mortgage operating upon the stock and all the belongings of the canal of every kind and character, except the concessions themselves, and might hereafter possibly lead to some confusion in the matter of foreclosure, etc. When I examined the concessions more carefully, I found a mortgage was provided in their terms, to be given by the company of execution—the Maritime Canal Company—for the security of the bonds they might issue; and that these two republics, Costa Rica and Nicaragua, had consented that their stock in the company might be mortgaged for the security of the bonds, if I rightly understood the purport of the concessions. So, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] well suggests, all the money that the United States may have to expend in the building of this canal must be returned to us before this mortgage is satisfied; and after that is satisfied the stock will be at par or above par.

Mr. President, in dealing with a question of this kind we are obliged to leave some things to be provided for in the future. No man can anticipate every emergency of legislation or of direction or control which will arise in the administration of a work like this. Therefore the committee in preparing this bill have not attempted to anticipate every possible objection which might arise, or every possible difficulty which might be in the way, nor is that a wise effort of legislation.

We should fail utterly if we were compelled to satisfy ourselves here that every provision we make in every bill will work out the proper consequences and that there would be no defects hereafter to be supplied. Look at your Interstate Railway Commission. Here after the courts have acted upon its powers, notwithstanding the Senate and House of Representatives bestowed months of labor and investigation of the most patient and searching character upon that bill, we find it necessary even for the purposes of its operation that we shall now amend it.

Here we are considering an antioption bill. We have that before the Senate and a great many objections arise and a great many difficulties are suggested. No man expects that when that bill comes to a final test, if it is passed at all, that it will contain a perfect system of legislation upon that intricate and involved subject, nor need any man expect that in a proposed act of Congress like that which we have reported from this committee, every emergency which may arise in this affair has been anticipated and successfully answered. That a man like my friend from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is a very able and astute lawyer, can raise objections, only argues against the infirmity of human legislation, it argues that the mind which is constructing is far more defenseless and assailable in its best efforts than the one which is attacking and attempting to destroy, or throw down.

I have attempted to lay before the Senate the general outline of the situation as to this canal. Before leaving the subject, however, I should like to say that this bill is in strict accordance with the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; it is an execution of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty in respect of all that relates to that canal.

In 1860, seven years before we essayed to establish our rights in Nicaragua by treaty relating to a ship canal, the vigilant and almost all-wise Government of Great Britain went into that country with her minister and negotiated a treaty with Nicaragua in relation to a canal through Lake Nicaragua and the waters of the San Juan River, which seven years later were literally copied, almost word for word, in a treaty which we negotiated with Nicaragua for the same purpose. Great Britain was six years ahead of us in getting the very privileges which are found in our treaty with Nicaragua to sustain these concessions and all that we are doing under them. That was ten years later than the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

If this bill is in accordance with our treaty with Nicaragua, it is obliged to be in accordance with the British treaty with Nicaragua, because the treaties are almost word for word identical upon all of these propositions.

If, therefore, Great Britain in 1860 could make such a treaty as that with Nicaragua, notwithstanding the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which had been made ten years before, how can there be a doubt that in executing the treaty with Nicaragua we have got the consent of Great Britain to do what we propose, expressed in like words in the treaty, which seven years before she had negotiated with the same Government? I repeat, if it is necessary thus to silence objections, that we are only doing what Great Britain has sanctioned in her construction of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, as it appears in her treaty of 1860 with Nicaragua.

I refer to this, Mr. President, to show the idleness and ineffectualness of all the objections which have been sprung in respect of this measure in the consideration of our diplomatic relations with Great Britain and Nicaragua and all other countries of the world. We are strictly in line with all that has been agreed upon by these respective governments.

In my advocacy of this scheme, Mr. President, I must plead guilty to a strong sectional bias, and I look with admiration and reverence to the firm and manly and patriotic and statesmanlike advocacy of this great scheme, which has been given to it by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who was on that committee when we made a unanimous report in favor of a bill not so good as this; by the two Senators from Ohio, Messrs. SHERMAN and Payne, by the Senator from Vermont, Mr. Edmunds, the Senator from New York, Mr. Evarts, and later the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. These gentlemen, whose States have not the actual and immediate interest in this canal which my State has, came forward in a spirit of broad, splendid statesmanship and proved their devotion to the best interests of this whole country by undertaking to do, through powers which I think are indisputable and unquestionable, that for our country which is to be the crowning glory, if we shall accept it, of the nineteenth century.

I have a more immediate interest in the ship canal. I represent a State here which borders upon that great southern Mediterranean, the Gulf of Mexico, surrounded by greater powers of natural production than the Mediterranean of the East—a Mediterranean into which the Amazon pours its flood from the south and the west and the Mississippi from the north, a Mediterranean through which the Gulf Stream pours its floodtide of warm waters across the Atlantic Ocean to refresh the western coast of Europe; a Mediterranean around which God has clustered all power of agricultural production, and then He nas raised the mountains, that shield and protect these peculiar agricultural interests, and has stored them full of the most valuable minerals known to the uses of humanity, and clothed them with forests that are majestic beyond the power of words to describe. River after river pours its floods into this grand Mediterranean.

The eye of that great American seer, Lieut. Maury, looked at this subject more than fifty years ago, and pictured far beyond the power that I possess even to recall it, the greatness and the grandeur of this enterprise of connecting these two oceans by a ship canal, which has been the dream of all the maritime powers of this earth in all the ages since Columbus first discovered this western hemisphere.

My peculiar interest in it, Mr. President, is because we in Alabama, Tennessee, and Georgia, have a vast peninsula of coal, making the nearest approach to the Gulf of any other deposit of that kind in America, an inexhaustible supply of valuable coal for all the purposes of the arts and of navigation. We can supply power out of the bosom of the earth in Alabama and in contiguous parts of Tennessee and Georgia at a lower rate of cost, including transportation to the place of consumption, than I think can be found in any part of the United States.

When I have said that, I have said as much for it as I can say, because the United States can furnish power to her machinery at a lower rate by far than any other country in the world, even if we include in the estimate the cheapness of the cost, the degradation, poverty, and distress of their laboring classes, and the consequent ability to obtain cheap fuel. The Alabama River embraces the coal fields of that State as if the arms of Providence had encircled her for the purpose of carrying the productions of our State down to the Gulf.

On all the bosom of this great Southern country, from Petersburg in Virginia around to the western limit of Texas, there grows a crop which is peculiar to the climate, a crop which gives to us, even if we had nothing else to boast of in the United States, a commercial power and ascendency over all the nations of this earth if we make a proper use of it, if we raise all that we can, manufacture all that we can, and supply to all the other nations of the earth this great and beautiful textile at a cheaper rate than can be done elsewhere in the world.

In the recent depression which has taken place in the value of the cotton crops of the South, when we are producing at the outside nine million bales and ought to be producing eighteen millions, we have been casting about for the reasons which have caused the loss in the value of cotton, and we have supposed, erroneously, that it was because we were making more cotton than the world demanded, when the fact is that we are simply making more than the cost of transportation will justify us in carrying it to the fields of consumption.

This subject has recently attracted the attention of the people of the South, and has, of course, greatly interested them. We have resorted to our best means of information to ascertain whether anything could be done by the Government of the United States, as a government, in furnishing facilities to commerce to relieve us of a depression, which is not natural and is not due to an oversupply of cotton, but to a depression which has been the result of overcharges of transportation, the great distances we have to travel, and the dangers and difficulties of the seas through which we have to pass in order to reach a real market of consumption.

This subject was brought to the attention of the Cotton Exchange of New Orleans, and I think I am safe in saying that there is not a more intelligent body of commercial men in the United States than the Cotton Exchange of New Orleans, particularly in reference to that staple. Mr. Hester has been the secretary of that exchange for many years, and he has devoted great abilities—for he possesses great abilities—industriously, carefully, systematically, and honestly to the development of every fact which could bear upon the production and price of cotton and upon every fact relating to the commerce which cotton furnishes the material to support.

Mr. F. J. Odendahl is the president of the New Orleans Board of Trade, another very important body of commercial men, wise, able, discreet, and sincere. Mr. Odendahl believes that the construction of a canal through Nicaragua would have a material bearing upon the consumption of cotton, and so he addressed a letter to the secretary of the Cotton Exchange, Mr. Hester, and got from him a reply which is worthy of the attention of every man in the United States. It is accurate, succinct, complete, sincere, and true, and therefore I will ask the Secretary, with the permission of the President, to read the letter of Mr. Hester in reply to Mr. Odendahl.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). The letter will be read, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COTTON EXCHANGE,
New Orleans, La., January 3, 1893.

F. J. ODENDAHL, Esq.,
President New Orleans Board of Trade, Limited, New Orleans, La.:

DEAR SIR: In answer to your request for data concerning the cotton trade of England with the East, I find it most convenient to use the figures of 1891, as the latest year of which we have full statistics. In a few days the facts for 1892 will be made known, but for the purposes we have in view one year will serve equally with another.

Taking the close of the ten-year periods of 1870, 1880, and 1890, the value of the total exports of piece goods from Great Britain to the principal districts of the world ranged from £52,500,000 to £57,700,000, and that of yarns from £12,300,000 to £14,800,000. While the trade of 1891 was somewhat less than the average of these, due rather to low prices than volume of transactions, it reached £52,400,000 in piece goods and £11,200,000 in yarns.

In a word, Great Britain manufactures from raw cotton and exports more than the value of $300,000,000 annually in American money of piece goods and yarns, not including nearly $40,000,000 of thread, hosiery, lace, etc.

The official statistics show that of this vast trade in cotton goods alone (equivalent to over one-third the annual exports of all articles of agricultural products and other merchandise from the United States), nearly 57 per cent of the piece goods and 33 per cent of the yarns were shipped to the British East Indies, China, Japan, Java, etc., amounting in values to upward of $170,000,000. The significance of this total may be best appreciated when compared with the value of shipments of raw cotton from the United States to the United Kingdom, which is stated by the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, at Washington, to have amounted for the year ending June 30, 1891, to $170,864,000. In short, Great Britain sent to the East, in the shape of manufactured cotton goods, most of which might find a market via the Nicaragua Canal, an amount equal to the entire value of our exports of raw cotton to her.

At present, our own trade with the East is comparatively insignificant, the entire exports of all articles, manufactured and unmanufactured, to Asia and Oceanica during the Treasury year above named aggregating $43,814,000, of which $6,496,000 were agricultural products and $37,318,000 other merchandise.

Of these China took $8,700,000 worth; Hong Kong, $4,743,000; Japan, $1,801,000; British East Indies, $1,400,000; Dutch East Indies, $2,103,000; or, say in all, $24,747,000.

Small as these figures appear by comparison, they will appear smaller still when it is remembered that they embrace not cotton goods alone, but every article of any kind exported. In fact our exports of cotton goods amount to a trifle; not only as compared with Great Britain's total of these articles, but as compared with the volume of our own export trade. I have not the items by me at the moment to show precisely what our shipments were to British India, China, Japan, etc., but this is not necessary to give a clear idea of the situation as regards cotton.

The following will do as well:

Total exports of domestic produce and merchandise of all kinds from the United States, year ending June 30, 1891	$872,270,000
Total to Asia and Oceanica	43,813,000
Per cent of the latter to whole, .05.
Total exports cotton manufactures, same time	13,605,000

While England sends of the products of her looms and spindles the worth of one hundred and seventy odd millions of dollars to clothe the people of the far East, we, who produce the raw material in the greatest quantity and under the most favorable circumstances, send considerably less than one-twentieth of that amount.

Referring to our China trade, a leading trade journal notices that our exports to that country have fallen from 80,934,000 yards in 1890-'91, to 65,859,000 in 1891-'92, due, it states, to the very poor condition of the China trade. It takes courage, however, from the fact that our shipments to South American ports appear to have reached 45,920,000 yards in 1891-'92, against 26,678,000 in 1890-'91, premising that such a statement affords a hopeful outlook, and indicates a promising opening for the development of this trade. Such figures, compared with nearly 2,000,000,000 yards shipped from Great Britain to British East India, and 823,000,000 yards to China, Japan, etc., show not only the enormous disparity, but what we might possibly draw from, under favorable circumstances.

It is for you and others who have studied the question of proximity to the great consuming centers, by way of the proposed Nicaragua Canal, to demonstrate how vast will be the improvement in our competitive facilities should that great highway be completed.

Without entering into such details, it almost goes without saying that while the entire manufacturing interests of the country are deeply concerned in its success, no section will be so greatly benefited thereby as the South. We need manufactures, but also a sure and lasting outlet for our manufactures.

Statistics show that we increased the number of our mills in the South from 164, containing 561,000 spindles, in 1880, to 305, containing 1,999,000 spindles in 1892, but yet we marketed in 1891-'92 a crop of 9,035,000 bales of cotton, of which we worked up but 686,000. The latter showed a marked increase, but it was quite small compared with what we should have done under properly favoring circumstances. In fact the entire United States, North and South, took for consumption less than 2,900,000 bales out of the 9,035,000 bale crop, and we were forced to find a market abroad for 6,000,000 bales.

Naturally, the foreign purchasers of two-thirds of our crop dictated the prices, which were the lowest for half a century, and they carried the bales thousands of miles off to undergo the process of manufacture, thence to be sent, in part, with cost of transportation to and fro, maintenance of British workmen and profits of manufacturers added, to the great markets of the East, giving America the go-by, because in the nature of things as they now exist there is no help for it. How far would the building of the Nicaragua canal offset these conditions? I am aware that there are many other points to be considered in this great question of trade and trade channels, but how far would they be simplified by the construction of that great artery? The cry is, room; room for our manufactures! How are we to obtain it unless we help ourselves? We not only want room for our manufactures, but we want more manufactures, especially in the South.

We have prospered as an agricultural people, but we can no longer depend on that alone. It is needed that we build manufactories by the side of our cotton fields and as we manufacture our seed into oil and cake, so must we convert the fleecy staple into yarns and cloths. When we can do this and find a cheap, ready, and speedy means of transporting these products to a market we shall find that cotton crops of nine, ten millions, or over, instead of proving a burden to the cotton farmer, will command fair prices and bring in their train prosperity and riches. Texas, with a crop which last year reached 2,400,000 bales, worked up in her mills less than 12,000 bales, her farmers having to find a market for practically her entire crop among the manufacturers in other States and foreign countries, and the cost of transportation to the consumer had to be borne by the producer. Louisiana consumed only 15,000 bales; Mississippi, 16,000; Arkansas but 1,600, and Alabama 42,000. Here are five great cotton-growing States, producing more than two-thirds of the American cotton crop, having within their borders but thirty-eight cotton mills (out of a total of 305 in the South), and whose annual consumption is less than 90,000 bales.

Would not the Nicaragua canal change all this? We need a market for cotton, raw or manufactured. Would not the Nicaragua canal bring it to our doors in such shape as to prevent our begging the foreign mill owner to take it from us at starvation prices, as we were forced to do with last year's heavy surplus?

To my mind this great question, the successful issue of which will add to the prosperity of every State in the Union, appeals more directly to the South than any other section. Vast and far-reaching in its consequences, the work, which is beyond individual effort, is truly national in its scope; and, rich and powerful, the United States as a nation can readily accomplish without embarrassment that which, even were it within their power, should not be left to the care of individuals.

I can not see how this great question can be viewed in other than a favorable light by every well-wisher of our Southern country.

Very truly, yours,

H. G. HESTER, Secretary.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I put those facts on record in order that any Senator or anybody else in the United States may challenge any or all of the statements made by Mr. Hester; and with the assertion that if his statements are true, there can not be anything done for the Southern people of equal advantage to the building of the Nicaragua Canal, so as to give us access to the eastern Asiatic countries for our cotton. Those people consume per capita, according to their ability—of course, that is a qualification I must put in—more cotton than any other people in the world. If we can get direct communication across the Pacific Ocean from our cotton fields to China and Japan and other countries, and even to India, we shall find that we shall harvest that wealth of the Indies about which we have heard so many romantic statements made in past times.

It used to be that the harvest of the wealth of the Indies was made by the buccaneers, the pirates, and the invaders who would go there and seize the glittering gems of those people, their gold and silver treasures, and the like, but in this age of a better civilization we are trying to harvest the wealth of the Indies through our enterprise in manufactures and other industries; and in that respect we are promised a richer harvest, I think, than any nation has ever reaped from those countries if we will only have lines of cheap transportation to and from them.

The proposition which I submit to the Committee on Commerce is one which concerns, I think, more particularly the question of transportation than any other question. I am quite aware, in order to get our goods consumed in China and Japan and along there, that we have got to reduce the cost of manufacturing as well as the cost of transportation to some extent—I do not know to what extent—but certainly, if we begin by reducing the cost of transportation by one-half, as we shall, and the cost of time in making the journey there and back by more than one-half, we shall have made a very great advance in the direction of finding a proper market for the consumption of what has been considered, for the last three years, a large surplus of cotton. The fact is that it is a large deficiency, if measured by the actual demands of the world.

Mr. Odendahl submits some extracts from the annual address to the New Orleans Board of Trade by its president on January 4, 1893, in reply to Mr. Hester, which I shall also read:

On November 30 the national Nicaragua convention assembled in this city. This convention was called and organized within twenty days. Delegates of the highest representative character from forty States met here and memorialized Congress to aid in the construction and to assume the control of the Nicaragua Canal.

It is needless to dwell on the advantages the commerce of the United States, yes, the entire world will gain from the completion of this canal.

The population of this country is daily increasing, and this increased population is daily producing larger and greater crops; so that our productions are increasing at an immense ratio over the increase of our consumption.

For the past twenty-five years this increase in production has been steadily going on, but no new avenues of trade have been opened to meet this increase in production.

It has come to this: that an average crop of either of the great agricultural products causes depressed values below the possible cost of production. An eight to nine million-bale crop of cotton will be a matter of ordinary occurrence in the future, but the consequence, with only the present outlets for disposition, will be fearful for the planter.

It is the duty of our Government and of every commercial body in this country, and especially of our board of trade, to see that new avenues for disposition of these surplus crops are created.

The Nicaragua Canal is one which will open to America a large and new field for the consumption of cotton and cotton goods. Near 2,000,000 bales of this article are consumed yearly on the eastern coast of Asia, for which the Southern ports will be, by means of this canal, the direct basis of supply, being nearer than any other direct cotton port of the world.

England's commercial greatness is due to her aggressive commercial policy. She pushes her wares and aids all British commercial enterprises wherever she can.

The United States should follow her example and find new and larger fields for her surplus crops, no matter at what cost, otherwise our country will suffer immensely in the near future from overproduction.

In all of which, Mr. President, I must give my hearty concurrence to the wise suggestions and arguments of the president of the Board of Trade of New Orleans.

Now, Mr. President, this matter of increasing the consumption of our productions has had recently a very remarkable illustration. The famine in Russia caused us to ship large quantities of corn into Russia. Those people knew nothing about the use of it or the preparation of it for food, but we sent instructions along, and even, I believe, cooks for the purpose of showing them how to prepare this splendid grain for human nutrition. The result is that Germany, France, and Italy, as well as Russia and Austria, are now casting about for the best method of the preparation of Indian corn for food, and that is likely to enter very largely into the consumption of the world.

What a blessing that will be to the farmers in all parts of the United States, from the Canadian line down to the southern part of the peninsula of Florida! There is no development of commerce that promises better than this, or is better worthy of the care and attention of the people of the United States. Suppose we can get the Chinese, the Japanese, the Hindoos to substitute even as a part of their food our flour and the wheat productions for the rice they are consuming now, how will we go about doing that? We have merely to teach them how to cook it. That is all, for when they get here they discard their rice and take up with our flour bread.

The people in that section of the earth have to be educated, to some extent, in the consumption of these cereals, but when that process of education has gone on even very moderately what a vast outlet it will make for the wheat and corn of the West and for all the productions that are grown in consequence of it. Here is the Japanese Government, the other day, issuing an imperial decree that the people of Japan shall indulge more in the consumption of flesh as food. They say their stature is being dwarfed—of course their mental and physical powers are being lessened—and their wise men in that country have come to a very wise conclusion about it, which is that they have been living entirely too much upon farinaceous foods; that they must resort to an increased use of flesh. What a field of commerce is open to us in these new and improved ideas which they are borrowing from us and which are worth nearly as much to them as the Christianity that we are sending them.

Mr. President, I do not wish to protract these remarks. It is a subject upon which any man might dwell almost indefinitely. What I wish to do is to get the Committee on Commerce to investigate this matter and see whether or not Mr. Hester has told the truth about the cotton crop in the South. If he has told the truth about it, it is a perfectly logical argument that there are truths hidden away, and ready to be developed in respect of the cereals and the meat product of this country which are of infinite importance, and we shall reach through this canal, immediately and directly, that market which will draw to us truly the harvest of the wealth of the Indies.

I no not wish to protract my remarks upon this occasion, for I really rose only for the purpose of trying to draw the attention of the Senate and the country to these remarkable statements of Mr. Hester and to a great body of facts cognate to these, which must present themselves to the minds of all enterprising and patriotic men in this country.

A question was asked me in regard to the frame of the bill. I did not intend when I got up to go into the matter as to the frame of the bill, except merely to show the outline of the proceeding and to show how intimately the Government of the United States, as a Government, is connected already by its legislation with this great project.

The question asked by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] related to the fact that the Government directors are not to be stockholders of the company, and shall report directly to the President of the United States. Now, we have a precedent for that. We have Government directors who are not stockholders in the Union and Central Pacific Railroads, and they are required also to report directly to Congress, or to the President of the United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Government directors of the Union Pacific have no voting powers as to the affairs of the corporation.

Mr. MORGAN. They ought to have.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But they have not. No Government director has a voice in the direction of the policy of the corporation.

Mr. MORGAN. What is the use of having them if they can not vote with the other directors?

Mr. WOLCOTT. They are the Government directors to report, I understand, to the Government the conduct of the affairs of the company.

Mr. MORGAN. They can stand there as spies, but they can not vote as to the affairs of the company. That is a very great mistake in legislation, and that very defect led to the Crédit Mobilier. If we had put in Government directors there, men of independence to act on behalf of the Government and control its affairs the Crédit Mobilier scandal would not have occurred. Just so if the French Government could, with the permission of the United States, have taken charge of the Panama Canal and put its directors there, the robberies which have taken place and which have disgraced and nearly destroyed that honorable republic would not have been perpetrated.

This bill provides, with abundant caution, that ten of the fifteen directors shall be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate; that they shall be men who are not stockholders of the company; that they shall report directly to the President of the United States, and that not more than five of the ten directors shall be of the same political faith, dividing them equally between the great leading political parties of the country.

With a guardianship of that sort, ten directors out of fifteen, and with the further guardianship of a director from the Republic of Nicaragua, and another from the Republic of Costa Rica, and then three more to be selected by the stockholders, have we not furnished every possible opportunity for scrutiny, and have we not anticipated and frustrated, I may say, every possible chance for carrying this canal scheme into that mire of fraud and corruption and villainy which is now so shocking to the sensibilities of the great and noble French people.

They are a great and noble people, and always have been. The name of France is not only dear to us in connection with our grand revolutionary traditions, but it is near to us in connection with having inspirited us with that progressiveness in invention and in other grand endeavors that have marked the nineteenth century as the grandest in all the list.

The French are a wise, sagacious, thoughtful, earnest, determined people. Even their peasantry are men who study over public and private affairs with great deliberation, and when they have made up their minds they act with firmness. They found that they had intrusted, some of them at least, large sums of money and great powers into the hands of Mr. De Lesseps, and that he had made a magnificent and triumphant success in the building up of the Suez Canal. He therefore had no difficulty in attracting to his scheme large contributions or subscriptions from the French people. They poured their money in a flood into the mire of the Panama Canal, where, according to the premonition of our own delegate sent to the Parisian congress, it was necessarily bound to be lost.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senate indulge me one minute longer?

Mr. PUGH. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily so that my colleague may finish his remarks.

Mr. MORGAN. I have only a few words more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the regular order be laid aside informally to allow his colleague to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very thankful to my colleague and the Senate for this indulgence.

This committee on two occasions have reported bills to aid this canal, and they have, with the utmost caution, in view of all the developments of the Crédit Mobilier and the recent Panama scandal, put into the bill every cautionary provision that we could find for the purpose of guarding against any of the disgraceful results which have characterized some of these great enterprises. It is only in respect to railroads in this country, or to one railroad in this country, I believe, that any corruption has been alleged, although we have six or seven transcontinental roads and four or five of them have been largely subsidized by the Government with grants of land or grants of money.

The people of the United States, when they are themselves looking upon the conduct of their own officials in the management of a great public trust like this, are not afraid that they are going to drop into the slough of putridity and corruption. They are not to be terrified from doing a great public duty by the mere fact that other men, in their attempts to benefit their country or to do something else, have gone into a distressful condition of disgrace. We have nothing to fear about that unless we are afraid of ourselves. If we are afraid of the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States and the confirming power of the Senate of the United States, then of course we ought to be afraid of what shall become of this canal.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. If it be not disagreeable to the honorable Senator from Alabama I should like to ask him a question in regard to this matter which I think it quite appropriate should be answered now. He is probably as familiar with this whole subject as anyone in the Senate or perhaps out of it. What are the securities now existing for absolute publicity in regard to all the transactions of the Nicaragua Canal Company?

The Senator has alluded to the Union Pacific Railroad. The two acts, the act of 1862 and the act of 1864, that act which we had occasion to review so thoroughly in connection with the Crédit Mobilier investigation, appointed so-called Government directors as supervisors or watchmen, without any authority of control, if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] is right. I do not remember about that; but at any rate the main purpose was that they were required by the law, if I recollect it aright, to be present, and it was provided that a Government director must be a member of every special and standing committee of the board of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad. They were to report annually to Congress, or to the Secretary of the Interior, and through him to Congress, such observations as they made in regard to the conduct of the affairs of the road. But, as everyone knows, the great contracts with the Crédit Mobilier and all the proceedings which excited so much popular condemnation of the Union Pacific Railroad were absolutely secret, in spite of that provision of the law.

The scandal which originally called the attention of Congress to the subject grew out of the efforts of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to avoid an investigation moved in the other House. In the first instance, if I am not detaining the Senator too long, there was a struggle between the Boston stockholders and owners of the road and the New York stockholders. The Boston stockholders carried the day, turned out the New York directors, and intended to move the offices of the road from New York to Boston, whereupon one of the defeated parties, which had been entirely outgeneraled in all the strife—there had been some legal proceedings and so on—quietly observed to one of the victorious party that he had written a letter to Mr. E. B. Washburn, of Illinois, then a distinguished and very vigilant member of the House of Representatives, a near relative of my honorable friend from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] who sits near me, informing him of the recent proceedings of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

The victorious party instantly reassembled, sent to the New York post-office and took steps to have the letter taken out of the post-office, and went down on their knees and took the New Yorkers back into their full share of the contract. I am not sure that they had moved the offices at that time, but they put them all back, gave Crédit Mobilier stock to an official of the road, and undertook to distribute it among the Representatives from all parts of the country in order to get them interested in it. So the mere existence of the few Government directors, without voting responsibility, and simply in order to keep a watch, turned out in that case to be a most imperfect and inadequate protection.

Now, I should like to have the honorable Senator from Alabama, if he will do me that favor, state what are the safeguards and precautions and securities which will enable the people of the United States and mankind at large to know at once and at the time every transaction in the building of the canal to which the Government is expected to lend its credit so largely, the expenditure of every dollar of money, the employment of every agency, and everything else which may possibly, if it be not looked upon, become a means of wrongdoing. As I said earlier in the day, when the resolution was introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], the recent example of France and the not very remote example of this country make it important for our public credit and good fame and the purity of our Government that this enterprise shall proceed to its termination without the possibility of a reproach.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations have exhausted really their ability—I may better say they have employed all their ability at least—in trying to get such provisions into the bill as would give absolute publicity to everything that is done in the construction of the canal, and absolute security that there should be no fraud perpetrated in connection with it by anybody. The first and main provision on that subject is in regard to the ten of the fifteen directors who shall be entitled to vote and participate in the actual direction of the company, which was not the case, I am informed, in regard to the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies.

Now, I should be willing to trust every dollar that will ever be in the Treasury of the United States for expenditure into the hands of a man like the Senator from Massachusetts, without bond or without security, just upon his record, his history, and what I know to be the principles which have controlled his action. Here are ten directors, every one of whom may be a man of equal merit with the Senator from Massachusetts, to be appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate, who are to take charge of this canal in connection with five others, one of them appointed by Nicaragua, one by Costa Rica, and three by the stockholders. These ten directors take this matter in hand, and are we to suppose that it will be possible, with the reports that they are required to make of their proceedings regularly and annually, and even monthly, to the Secretary of the Treasury, that any fraud can be allowed to permeate the management of this business? It is a matter of almost physical impossibility, if we are to look to the directors alone.

Then it is required that the bonds to be issued by the United States shall be printed and signed by the company, put into the Treasury of the United States, and issued with the indorsement of the United States only in payment for work actually done, upon estimates to be made by a board of engineers of the United States Government, not of the company. So we have a Governmental supervision independent of the action of the board of directors as to the expenditure of every dollar of this money; and then the total expenditure shall not exceed $100,000,000, and the pro rata expenditure shall not exceed the pro rata of proper expenditure for the $100,000,000, considering the entire amount of work that is to be done.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator state what are the provisions for auditing the accounts?

Mr. MORGAN. They are to be audited by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. How often?

Mr. MORGAN. Not less frequently than once in two months they are to be audited by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. All the accounts of the company, or merely the expenditure of the bonds?

Mr. MORGAN. All the accounts, the use of every dollar of money that is realized from the sale of the bonds. The bonds are not paid out in advance; they are paid out upon audited bills for work actually done.

Mr. HOAR. That was the case with the Union Pacific.

Mr. MORGAN. The bills must be brought in and audited, and then the bonds are authorized to be issued in payment of that audit.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield that I may introduce two bills. Morning business has not had much chance this morning.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly, I will yield, and I apologize for taking so much time. If I were not compelled to be absent from the country I would not take this liberty.

[The bills were introduced, and appear under their appropriate head.]

Mr. VOORHEES. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Alabama. I can only say that no greater question can be discussed than the one he is discussing now, and nobody can discuss it any better than he can discuss it. I am much obliged to him for his courtesy.

Mr. MORGAN. In addition to what the Senator from Massachusetts has referred to as a means of ascertaining what the company is doing, here is a provision in the charter which requires that—

Said company shall make a report on the first Monday of December in each year to the Secretary of the Interior—

That is a different officer—which shall be duly verified on oath by the president and secretary thereof, giving such detailed statement of its affairs and of its assets and liabilities as may be required by the Secretary of the Interior, and any willfully false statement so made shall be deemed perjury and punishable as such.

That guaranty comes also to our assistance in the prevention of frauds.

I have to say further that if there is any Senator in this body, or any member of the other House, or any other person who can suggest any reasonable cautionary plan or phraseology for making it impossible for fraud to enter into these affairs, the Committee on Foreign Relations will welcome the suggestion and will recommend its adoption at any time that it may be brought forward, for surely nothing can be further from our desire than that the slightest opportunity should be afforded through the means of this bill or in building this canal for the squandering or improper use of public funds. We have seen enough of that, and being cautioned in advance by the experience of other governments, as well as our own, it does stand us in hand to make every reasonable provision of the character suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. President, I have not gotten through with all that I meant to say this morning, but in deference to the business of the Senate, I feel bound to yield the floor. At a future day, not far distant, I hope I may have the opportunity of presenting my views on some other matters included in the bill of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], reported back to the Senate from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

DEALING IN "OPTIONS" AND "FUTURES."

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes; the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. VILAS in section 2, line 15, after the word "thereof," to insert, "and does not in good faith intend to purchase and deliver the articles contracted to be sold and delivered according to the terms and requirements of such contract;" so as to read:

That for the purposes of this act the word "futures" shall be understood to mean any contract or agreement whereby a party contracts or agrees to sell and deliver to another or others at a future time, or within a designated period, any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act, when at the time of making such contract or agreement the party so contracting or agreeing to sell and make such delivery, or the party for whom he acts as agent, broker, or employé in making such contract or agreement, is not the owner of the article or articles so contracted or agreed to be sold and delivered, or has not theretofore acquired by purchase and is not then entitled to the right to the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner thereof and does not in good faith intend to purchase and deliver the articles contracted to be sold and delivered according to the terms and requirements of such contract.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado move to proceed to the consideration of the Calendar or to the consideration of the first bill on the Calendar?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move to proceed to the consideration of the first bill on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Upon all questions I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON].

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] on the antioption bill and all questions pertaining to it.

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]; but I am advised that if he were present he would vote "nay" on this question, and I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire if the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The senior Senator from Pennsylvania is not recorded.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I will withhold my vote. I am paired with him.

Mr. CALL. My colleague [Mr. PASCO] is absent, and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] has agreed to pair with him. If my colleague were here he would vote "nay."

Mr. GIBSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote, and stand paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DIXON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], who is absent in the performance of duties imposed by the Senate. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is also absent and unpaired. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Mississippi to my colleague, and vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and in his absence I withhold my vote. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. HISCOCK. Has the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He is not recorded.

Mr. HISCOCK. I refrain from voting, being paired with him.

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair on the antioption bill with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS]. I prefer to withdraw my vote under the circumstances.

Mr. HIGGINS. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], and I being paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], that we exchange pairs so that the Senator from Missouri and myself may vote.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

Mr. HIGGINS. I vote "nay."

Mr. VEST. I vote "yea."

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], but I see that no quorum has voted, and I have a right to vote under the circumstances. I vote "nay," as the Senator from Minnesota would vote if present.

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—9.

Brice,	Palmer,	Vest,	White,
Caffery,	Stewart,	Vilas,	Wolcott.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No quorum having voted, the roll will be called.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Pending the call of the roll, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I again announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], and I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HISCOCK. Observing that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] is present, I vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. SANDERS], and also the transfer of that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Brice,	Hiscock,	Quay,	White,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Vest,	Wolcott.
Dixon,	Palmer,	Vilas,

NAYS—31.

Colquitt,	Hawley,	Platt,
Cullom,	Hunton,	Power,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No quorum having voted, the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Berry,	Gallinger,	Kyle,	Sherman,
Brice,	George,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Butler,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Stockbridge,
Caffery,	Hale,	Palmer,	Teller,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Pasco,	Vance,

Dawes,	Hiscock,	Proctor,	White,
Dixon,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Wilson.
Dubois,	Irby,	Quay,
Frey,	Jones, Ark.	Sawyer,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not usual for us to have a very long session on Saturday. I take the liberty of suggesting whether the Senate would not be willing, by unanimous consent, to agree now that the pending bill shall be disposed of on Wednesday next. On Monday the debate can go on. On Tuesday I understand certain addresses are to be made, and, in deference to the universal custom, we should adjourn when those addresses are concluded. We shall not probably be able to do anything upon the bill on Tuesday. I have not participated in the debate to any extent, but it seems to me that we ought now to agree that on Wednesday the bill shall be disposed of. We can commence immediately after the morning business upon that day, and certainly on Monday and Wednesday any further debate desired can take place. I therefore ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill shall be disposed of on Wednesday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then all I can say is that I hope if the Senator having the bill in charge has a majority of the Senate with him he will try and close the matter out on Wednesday, because it is interfering with very important public business in which we are all interested, together with the appropriation bills and the entire Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURN. In view of the objection made by the Senator from Colorado, I give notice that on Wednesday I shall ask the Senate to remain in session until we reach a vote on the bill and amendments.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator withdraw the motion for one moment?

Mr. QUAY. Certainly.

FORM OF CREDENTIALS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a statement, which will take but a moment.

I have received from a good many quarters in the States, and from State officials, applications in regard to the proper form of credentials of the members of this body. In the past some of the States have been in the habit of loading down the credentials with a great deal of superfluous detail. They are becoming more and more compact and brief year by year, but still frequently the best forms contain much that is entirely superfluous. For instance, it is quite the custom of the executive of a State to certify that the person elected is a person 30 years of age, who has been nine years a citizen of the United States, and is an inhabitant of the State from which he is chosen. I conceive that such a certificate is absolutely without effect. The governor is merely to certify to the election of the person, and undoubtedly from the fact of his election the presumption arises, until something else is shown here, that he is eligible, but the governor has no means of knowing whether he is eligible and has nothing to do with the fact.

Then it has been the habit in some States to certify that the election was made by a concurrent vote of the two Houses or that the election was made on joint ballot in convention. If that were necessary, it would certainly in the latter case be necessary to certify carefully that all the steps or all the failures which were essential conditions of the power of the Legislature to elect in that form had occurred.

I conceive that everything of that kind is accomplished by the term "duly elected," and that a certificate that A B was at a certain time duly elected by the Legislature of the State a Senator for a certain term, certified by the executive and countersigned by the secretary of state, is all that is necessary.

Without any one being responsible for it but myself, I have prepared a form which I desire to have read and go into the RECORD, so that if the officials of the several States shall see fit they may conform to it.

Mr. PASCO. Before it is read I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts, through the Chair, whether it applies to an appointment made by the governor as well as to an election?

Mr. HOAR. No; it does not undertake to do that.

Mr. PASCO. Does the Senator propose to suggest a form of that kind also?

Mr. HOAR. I had not thought of doing so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

This is to certify that on the 17th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1893, ——— was duly elected by the Legislature of said Commonwealth a Senator to represent the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, commencing the 4th day of March, A. D. 1893.

Witness, his excellency, ———, our governor, and our seal hereunto affixed at Boston, this — day of January, in the year of our Lord 1893, and the year of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and seventeenth.

———, ———,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

ELISHA BROWN.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to allow me to call up a little bill. It will take no time.

Mr. QUAY. I will yield for that purpose only.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6969) for the relief of Elisha Brown.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Elisha Brown, late a private in Company F, First Regiment United States Infantry, serving from February 19, 1829, to February 18, 1834, and to allow him a pension at the rate of $15 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 16, 1893, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 14, 1893.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ANNUAL REPORT FROM THE BUREAU OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for your information a letter from the Secretary of State, inclosing the annual report of the Bureau of American Republics for the year ending June 30, 1892.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 13, 1893.

MILITIA OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for the militia of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1893, and for prior years; which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

APPROPRIATION FOR FOREIGN MAILS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation, submitted by the Postmaster-General, for transportation of foreign mails for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894; which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SUPPORT OF NATIVE INHABITANTS OF ALASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation for the support of the native inhabitants of Alaska, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DELAWARE BREAKWATER QUARANTINE STATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, with inclosures, relating to the estimate of appropriations for the Delaware Breakwater quarantine station; which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES IN THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a detailed statement of the expenditures for that Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN DEATON VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copy of the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of John Deaton vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Speaker also laid before the House a letter from the president of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, transmitting a list of the stockholders and the receipts and disbursements of said company for the year ending December 31, 1892; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL VOTE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House certified copies of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President in the States of Oregon and South Dakota, transmitted by the Secretary of State; which were laid on the table.

CITIZENSHIP OF APPLICANTS FOR INDIAN WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 180) relating to proof of citizenship of applicants for Indian war pensions under the act of Congress approved July 27, 1892.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept as sufficient proof of the citizenship of an applicant for pension under said act of July 27, 1892, the fact that such applicant at the date of the application was an actual and bona fide resident of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to have some explanation of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The report can be read, subject to objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read first.

The report (by Mr. MOSES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the House resolution (H. Res. 180) relating to proof of citizenship of applicants for Indian war pensions under the act of Congress approved July 27, 1892, have considered the same and report as follows:

The reasons for the adoption of the resolution fully appears in a communication addressed, under date of December 21, 1892, to the chairman of your committee by the Commissioner of Pensions. Said communication is hereto appended and made a part of this report, and the resolution is returned with the recommendation that it be adopted.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS.
Washington, December 21, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the fact that the second section of the act approved July 27, 1892, granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832, etc., contains a proviso as follows: "That this act shall not apply to any person not a citizen of the United States."

Since the passage of this act nearly seven thousand claims have been filed under it. Many of the claimants are very old persons, some of them representing themselves to be more than 100 years of age. A great many of these claimants have failed to allege and prove that they are citizens of the United States. Many of them have applied for and received bounty land warrants for their military service, and the declarations in those cases contain no statement as to citizenship.

It is obvious that there will be considerable delay in the adjudication of these claims if the claimants are required to amend their applications and furnish evidence of citizenship.

It seems to me that proof that these applicants are now bona fide residents of the United States should be accepted as sufficient evidence to establish the fact of their citizenship, and I have the honor to respectfully recommend the passage of a joint resolution to that effect.

Very respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM, Commissioner.

Hon. ROBERT P. C. WILSON,
Chairman Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill as read was not understood. I hope it will be read again.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is not a proper practice to pass a measure of this kind in the shape of a joint resolution. I think it should be a bill instead of a joint resolution. That is the better mode of legislation.

Mr. MOSES. What is the difference?

Mr. HOLMAN. I know that the old rule prohibited legislation in this form, but the present rules do not. I think this ought to be a bill instead of a joint resolution.

Mr. MOSES. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not object, because we have a great many of these cases already before us.

Mr. HOLMAN. What objection has the gentleman from Georgia to adopting the usual form of a bill instead of a joint resolution?

Mr. MOSES. It is simply a question of expedition. A joint resolution and a bill are very much the same thing.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has always been deemed improper to pass measures of such character in the form of a joint resolution. For some purposes a joint resolution is entirely proper. Can not you amend it and make it a bill?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman gets unanimous consent it can be altered and made a bill.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent to amend the joint resolution so as to make it a bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. ANTONY. I object, and demand the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects, and demands the regular order. The regular order is the calling of standing and select committees for reports.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of the committees for reports, and that gentlemen having reports to make may be permitted to hand them to the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The morning hour begins at fifteen minutes past 12 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on the Militia.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the measure to be considered in Committee of the Whole, I ask unanimous consent that another hour be granted to the committee in case the bill is not disposed of, and that it shall take place in the second morning hour of the first legislative day of next week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty minutes of this hour remaining now.

Mr. CUTTING. I make that request in case the bill is not disposed of.

CITIZENSHIP OF APPLICANTS FOR INDIAN WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. ANTONY. Mr. Speaker, I understood that this joint resolution, to the consideration of which I objected a moment ago, applied to the act of June 20, 1890. I see that it is for some old persons under the act granting pensions to parties who served in the Indian wars; and under these circumstances I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Chair will again submit the request. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. DINGLEY. Before consent is given, I would like to know if a special rule is not set up in this class of pension cases that is not set up in other classes?

Mr. WAUGH. The bill sets up a different rule. This bill sets up a standard of citizenship, and asks that proof of residence be considered as sufficient proof of citizenship.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk reported the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10189) relating to proof of citizenship of applicants for Indian war pensions under the act of Congress approved July 27, 1892.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOSES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 8038) granting a pension to William M. Watson, of Walker County, Ga.

It also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3629) to extend to the North Pacific Ocean the provisions of the statutes for the protection of fur seals and other fur-bearing animals;

A bill (S. 3670) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Lang; and

A bill (S. 2265) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and for other purposes.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The following reports were handed in at the Clerk's desk, referred to their appropriate Calendars, and otherwise disposed of as indicated below:

SIGNAL CORPS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. OUTHWAITE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, in the nature of a substitute for House bill 9896 the bill (H. R. 10191), to reduce the number of officers in the Signal Corps of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL QUARANTINE, ETC.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted the views of the minority on the bill (H. R. 9757) to provide for the better protection of commerce and for the general welfare by the establishment of a national quarantine, etc.; which were ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1538) for the relief of the heir of James S. Ham.

Mr. CUTTING. I now renew my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. If the demand for the regular order is withdrawn, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Rhode Island to ask unanimous consent. The demand for the regular order, the Chair understood, was made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANE. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. That, of course, cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7318) to promote the efficiency the militia.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at eighteen minutes past 12 o'clock, and there are forty-two minutes remaining to the Committee on the Militia.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

MILITIA BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7318) to promote the efficiency of the militia. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] is entitled to the floor for six minutes.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the committee to this further clause in the report of the Adjutant-General, showing what is the real purpose aimed at in this bill:

> The Army, which needs and must have the assistance of the National Guard in any sudden emergency, begs Congress to hasten to assist State Legislatures to disembarrass the State volunteers of this condition of affairs by legalizing this force as a national force and by appropriating for its maintenance in the aggregate $1,500,000 a year, to be increased should this sum be found too small, in order to properly equip and discipline a United States National Guard of 150,000 men.

Under the Constitution and under the old law the United States had nothing to do with the government of the militia. The United States could prescribe its organization, its equipment, etc., but the General Government had nothing to do with the control of the militia, except when it was called out by the President of the United States in terms of law. Until that was done the militia was a State body, commanded and controlled by State officers, and governed by State laws. Under this bill it becomes a national body, governed by national laws, and the control of it is substantially taken out of the hands of the States.

How? Under the old law, section 1667 of the Revised Statutes, the arms and equipments were distributed to the States pro rata according to their Congressional delegations in the House and in the Senate; that is, each State had its share of the arms and equipments allotted to it in proportion to the number of its Senators and Representatives. Under this bill you propose to divide the arms and equipments allotted to the States, not according to any State rule, not according to the mandate or requirement of the governors of the States, but in accordance with the recommendation of United States officers detailed for that purpose.

In other words, no State draws its share of this appropriation for arms and equipments, except upon the warrant of United States Army officers. I can not conceive of any provision which more clearly violates the Constitution than this does, by taking the control away from the State and giving it to the United States Army, because the supplies govern the troops. Cut off the supplies and you cripple the troops. Cut off from the State authority to call for the supplies, and you take from the State authority to govern its own troops.

Mr. HOAR. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Before the passage of this act, under the old law, by whose authority was the distribution of arms made to the States?

Mr. WATSON. Section 1667 prescribes how it shall be done. There is no discretion about it at all.

Mr. HOAR. Is not that a United States act?

Mr. WATSON. It is a United States act; but the apportionment is required to be made to each State as a State, according to its standing as a State.

Mr. HOAR. According to the number of its Representatives and Senators.

Mr. WATSON. Precisely.

Mr. HOAR. And it is done by United States authority entirely.

Mr. WATSON. That is not the point at all. The point is, that under the old law these arms and equipments went to the State and the State controlled them; while under this change which you propose the State gets nothing except upon the voucher, the warrant, the order of a United States Army officer.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman, under the old law it was left discretionary with the State to say how often its militia should meet and where they should meet for drill, but under this proposed law it is made mandatory that the volunteer corps called the National Guard shall meet at least once every month, at least twelve times per year, and that for five consecutive days, and that they shall be stationed at an army fort or some other established camp, to be drilled in heavy artillery practice.

Mr. LANE. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. WATSON. No; the bill, section 19, provides that they shall—

> Go into camp of instruction or be quartered at a United States fort for instruction in heavy artillery at least five consecutive days in each year in their respective States or Territories, and to assemble for drill and instruction not less than twelve times in each year.

A MEMBER. Unless specially excused by the governor.

Mr. WATSON. That is true; you do give to the governor a certain veto power in this matter; but at the same time you take away from him the initiative which he now has; you simply give him a check-rein where heretofore he has had control of the reins entirely.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MOSES. I ask that my colleague [Mr. WATSON] be allowed five minutes more.

Mr. HALL. I object.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] has absolutely misunderstood the provisions of the Constitution in regard to the government of the militia of the United States and of the several States. The Constitution of the United States absolutely prohibits any State of the Union from keeping troops—and certainly thereby prohibits any State from organizing troops—unless under the authority of the national Congress. Special authority is given to Congress under the Constitution to organize troops, to pass laws for their discipline and maintenance, and, in fact, to do practically everything in regard to the militia of the several States, except appoint the officers.

Such were the provisions of the Constitution as originally adopted; and they were not changed when the individual citizens of the States were given permission by the second amendment of the Constitution in their individual capacity to "keep and bear arms." On the basis of the original requirements of the Constitution Congress, at the beginning of the Government, passed a militia law, which is practically the law of this country to-day, except that it has become obsolete and in disuse in a large number of its provisions. The present bill recognizes for the first time the authority of the States in such matters, and gives them opportunity to do what they may see fit in regard to the government of their own militia subject to the few limitations of the bill. In the very first section of this bill it is provided:

> That the National Guard shall consist of such regularly enlisted troops as are or may be organized in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia in pursuance of their respective laws, etc.

In this provision the States of this Union are for the first time in the history of the country given the right to organize their own militia, provided they do not do so in contravention of the law of the United States. There is no provision in this bill that abridges any right whatsoever that the States have had heretofore. They have had heretofore the authority simply to officer their troops and carry on their operations under the provisions of a national law; by the bill now before us we propose to give them a larger measure of power over their militia than they have had heretofore. I wanted simply to call attention to the constitutional provision in regard to this matter, because it has evidently been misunderstood.

Mr. DICKERSON. I wish to ask the gentleman what material benefits will result from the enactment of this bill.

Mr. HOAR. You are going to have, instead of the old law—absolutely obsolete, absolutely not lived up to by the States, a law requiring spontoons in the hands of your militia officers and flint locks in the possession of your soldiers—a law under which, in accordance with the national regulations for the government of the Army of the United States, the States may organize and carry on their own militia upon a modern basis.

Mr. DICKERSON. Then the effect of the bill is to compel the States to do what they are not now inclined to do.

Mr. HOAR. Not at all. They are doing to-day in almost every State in the Union as much as is required under this bill, and they are under an obligation by the old law to do more than they actually do now. The proposed law says that the States shall only carry out its provisions about organization and drill so far as practicable, which has been interpreted in the past to mean so far as their State system will allow. For instance, the State of Vermont has but one regiment of troops, and in that regiment are a cavalry company and two sections of artillery. Now, it would be impossible to organize that force for camp drill under the Army regulations, and so a provision was inserted in the present bill allowing the States to organize their troops according to their own State law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 4 by striking out all after the word "make" in line 4, and in lieu thereof inserting the following:

"Return of the militia of the State with their arms, accouterments, and ammunition, agreeably to the provisions of law, to the President of the United States annually, on or before the first Monday in January; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War from time to time to give such directions to the adjutant-generals of the militia as may in his opinion be necessary to produce uniformity in such returns."

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order now to move to strike out the entire section?

The CHAIRMAN. It would.

Mr. WATSON. Well, for the purpose of testing the sense of the Committee of the Whole on this bill, I move to strike out the section. I desire to state again to the House as briefly as I can the objections to this bill. In a covert, stealthy way it undermines our militia system as it now stands and adopts another system altogether. If this bill is passed, we would in less than five years wake up some fine morning and find that our militia system was as completely changed as our financial system was found to be changed five years after the passage of the act of 1873 demonetizing silver.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman tell us wherein this bill undermines the present system, and what it substitutes?

Mr. WATSON. I am going to make a strenuous effort to do that very thing. In the first place, it substitutes for the militia in each State, which is now a State organization, a national body, composed, it is true, of certain citizens of the States, but in its composite form a national body.

Then, again, it controls that body directly from a national standpoint. It controls the militia of the States in time of peace and not merely when they are called into active service, as provided by the Constitution. They are governed here from the national capital, from a national standpoint, when they are not in active service. This violates the Constitution. They are governed as a national body, where heretofore they have been governed by the States themselves, except when called into active service as provided by the Constitution. If that, Mr. Chairman, does not clearly and specifically make this a national body——

Mr. McKINNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. WATSON. I would rather not be interrupted just now.

Mr. McKINNEY. I merely wanted to ask the gentleman if it is not true that the State militia now, in nearly every State in the Union, is recognized and called the National Guard?

Mr. WATSON. I do not know what you might call them in the different States. That is not the question at all. You can call them the Gate City Guards, or the Savannah Volunteers, or the New York Cadets, or any other name that local preferences may suggest. That is a mere matter of fancy with the fellow who is doing the christening.

Mr. McKINNEY. It does not make any difference what may be the local names, but as to the mass of this force, is it not known as the National Guard?

Mr. WATSON. You can call it by whatever name you please. That is only a question of taste. But when we seek to take certain citizens or the great body of the people of the States composing the Union and call them a national guard, we give to such a military organization a legal existence as a national body. It is no longer a mere State affair. It is quite a different thing from what you might choose to call a national guard by way of convenience amongst the States themselves.

Again, we govern these people from a national standpoint. In the first place, we prescribe how they must drill and how often they must drill in time of peace, and also where they shall drill. We do not leave it to the States to say how each State shall drill its own militia, or how often the State may require them to be called into camp for the purpose of drill or training.

Again, Mr. Chairman, heretofore we have supplied the militia of the States as State bodies, giving to each State its pro rata of arms, whether it had the troops or not, on requisition of the proper officer of the State. But from now on, if this bill becomes law, these troops are to have only what a United States Army officer says they ought to have.

Now, I submit that you give them a national name; that you give them a national organization; that you constitute them a national body; that you supply them nationally; that you govern them nationally, and if that does not make in all respects a national body I would like to know how you would set about accomplishing that purpose.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Let me ask the gentleman from Georgia if the old law is not changed in this, that this bill requires them to report to the President of the United States while the former law required them to report only to the governors of the States?

Mr. HOAR. That is not correct.

Mr. WATSON. I do not know as to that, for I have not investigated the matter. But as to furnishing them supplies and governing them in time of peace, as to organizing them and prescribing their make-up, there are three radical changes in the bill from the old law.

Mr. CUTTING. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him this question: Whether he will point out a single section of the bill that nationalizes the militia any more than the existing law?

Mr. WATSON. I am going to ask you first why you change this phraseology, if you do not mean to absolutely change in fact the relation they have heretofore borne to the States?

Mr. CUTTING. Will the gentleman point out the section to which he refers?

Mr. WATSON. I am going to try to do so, but I can not if you keep on asking me questions. Now, let any lawyer in this House examine this proposed change in the phraseology and see if it does not mean a change in the government itself. I read from the old law:

Every able-bodied male citizen of the respective States resident therein, who is of the age of 18 years and under the age of 45 years, shall be enrolled in the militia.

And then section 1630:

The militia of each State shall be arranged into divisions, brigades, regiments, battalions, and companies, as the Legislature of the said State may direct.

Now, this bill says that the militia shall consist of the "able-bodied male citizens," etc., which shall be "divided into two classes," and I call special attention to this:

The organized to be known as the National Guard.

Is that not exactly the phraseology you would use. I ask my friend from Alabama [Judge OATES] if you meant an organization, a national body with a national name, to be governed from a national standpoint, rather than this separate organization in each of the States to be governed by the States themselves?

Mr. CUTTING. Does not the gentleman from Georgia know that thirty-three of the States have adopted the name and use the term "National Guard" in reference to their militia?

Mr. WATSON. They have a perfect right to do so. But we have no right to make them take soup whether they want to or not. Each State has the right to name its militia to suit itself, but the National Government has no right to consolidate the militia of the States in time of peace and make it a national body.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Chairman, one of the great objections urged by the gentleman from Georgia against the bill is as to the way in which the supplies for the national militia are to be furnished by the National Government to the States. As a matter of fact he can not deny that the National Government has always furnished supplies to the States by national laws, in some way or other.

It has heretofore supplied the States, under a national law, in proportion to their representation in the House and in the Senate; a plan which would allow a State with only 500 militiamen to get a supply of arms and accouterments equal to that received by a State with 5,000 militiamen, provided the first State had an equal representation in the House and in the Senate. Now this law, national like the other, makes a more just and a more fair distribution of the property of the United States among the different States. It gives arms and accouterments to a State in proportion to the way in which it keeps up its State militia organization. It does not simply say, "1,000 guns here and 1,000 guns there," without regard to the way the State keeps up its militia, but it says if the State has an active militia of a certain number of men and makes returns thereof to the United States Government, it shall receive United States assistance up to the point that it keeps up its own local organization.

The number of effective militia and not representation in Congress is to determine the Government grant of aid.

Now, in the interest of economy; in the interest of efficiency; in the interest of everything which the States ought to be interested in, I ask this House if this is not a much better provision than the obsolete one contained in the old law?

Mr. MOSES. Why not simply repeal the obsolete part?

Mr. HOAR. Because we want some new method to act by.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS] is recognized.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] whether this new method will give the control of the militia to the National Government in time of peace?

Mr. HOAR. No more than the old law does, and no more than the Constitution requires.

Mr. BOATNER. Is there anything in this law which increases the power of the United States?

Mr. HOAR. My time has expired. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS] has the floor, and if the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] will get him to yield, I will be glad to answer his question.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I think one of the points of difficulty in the consideration of this question, as indicated by the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia, is a failure to comprehend the method of imparting orders to the militia. It seems to be assumed that the commander-in-chief of the militia of the State, its governor, is entirely disregarded, whereas all communications to the State authorities are addressed to the governor and not to the commandant of company or regimental organization.

As has been stated very clearly and forcibly by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], this law only tends to correct the errors of the existing law, to increase the efficiency of the militia, and to repeal the ancient provisions as to equipment, respecting the form and description of which there are not a dozen members of this House who could describe the equipments called for by the present law.

The bill proposes to give to a State that has an organized militia its just share of the money distributed by the Federal Government, so that it shall not be wasted on useless and inefficient organizations. States whose uniformed militia may consist simply of an inch of a buck's tail, assembling once a year for muster, declared by their inspecting officer as members of a uniformed militia of the State, should not be entitled to any of the Federal appropriation. States having organization meriting such designation shall receive their share of the money distributed by the Federal Government.

This sum is infinitesimal in comparison with what the State expends. While the State of New York has had her share of the $400,000 annually since 1887, yet that State has expended for a number of years a sum approximating a half million dollars a year for the support and maintenance of her militia. I draw no comparison between that and other States; but looking back to the last year we can appreciate the value of a well-organized militia under charge of an experienced soldier like the adjutant-general of the State of New York. We expended much money, yet we preserved life by the assembling of the militia in the western portion of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] to strike out section 4 as amended.

The question being taken, the Chair announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WATSON), there were—ayes 50, noes 53.

Mr. WATSON. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WATSON and Mr. LANE.

Mr. HOAR. I would like to have the section read once more.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WATSON. I object.

The committee again divided; and the tellers announced—ayes 59, noes 95.

Mr. WATSON. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is made. The hour allotted to the committee having expired, the committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7318) and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CUTTING. I now renew my request that the Committee on the Militia be given another hour for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. WATSON, Mr. ROCKWELL, Mr. KILGORE, and others objected.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call rests with the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour be considered as having expired, so that the Committee on Indian Affairs may occupy the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] asks unanimous consent that the twenty minutes remaining of the morning hour be dispensed with for to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGREEMENT WITH THE CHEROKEE NATION OF INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order previously adopted by the House, this day is set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9190.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9190) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee Nation of Indians of the Indian Territory, to make appropriation for carrying out the same, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which has just been read.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], who was in the chair on a former occasion when the bill was under consideration, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TARSNEY] will please take the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. TARSNEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, which has already been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PEEL (during the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, as there is a very long preamble, and as the contract has already been printed in the RECORD for over a month, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill, and that it be taken up for consideration by sections, ratifying the contract.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman contemplate omitting general debate upon the bill?

Mr. PEEL. I desire to dispense only with the first reading, so that we can take the bill up by sections.

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the contract.

Mr. PEEL. The entire contract has now been read, and the Clerk has commenced the reading of the bill which the committee has reported to ratify the contract. There are several sections, and I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill. I do not desire it for the purpose of interfering with general debate, if any gentleman intends to debate it, but simply that we may read the bill by sections for amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. General debate not to be affected by it.

Mr. BOWERS. I understand we shall have time for general debate on the bill.

Mr. PEEL. General debate not to be affected by it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, now that the reading has been concluded, I would like to come to some agreement with the committee as to the time to be allowed for general debate. We all understand that under the five-minute rule the bill will be read by sections, which will give a great deal of time for debate on the different sections; but I suppose some gentleman would like to have some general debate upon the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time does the gentleman from California desire?

Mr. BOWERS. I would like to have a half an hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I suggest that we make it an hour and a half for general debate.

Mr. PEEL. Would not one hour do?

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I am willing that it should be an hour.

Mr. DINGLEY. What time has the gentleman agreed to for general debate?

Mr. PEEL. I am perfectly willing that there should be general debate, but as this is Saturday and I want to get the bill through if possible, I hope gentlemen will be satisfied with an hour for general debate. How much time does the gentleman from Maine desire?

Mr. DINGLEY. I think we had better proceed with general debate, and after it has gone along for a time we can tell better when general debate should be closed.

Mr. PEEL. It is proposed to have an hour for general debate.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not think that one hour is sufficient time for general debate on a bill appropriating $8,500,000 directly and a considerable other sum indirectly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be an hour and a half.

Mr. PEEL. Very well; then I suggest an hour and a half. I think that will be ample. Then we can debate the bill by sections for two hours more under the five-minute rule when we come to the appropriations for carrying out the agreement and whether it will be determined to defer that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hardly think there will be much general debate.

Mr. PEEL. How much time does the gentleman from Maine want?

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to have fifteen minutes at least.

Mr. PEEL. An hour and a half would certainly give you that much time.

Mr. DINGLEY. That would give three quarters of an hour on each side. I would not object to that.

Mr. PEEL. Very well; we may get through sooner, but we will get an hour and a half—the time to be equally divided, of course. I ask unanimous consent that all general debate be limited to an hour and a half—to be equally divided between those in favor of the bill and those against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that all general debate upon this bill be limited to an hour and a half. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PEEL. I would like to know who is to control the time on the other side.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be equally divided, of course.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] control the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. PEEL. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] to control the time in favor of the bill, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. PEEL. I desire to use only ten minutes of my time at present, and I will thank the Chair to remind me when I have occupied so much.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the committee will give me attention, I will try in as brief a manner as possible to explain the main features of the subject-matter under consideration. The strip of land which has long been known as the Cherokee Outlet contains something over 6,000,000 acres of land. It lies immediately south of the State of Kansas, and will be a part of Oklahoma Territory when the Indian title is extinguished. This has been a vexed question between the Cherokee Nation and the United States Government ever since the treaty of 1866.

Under that treaty the Cherokees ceded these lands to the Government for the express purpose of locating thereon other friendly Indians and freedmen. After that treaty was concluded the Government changed its policy and, by act of Congress I believe, declared that it would locate no more Indians in that section of the country. Consequently a contract was made with the Creeks and Seminoles, out of which grew the Territory of Oklahoma. The Government being so anxious to procure from the Cherokees this large strip of country, to obtain the title to it so as to be able to locate upon it the white people who were seeking homes, created, by act of Congress, four years ago, the Cherokee Commission, which was given authority to negotiate for all the lands west of the ninety-sixth meridian, including this outlet. That Commission was composed of ex-Governor Jerome of Michigan, Judge Sayre of Indiana, and the Hon. Alfred L. Wilson of Arkansas.

After conferring and negotiating with these Indians for some two years they finally succeeded in securing the contract that is before us to-day for ratification. The Indians claimed that these lands were much more valuable than any amount of money that the Government, through this Commission, would agree to pay. The Indians had had the Strip leased for $200,000 a year, and they claimed that they had been offered for it, from time to time, as much as $30,000,000. But the Commission were unwilling to offer any such amount, because the land was to be opened to settlement under the homestead law, and a sufficient charge made to the settlers to reimburse the Government.

Finally, about twelve months ago, the Commission succeeded in getting terms by which they agreed that the Government would pay the Cherokee Nation $8,595,736.12, amounting to about $1.40 per acre. In the contract that has been read here will be found other stipulations. One is that the Government shall remove from among the Indians intruders—a problem which has been a perplexing one for many years. That clause of the contract, however, is but a reaffirmation of agreements in two express treaties made by us with these Indians—one in 1835 and the other in 1866.

In this contract also the Indians retained the right for seventy of their own people to take as much as 80 acres apiece. That stipulation is made upon the ground that these people had made improvements on the lands before this contract with the Government was made, but those seventy persons are to pay the Government for their lands in proportion to what we pay the Indians.

There is another stipulation in the contract to which I will direct attention. These Cherokees are as intelligent as any people in this country. They understand the machinery of government quite as well as we do. They have a local government of their own, organized in analogy with the State governments. They elect their lower house of the Legislature and their senate. They also elect their chief or governor. They have their attorney-general, who is here representing them in this matter now. They have their treasurer, their local courts, their supreme court, just as the States have. They claim that they pay out more money to educate their children than any State in the Union of the same population. They have schools, colleges, asylums, all the appliances of a civilized government.

Therefore, being so intelligent and knowing that our Government operates slowly in matters of this kind, they insisted upon putting a stipulation into this contract that unless we ratify the contract in its entirety on or before the 4th day of March, 1893, it shall be absolutely void. Under the terms of the contract it was made subject to ratification by Congress and by their own government. Their government proceeded, through their national council, immediately after the contract was made, to ratify it; so that it is left for us to say whether or not we will accept this contract or will reject it now and leave the whole matter open to negotiation in the future.

Now, I am pretty familiar with this subject, and I say to this committee that unless this contract is ratified in such terms as the Indians will accept, many years and many Congresses will pass before we shall again obtain terms so satisfactory to us. When we reach the bill proposing to appropriate this large amount of money there will be amendments proposing to defer the appropriation. I am inclined to accept almost any terms that are at all reasonable, because if we change the terms of the contract in any material matter it must go back for ratification by the Indians. I do hope, however, that no amendment will be made so radical as to make the Cherokee Nation refuse to ratify it, because if this contract fails now we shall be years and years in obtaining another as favorable.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the main provisions in the contract. The bill itself has many sections, most of which pertain to the disposition of the lands. When we buy the lands from the Indians and pay them for them, then the land becomes the property of the Government, and Congress can dispose of those lands in any manner it sees proper. The clauses that the Committee on Indian Affairs have placed in the bill in regard to the disposition of the lands are in the line of the general homestead laws, and provide for the payment by settlers to the Government for the eastern third, which everyone who is acquainted with the country knows is much the best part of it, of $2.50 per acre; for the middle third, which is not so good as the eastern third but better than the western third, $1.50 an acre, and for the remainder, or western third, $1 per acre. We sought in this way to average up as nearly as we could, according to the quality of the land.

This sum, when paid in, will as an aggregate reimburse the Government, we think, amply, and bring back to the Government all that we have agreed to pay. Of course there will be certain sections reserved for school purposes, because, as I have said, when the title of these Indians is extinguished and the country is settled up the land in question becomes a part of the Territory of Oklahoma, which is now knocking at the doors of Congress for statehood. Of course there should be certain sections reserved for that purpose.

Mr. BUSHNELL. May I ask the gentleman if the committee can tell us about what will be the proceeds of this strip of land sold at the prices fixed by the bill?

Mr. PEEL. We have made no accurate estimate, but from a general rough estimate any one can see that one-third of it, which is 2,000,000 acres, at $2.50 per acre, would be $5,000,000. It would all amount to just $10,000,000, in round numbers, provided it was all sold, and there was no reservation; but we reserve for school purposes certain sections, and these of course go to the government of Oklahoma Territory and the State, after it becomes a State, in accordance with similar reservations for other States. Of course we made allowances for that. We think when these reductions are taken out the amount received will about reimburse the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a provision in the bill with reference to intruders. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] the meaning of that.

Mr. PEEL. My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will remember that ever since this has been a part of the Indian Territory, in our first treaty with them and in all our treaties with them, we have guaranteed to protect them not only from State and Territorial governments over them, but from intrusions by our people; but in different ways from time to time some white people have gone onto these lands. Some marry into the tribe. When they marry, however, they become adopted citizens. Some have gone in by permits, which are lawful. Some have come in under claim of citizenship, which question of citizenship has not yet been passed upon by their government.

Under the treaties with them they have the right and the sole right to say who are citizens. Many have gone in under claim of citizenship, which question has not yet been adjudicated, and some claims of citizenship have been rejected. That is the occasion of the provision which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] speaks of.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if any estimate has been made as to the probable expenditure under the fourth provision of article 2 of the treaty, which provides for an accounting to the Cherokee Nation under the treaties of 1817, 1819, etc., and then authorizes the Cherokee Nation to bring suit if they are not satisfied with the result of that accounting? My question is whether any estimate has been made of the probable appropriation which will be necessary under that provision?

Mr. PEEL. I am not able to inform my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] how much they claim the Government owes them. In fact, in my experience in Congress during ten years, I never heard that the Cherokee Nation had any claim against the Government at all; but I see they have incorporated an agreement that the Government is to render an accounting to them under the various treaties, and if they are not satisfied with that accounting, they then have the right to bring suit in the courts to determine what the Government does owe them.

I know they have a large trust fund of some $3,000,000 in the Treasury, out of which we pay about $150,000 in round numbers annually to them. With that money they run their local government, etc.; but what outside matters they are claiming I am not able to say, for I never heard of any claims set up by them until I saw this provision incorporated in this contract.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does not the gentleman think the Government runs a great deal of risk in consenting to such a provision?

Mr. PEEL. I think not. We at least ought not to refuse to allow anybody who claims that we owe him something, the opportunity to try that question in our own courts. The courts of the United States certainly will protect the Government.

Mr. DINGLEY. But why has not the matter been adjudicated before?

Mr. PEEL. Because there was no law authorizing them as an independent community to bring suit, and this only provides for an accounting in the Interior Department in any matters that the Department may admit we do owe them. If they are not satisfied with that accounting this contract authorizes them to bring suit to determine whether we do owe them anything or not.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does my friend think this is a wise provision to insert in the treaty which we are to ratify, authorizing such an accounting running back to the treaty of 1817?

Mr. PEEL. I will say to my friend that if he will go through many other treaties with Indian tribes, he will find similar clauses in those treaties; and I have never yet been afraid to have any Indian tribe sue the Government for what they claim the Government justly owes them.

I have never known any tribunal of the Government to render judgment in favor of the Indians for any amount that we did not owe them; and if we owe them this money, they certainly ought to have it.

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems to me that a provision of this kind ought not to be included in a treaty having reference simply to the purchase of land—a distinct matter entirely.

Mr. PEEL. The negotiators of the treaty could not succeed in negotiating for the land unless this privilege were allowed.

Mr. DINGLEY. It may involve an expenditure of millions of dollars.

Mr. PEEL. That may be true. I do not know how much the Indians claim. But my experience in the practice of the law has been that litigants do not usually get all that they claim. Whether the amount be much or little, the Government ought to pay what it owes. This is all I care to say at present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS].

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, to whom the honor belongs for taking the initiatory steps in this land speculation is a question on which I am not advised. Whether the movement was initiated by the Government or by the Cherokee Nation, or by the Indian Rights Association or by some other persons, I do not know. Nor am I advised of the present necessity of this legislation.

This bill proposes to make an appropriation of nearly $9,000,000 to buy Indian lands. We must assume, then, that the Indians have more land than they want, or are we driving a sharp bargain with them? If we take these lands shall we be obliged to provide more reservations for the Indians elsewhere, thus taking more land from white settlers who have gone on to the public lands and established homes there? I believe that the Government of the United States should be honest, should be just, should make restitution to its citizens whom it has wantonly despoiled of their homes before it goes into any speculation of this sort. I say the Government should make restitution; and I want to call the attention of the House to the provisions of this bill, and to point out how our method of treating our white citizens of the United States differs from our method of treating Indians, whether on reservations or not. I find in this agreement a provision—

That any citizen of the Cherokee Nation, who, prior to the 1st day of November, 1891, was a bona fide resident upon and further had, as a farmer and for farming purposes, made permanent and valuable improvements upon any part of the land herein ceded and who has not disposed of the same, but desires to occupy the particular lands so improved as a homestead and for farming purposes, shall have the right to select one-eighth of a section of land, to conform, however, to the United States surveys; such selection to embrace, as far as the above limitation will admit, such improvements. The wife and children of any such citizen shall have the same right of selection that is above given to the citizen, and they shall have the preference in making selections to take any lands improved by the husband and father that he can not take—until all of his improved land shall be taken.

That is a just provision. Then I find it further provided—

That any citizen of the Cherokee Nation not a resident within the land herein ceded, who, prior to the 1st day of November, 1891, had for farming purposes made valuable and permanent improvements upon any of the land herein ceded, shall have the right to select one-eighth of a section of land to conform to the United States surveys; such selection to embrace, as far as the above limitation will admit, such improvements.

I hold that those provisions are correct in principle. I have read them because I want to call the attention of this House to the manner in which this Government proceeds when it deals with its own white citizens, with its own pioneer settlers upon the frontier. At the proper time, when we consider this bill by sections, I propose to offer some amendments to it. That is the reason I wanted time now, because the five-minutes' discussion would not allow me sufficient time to explain the matter.

One of the amendments I propose to offer is to this effect: that those citizens of the United States who heretofore have gone upon the public lands of the United States that were advertised and held to be open to settlement and there established their homes, made permanent and valuable improvements of which they have been afterward dispossessed, they themselves wantonly and in most cases uselessly driven from their homes and the land added to Indian reservations as a speculation—that such men shall have the first choice of locations in the lands which you now propose to buy from the Indians. That is one of the provisions I desire to propose as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. How will you identify them?

Mr. BOWERS. They will be identified in the courts. When my amendment comes to be read I think it will be satisfactory. Let me state what leads me to offer an amendment of this kind. I have knowledge of the work of the Indian Department in the section of country where I live. A man whom I have known for twenty-three years, after asking the Secretary of the Interior whether certain lands were public lands and open to settlement, received over the signature of the Secretary the statement that they were. Under the authority of the Land Office he went upon a portion of these lands; he bought conflicting claims and proceeded to improve the land, bringing 100 acres under cultivation; he planted orchards and vineyards; he built a large house; he expended some $10,000 on this claim.

A little speculation was gotten up, and the Indian Department persuaded the President to withdraw that land and put it into an Indian reservation. It was not needed for that purpose at all. I visited the land a few days before I started to come to Washington this fall. I saw it with my own eyes. That man was removed from that land and his property was kept from him; he was not even allowed to take off his hay press. He was driven from his home, which he had established years before. I have a letter on this subject, and I wish to read a little of it.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask what portion of this bill he objects to?

Mr. BOWERS. I am stating how I propose to amend the bill; I desire to state the merits of my amendment now.

Mr. PICKLER. To what section does the amendment apply?

Mr. BOWERS. I propose to insert a new section after section 5. By this new section I propose to give the white citizen who has been despoiled of his land, the first choice in the lands which this bill proposes to give to the Indians.

But it has so long been the habit of the Indian Department to ruthlessly take away the homes of the white settlers who have gone on the lands in good faith, where they have built their homes, that it seems to be looked on as an outrage that these people should even protest against such unjust and unwarrantable action on the part of the Government.

The Secretary of the Interior in a letter dated May 24, upon this subject says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., May 24, 1892.

SIR: I have considered what purports to be an appeal of Charles Hensley from your decision affirming that of the Commission appointed, under the provisions of the act of January 12, 1891 (26 Stats., 712), wherein you held that you are satisfied that no injustice has been done Mr. Hensley by the Department declining to grant a rehearing in his case.

It is not my purpose, in what I have to say upon this subject, to go over the persistent manner in which this case has been presented to your office, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to this Department for the last ten years, as it has been repeatedly rehashed to Mr. Hensley and his representatives during that time, but shall content myself with a brief consideration of the matter in issue.

From an examination of Mrs. Cleland's brief and the papers accompanying the same I am at a loss to know what jurisdiction said commissioners had over the matter or why the application was referred to them, as I understand it to have been for a reinstatement of Mr. Henley's entry, on the ground that at the time he purchased the land from Curo it was public land of the United States, and that the proclamation of President Arthur of the date of June 19, 1883, provided that the withdrawal should not affect any existing valid rights of any party, hence the action of the Department canceling his entry was unauthorized and in violation of his legal rights.

The only authority which said commission had for considering the rights of the settlers is found in section 2 of said act, which reads as follows:

"That it shall be the duty of said commissioners to select a reservation for each band or village of the Mission Indians residing within said State, which reservations shall include, as far as practicable, the lands and villages which have been in the actual occupation and possession of said Indians, and which shall be sufficient in extent to meet their just requirements, which selection shall be valid when approved by the President and the Secretary of the Interior. They shall also appraise the value of the improvements belonging to any person to whom valid existing rights have attached under the public-land laws of the United States, or to the assignee of such person, where such improvements are situated within the limits of any reservation selected and defined by said commissioners, subject in each case to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. In cases where the Indians are in occupation of lands within the limits of confirmed private grants the commissioners shall determine and define the boundaries of such lands, and shall ascertain whether they are vacant public lands in the vicinity to which they may be removed. And the said commission is hereby authorized to employ a competent surveyor and the necessary assistants."

It will be observed therefrom that the improvements of any person to whom valid existing rights had attached under any of the public-land laws of the United States are the only matters which that commission could consider; hence, applying the rules of the Department to this case in its present condition, it might be very well dismissed on account of the irregular and informal manner in which it has been presented; but waiving all questions of this character, it must be determined that Mr. Hensley has had his day in court.

The entry in question was canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on January 8, 1884, from which judgment Mr. Hensley appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, where said decision was affirmed on July 5, 1884. No motion for review was filed, and thereupon the judgment became final, and it was so held by Assistant Attorney-General Montgomery on May 21, 1887, in an effort by Mr. Hensley to have his case reconsidered.

The doctrine of res adjudicata in questions of this kind obtains in this Department the same as in the courts, and it will not now go into the question of whether or not the decision of July 5, 1884, was a correct exposition of the law.

In the case of the Rancho San Rafael de la Zanja, 4 L. D., 482, it is said:

"Unless the principle of res adjudicata is recognized, administrative action may become involved in chaos; the labors of the Department would become too cumbrous to admit of their intelligent discharge; uncertainty would cloud every inchoate title, and, in many instances, vested rights would be endangered. Our present duties are amply sufficient to command our whole time and attention without entering unnecessarily into the inquiry as to the intelligence with which every past duty was performed."

This rule has been upheld by a long line of authorities: Higgins vs. Wells, 3 L. D., 21; Henry T. Wells, 3 L. D., 193; Buell vs. Ayres, 13 L. D., 366; State of Kansas, 5 L. D., 243; A. T. Lamphere, 8 L. D., 134; Mary C. Stephenson, 11 L. D., 232.

The application can not be considered as a motion for review or petition for rehearing, as it does not comply with rules 76-79, and does not present any new question either of fact or law that was not fully considered by the Department in its former decision when the rights of Mr. Hensley were disposed of, hence it will not at this time determine the question of whether or not at the time he settled upon this land in 1881 it was public land of the United States, and as such he was entitled to make homestead entry thereof, which was protected by the proclamation, carving from the public lands of the United States the tract upon which he had settled, together with others, for the purpose of creating a reservation for the Mission Indians.

It has frequently been held that a decision of the Secretary of the Interior is conclusive on all questions involved in the case at the time it is decided and will not be disturbed by his successor in office, where there are no new questions presented for consideration. Francis Palms et al., 7 L. D., 146; Henry A. Pratt et al., 5 L. D., 185; State of Oregon, 9 L. D., 360; Michael Dermody, 11 L. D., 504.

I find nothing in the presentation of this case by Mr. Hensley's attorney which will justify the Department in taking it out of these rules, and it being clear to my mind that the commission to whom this matter was presented was without jurisdiction to entertain the same so far as reinstating Mr. Hensley's entry is concerned, your judgement is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

You will inform Mr. Hensley's attorney of the conclusions of the Department.

Very respectfully yours,

GEO. CHANDLER,
First Assistant Secretary.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Now, I say that existing rights attach when a man goes onto a part of the public domain to make himself a home; and when the Government takes possession of his house or his lands and turns it over to somebody else, as they have done in hundreds of cases, then it is only right and proper that compensation should be made for it. That is what I propose in the shape of an amendment to this bill.

Mr. HARVEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for the purpose of correcting a misapprehension?

Mr. BOWERS. What is it the gentleman says?

Mr. HARVEY. I want to correct a misunderstanding that the gentleman seems to have. There are no settlers on this land at all. You are laboring under a delusion, apparently, that there are.

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; I am not laboring under any such delusion at all. I only protest against the policy which has been pursued in regard to these white settlers, of dispossessing them on the slightest provocation; and I claim that these men who have been dispossessed from their lands by the action of the Government, should have the first right to go on to these lands and take possession of them, and not give these men who have gone out on the border and are awaiting an opportunity to make selection and take advantage of their location.

I propose to give these people time who have been dispossessed to make for themselves a home, and this is the only way in which I could bring up this matter before the House. You introduce a bill here to do justice to a citizen who has been despoiled, as many of them have been, and you can not get a hearing for it. He can not get his bill reported, but must take an opportunity on occasions like this, or else there is no hope of relief.

Mr. PICKLER. Do I understand the gentleman to suggest that a man who has been a lawbreaker on other reservations, and who has been dispossessed by the Government as he should be dispossessed, ought to have the first right to these lands?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not mean anything of the kind, and I do not understand any such thing. I do not know what the gentleman from South Dakota understands, or even what he means by his question. Is a man a lawbreaker who goes on to the public domain in accordance with law, and builds his home, and the Government comes along four or five years afterward and lays its strong hand on the property and says, "Here, we want your property, get out of this?" Who is the lawbreaker? The Government is the lawbreaker, and is the dishonest party in such a transaction.

Mr. PICKLER. From a very considerable experience on the public lands of this country, I wish to state that I have never seen anybody dispossessed unless the Government thought there was some error or wrong in his entry.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, I have seen dozens of cases.

Mr. PICKLER. Where?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In Arizona and elsewhere.

Mr. BOWERS. I believe I have the floor.

I can not tell, Mr. Chairman, what the Government thinks, or whether it thinks right or wrong, or whether it is just or otherwise, or acts with wisdom in such matters. I only know what has been done in the past.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The Government may be mistaken in these cases to which you refer.

Mr. BOWERS. I think the Government was mistaken. But if the gentleman from South Dakota does not know of a case here is a little memorandum which will point out one to him. Here is an extract from a letter of an Indian agent referring to just such a case:

Should you or BOWERS see the way to get a bill through paying you for eviction or giving back your land, I will do anything I can to assist you, as I do not feel the land is needed for the Indians.

H. N. RUST.

They took that 160 acres and are holding it to-day. I saw the land myself, the whole place going back to a state of nature, the orchard having but two or three trees only left, the vineyard destroyed, and Hensley had built two miles of fence, wire fence about his location. I saw part of this wire laying in the road, and the agent had men to wind it up and take charge of it as Government property, that this man had bought and paid for.

I wanted to call the attention of the House to these things and to say that we should have the same consideration in dealing with white citizens as you have in dealing with the Indians. I believe in dealing justly with the Indian, but we have dealt unjustly with our own citizens so long that we have got used to it and almost forget that we are doing a wrong.

I will reserve the remainder of my time, as I think I shall be able under the five-minute rule to bring forward the points that I desire in support of the amendments I shall offer.

Mr. PEEL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. OTIS].

Mr. OTIS. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill in which the people of my State take a deep interest. The northern border of this land forms the southern boundary of southwestern Kansas. And in the absence of my friend, Mr. SIMPSON, whose district borders upon this land, I am sure I but voice the sentiments of his constituents when I say that they earnestly favor the early passage of this measure, and the opening up of these lands to settlement. But, Mr. Chairman, this is in no sense a local measure. Every citizen of the United States is interested in it. All along the border of this land of 6,000,000 acres, adjoining Kansas upon the south, hundreds—yes, I may say thousands—of people from every section of the country are awaiting an opportunity to go upon these lands and make for themselves a home. It will not be five years from the time these lands are once opened to settlement before the General Government will be reimbursed for every dollar expended by the actual settlers who will occupy these lands.

But there is another view in which all the people living in the States bordering upon what has been heretofore known as the great Indian Territory, are vitally interested in the measure before us. As long as this region of country is kept in the form of unsettled territory and reservations, so long will it continue to be a rendezvous for an outlaw and criminal class, which will constantly threaten the peace and prosperity of the border. Every law-abiding citizen ought to feel an earnest desire to see all this Indian Territory settled, and the laws, usages, and customs of civilization extending its salutary influence over this rich, beautiful, but to-day poorly regulated region. It forms a commercial barrier between my own State and the great empire State of Texas. At the very earliest possible period every true Kansan, as well as the citizens of adjoining States, would be pleased to speak of this region not as a Territory but as a great State, forming a connecting link between Kansas and Texas.

The inevitable trend of civilization demands the speedy settlement of this region. It is rich not only in the fertility of its soil, but in the number and extent of its minerals. Its surface is undulating and its climate is mild and healthful. Oklahoma (embracing the entire Indian Territory) will yet be the most intensely American of any State in this Union. Here the American Indian has attained his highest degree of development, and here he will have to work out the future of his race.

Mr. PEEL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HARVEY].

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. Chairman, the area of this strip is about 8,000,000 acres. It is 56 miles in width, and 220 in length—a little larger than the State of New Jersey. The title to this region is in a very anomalous condition. Nowhere else in the Union is it unlawful for a white man, an Indian, or a negro to settle.

It would consume too much time to review the legislation under which the title has gotten into this anomalous shape; but since 1866 it has been unlawful for anybody to occupy that land except cowboys who care for the herds of Texas cattle. With this exception the region is dedicated to solitude. The eastern half of it is perhaps as fertile a region as there is within the Union, a very inviting country, and at this moment, as has been stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. OTIS], there are perhaps forty-five or fifty thousand people camped along the line awaiting for this legislation. I am informed that there is a solid camp for a distance of 45 miles, and perhaps farther. These people are ignorant of the slow methods of legislation. They only learn by newspapers that this land is liable to be opened for settlement, and they have gone there with their families, and are awaiting the proclamation of the President permitting them to enter.

This is properly not an appropriation, but a loan, or a guarantee, on the part of the Government; but, to avoid even the appearance of an appropriation, we propose, at the proper time, to offer an amendment requiring that the settlers shall pay the Government for their lands as they enter them, such payments to go to the credit of the Cherokee Nation. In other words, the Government is to permit the settlers who are now hovering along the border and other actual settlers to purchase these lands of the Indians.

If this bill is defeated, if the 4th of March passes without the ratification of this agreement, then it will become necessary to effect a new agreement with the Cherokee Nation. The Government, at great expense, has accomplished the making of this one, and it is as certain as fate that if this be now rejected, the next agreement we make with the Cherokees will be for a larger price than we are now to pay. I hope, in behalf of my people, in behalf of those throughout the country who desire to make homes in this fertile region, that the bill will pass as reported from the committee, with the amendments I have suggested.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, my attention was not called to this bill until this morning, and I have only had time to hastily read its provisions. It provides for the ratification of a treaty with the Cherokee Nation whereby the Government purchases certain lands belonging to that nation, and appropriates the purchase money, amounting to $8,595,736. In addition to this, the fourth clause of the second article of the treaty provides for a complete accounting under all the treaties, commencing with 1817, that the United States Government has ever entered into with the Cherokee Nation, and if, in the accounting thus provided for, the representatives of the Cherokees are not satisfied with the amount allowed them, then the bill further provides that they may bring in the Court of Claims a suit for the recovery of the amount which they claim to be due them.

How much money may be involved in this fourth provision of article 2 of this treaty or agreement I do not know; and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], who has charge of this bill and who is extremely well informed as to all Indian matters, is unable to tell us. It may amount to many millions of dollars.

I am aware that the pressure for the immediate purchase and use of all lands that belong to the various Indian tribes in the United States is so great that it is impossible to resist it. There seems to be a determination on the part of a great many people in this country to seize upon and use immediately every acre of arable land that is included within our boundaries.

I regard this an exceedingly unwise policy. I think we should reserve some of those lands for future wants, and not encourage the taking of them all up immediately, thus increasing beyond reasonable bounds the products of the soil and decreasing the price of those products. In my judgment, the policy of this Government in not only encouraging but in making it necessary almost that these lands shall be all taken up as rapidly as possible, without regard to the demand for the products of the soil, in the manner provided by this bill, is one of the causes that have led to the low prices of farm products during the past few years.

However that may be, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing that question, because I assume that it is hopeless to oppose the carrying out of what I regard, as I have said, as the very unwise policy of using up all the arable lands of this country immediately and reserving none for the future. That policy has gone so far that it is useless to protest, but there are gentleman now living who will see by the results that it has been unwise. When we reach the point where these arable lands have all been brought under cultivation, and there are no more in reserve, then everybody will see that the policy has not been a wise one.

But, passing from that, I want to call attention to two provisions of this bill. It seems to me in the first place that it is extremely unwise to ratify that particular provision of this treaty to which I have called attention—the fourth clause of the second article—whereby we provide for an accounting with the Cherokee Nation under all the treaties that have ever been entered into with that nation back to 1817, and provide that Congress shall then, at the next succeeding session, appropriate the amount that may be found to be due the Indians by this accounting, in relation to matters long since passed away and dating back, as I have said, to 1817.

I suppose it is no use to object to this provision, but I predict now and here that when this treaty shall be ratified with this provision in it you will find in the not distant future claims coming up under this provision that will amount to millions.

I wish now to address myself particularly to the question of the timeliness of the proposition to now purchase and pay for these lands. It is proposed to appropriate $8,595,000, or thereabouts, for the purchase of these lands. I ask gentlemen where the money is to come from to pay so large an amount as this.

Mr. SPRINGER. I believe the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has prepared an amendment which may meet the objection the gentleman from Maine makes upon that point, an amendment providing that no money is to be paid on the principal of this contract until six years, and in the mean time interest——

Mr. DINGLEY. We pay 5 per cent interest in the mean time.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the mean time 5 per cent interest will be paid on the amount of the deferred payment.

Mr. ROCKWELL. To be reimbursed out of the sale of the land.

Mr. DINGLEY. That amendment, if accepted, undoubtedly will meet a large part of the objection which I had to that particular provision. But I am addressing myself to the bill as it is before me.

Mr. SPRINGER. That amendment has been submitted to members of the committee and others, and I believe it will be accepted by the chairman of the committee. It removes, as I understand, many of the objections to the bill. I concede the force of the gentleman's objection. I had a similar objection myself. I think the gentleman's point upon the bill as it stands is well taken.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is to be borne in mind that this bill provides that these lands shall be sold, payment for the same to be made one-half in two years and one-half in four years, so that the sum which may be realized from the sale of these lands will come into the Treasury one-half in two years and one-half in four years. In the meantime the nation, if the bill should be enacted in the form in which it is reported here, would be called upon to advance the money, unless the amendment suggested should be adopted.

Mr. HARVEY. I will say for information that what are known as the filing fees alone—that is, $14.50 for every quarter section, which is paid immediately upon the appearance of the intending settler at the land office—will amount to more than half a million dollars. That will undoubtedly be paid within three months.

Mr. DINGLEY. That will reduce the amount to a little over $8,000,000.

Mr. HARVEY. Nothing will be paid until the expiration of six years.

Mr. DINGLEY. You mean if the amendment is adopted.

Mr. HARVEY. If this amendment prevails—and I understand it is acceptable to the committee—a commutation of claims will be allowed within fourteen months; and at the expiration of that time there will be a large number of commutations at $1.50 an acre; so the Government will be at no outlay whatever for the payment either of interest or principal.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, it is well to bear in mind that we have been doing this kind of business to an unexampled extent for the last four years.

During the four years from March 4, 1885, to March 4, 1889, the expenditures on account of purchase of Indian lands were only $205,284; whereas from March 1, 1889, to March 1, 1893, the expenditures for this purpose will be $5,379,858. Then if the three millions involved in the Choctaw purchase, which the House ordered paid the other day, be added, the expenditures for this purpose in the last four years will reach $8,379,858. Besides there is enough remaining unpaid to bring the amount up to $10,000,000.

We have been carrying on many important public works the past few years which are already necessarily largely increasing our expenditures, and therefore it seems to me that we should in the present situation proceed cautiously in expenditures that can be deferred, and especially where postponement would be wise in itself. A statement appeared in the public prints a few days ago that the expenditures from March 1, 1889, to March 1, 1893, outside of pensions, postal expenses paid by postal revenue, and interest, will be $148,000,000 more than for the previous four years. But, at least $100,000,000 of this increase was made up of this purchase of Indian lands, $35,000,000 increase in the expenditures for the new navy, authorized in large part during the previous four years; $12,000,000 increase in expenditures for rivers and harbors, $10,000,000 increase in public buildings, including new Library building, $9,000,000 increase in fortifications and armament, $10,000,000 for census, $18,000,000 for refund of direct tax and tobacco tax and several other similar items—thus leaving the increase only about twelve millions per annum for ordinary expenditures, which necessarily increase as population and the growth of business go on.

Mr. PEEL. I would like to ask my friend from Maine, since he is criticising these expenditures, if he did not himself support all of the measures looking to appropriations for the building up of the new navy?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly I did, and regarded then, as I regard now, such legislation as wise and worthy.

Mr. DAVIS. But that, you know, was for the benefit of the East.

Mr. DINGLEY. But I want to draw a clear distinction between the expenditures which are absolutely necessary at the time and those which may be deferred. I am not even criticising this expenditure on the conditions proposed by the amendment, I would have the gentleman to understand, but I am simply calling the attention of the committee and House to the fact that we have entered, during the last four or five years, upon large public measures, useful public measures, even counting the purchase of these Indian lands as among that class—projects which have been entered upon as essential, must be carried on, and are now demanding the expenditure of as large sums of money as the public Treasury can supply.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to be permitted to proceed for a few minutes longer.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Maine five minutes more.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am calling the attention of the committee, Mr Chairman, to our situation. I am not criticising in any manner the expenditures we have made in the past, or even, with the amendment suggested by my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], the expenditure involved in the purchase of this land, but I am calling attention to the fact that we have been undertaking during the past four or five years to carry out great public works to an extent never undertaken before and involving an expenditure far in excess of any previous expenditure for such purposes, which has necessarily increased our aggregate expenditures, and with the reduction of revenue caused by the abolition of the duty on sugar, has necessitated care in creating liabilities which can be avoided at present. And this care is all the more necessary when we remember that contracts have been authorized which will continue to increase our expenditures for public works in the next four years.

Mr. HOLMAN. That system to which the gentleman refers, it should be remembered, was commenced by the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is no matter who commenced it or who enlarged it. I am simply calling attention to the fact that we must be specially careful in these matters of appropriations and the creation of liabilities, and that we must look to see where the revenue to meet the expenditure that we authorize is to come from.

When the 30th day of June of this fiscal year has arrived, we shall have ample money to meet all of the liabilities thus far incurred, for which expenditures will be required the present fiscal year. That is already assured. But we can not go on adding new liabilities which will cause new expenditures, for if we do the Government, and the new Administration soon to come in, will have great difficulty in providing for them. I think we should excercise in matters of this kind the same wisdom and the same good business judgment that a business man would exercise in his own affairs.

The gentleman on my left has suggested that I question the wisdom of the purchasing of Indian lands at the rapid rate we have been making, because it is a matter that does not interest the East. Now the gentleman does not mean that. I trust that I am not bound to any narrow locality in that way. I simply want to favor that policy and those measures for each locality that are wise and for the best interests of the whole nation. Whatever is really for the interest of one section of this country is for the interest of all sections of this country. There is no East, no West, no North, no South in matters that concern the welfare of the nation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PEEL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKWELL].

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], whom I did not wish to interrupt during his time, if the gentleman's objection to the fourth section, which he criticised, is founded upon the fact that this will in effect waive the statute of limitations upon the part of the United States as to any claims made by these Indians?

Mr. DINGLEY. That is one objection.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Then am I to understand that if the United States, by contract with the Indians, who are its wards, has bound itself to pay any certain and specific sums of money, that the gentleman objects to the United States waiving the statute of limitations and desires that this Government shall avail itself of that statute in avoiding the payment of its honest debts to these Indians?

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman knows that the object of the statute of limitations is to encourage the presentation of claims when they are fresh, when the facts can be ascertained, and not to defer settlement until the facts are difficult or impossible of ascertainment. The statute of limitations, as the gentleman well knows, is based upon the idea of securing justice.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I now desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]—and not only his attention as an individual, but as the representative of every gentleman on that side of this House—to the fact that during the last session, when this House had chosen to waive the statute of limitations, not only on its own behalf, but, without their consent, on behalf of all the Indians on this continent in the consideration of depredation claims, there was no objection from that side of the House.

When it was proposed to open up claims for Indian depredations, going back for a period of fifty years, I made a protest upon the floor of this House, knowing that there were twenty-five millions of dollars of claims filed under that statute against this Government and against the Indians, and that half a million dollars of them which had been passed upon by the Court of Claims would not be due until the beginning of the present year and this session; and I undertook to show and did show clearly by the law that those claims should not be paid at that time; yet every gentleman on that side of the House voted to pay those claims and to take the money out of the Treasury, notwithstanding the condition of the Treasury, which the gentleman from Maine now depicts to us.

Mr. DINGLEY. I did not vote for it.

Mr. ROCKWELL. No; the gentleman did not vote for it. He conceded to me the correctness of my position and went outside when the vote was taken; but every Republican on the floor at the time voted to pay that half million dollars.

Now I want to say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] that I congratulate him on the great light that he has seen here in this matter. I congratulate him that after the horse has been stolen he wants to lock the barn door. He speaks of the great amount of money that has been appropriated during the last three or four years.

There has been a great amount of money, as he says, appropriated for naval construction. The gentleman knows that there are two sides to that question, and that the people have criticised those appropriations. There have been great amounts of money appropriated for rivers and harbors. There are two sides to that question, and gentlemen have criticised those appropriations.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have not.

Mr. ROCKWELL. There have been great amounts appropriated for coast defense, and there has been criticism of those appropriations.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have not criticised them.

Mr. ROCKWELL. But for the twelve or thirteen millions of dollars that have been appropriated by the last three or four Congresses to extinguish the title to Indian lands and throw those lands open so they may furnish homes for homeless people, you can not point to a man on this floor or off this floor who has ever criticised a dollar of those expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been some criticism.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Has there been any criticism as to those contracts?

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been some criticism as to the opening of these lands in immense quantities at one time.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Every acre of the land has been taken up and paid for by actual settlers, and it has not in effect cost the Government a dollar.

Mr. HOLMAN. Some of the land was opened to settlement under the homestead law without the payment of any money by the setters or with only the payment of a very small amount. That is true of a part of Oklahoma.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I say that there has been no complaint on the floor of this House or anywhere else concerning the money that has been expended in purchasing Indian titles, and so procuring homes for the people of this country for which the people themselves have paid, reimbursing the Government for every dollar that it has expended.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER].

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to enter into the discussion between the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROCKWELL]. As I understand the gentleman from Maine wants the statute of limitations to run against the Indians, and the gentleman from New York wants it to run against the white man because the amounts paid for the Indian depredations are all going to white men.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that those gentlemen and this Congress can do no better than to afford homes to the people of our own time. I can not agree with the gentleman from Maine that these rich and fertile lands in the West should lie there idle, as they have for years, unoccupied, doing no person and scarcely any beast any good. I say I can not agree with him that these lands should be reserved for future generations.

It seems to me that that is contrary to the whole homestead policy. We have been building up these great Western States under this magnificent homestead policy, and thousands and tens of thousands, yea, millions of poor men of the East, have been enabled to secure homes in the West under this homestead policy that never would have been enabled to do so otherwise.

This Cherokee Strip is a goodly land. It was my privilege to travel over it, being in the Government service during the time of the opening of Oklahoma Territory. It is a strip of territory 56 miles wide and 150 miles in length, immediately south of Kansas. It is a beautiful and rich country, and, as has been well said, there are thousands and tens of thousands of people waiting to settle upon that country.

Mr. DAVIS. Forty thousand.

Mr. PICKLER. We have, up and down the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, from Oklahoma to the Canadian line, much land that is inviting to settlers, and I believe in letting them have their choice. These lands should be occupied, as they are useless now. As soon as they are settled, I have no doubt there will be seen in this land cities springing up with 15,000 population in six days, as was the case at Guthrie, Okla.

Now, as to the payment given for these lands. These Indians have agreed on this basis, and if this amount is not paid I believe, as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] has well said, you will not get such another agreement from these Indians. Much of that land is worth $15 an acre to-day. It would sell for $15 per acre now, and these Indians know the value of it as well as we do. As a member of the committee I concede the amendment that is to be offered, but I believe that amendment is a mistake.

I believe that the Government ought to appropriate the money at once, and our financiers could find this $8,000,000. I think it ought to be appropriated and save the 5 per cent interest that we are to pay on this money under the proposed amendment. But whatever the wisdom of the committee dictates otherwise I concede as to any amendment that shall be made in order that this bill shall pass.

It is to the interest of this Territory that the land should be opened for homes. There is no danger of settling up this country too rapidly. Certainly, it seems to me that it is not dangerous in this generation that ample facilities should be offered for settling on homes where our people may live and rear families and acquire prosperity. It would be a much greater benefit than that the Government should reserve this land for an indefinite period for some other people.

The commissioners who made this agreement are not novices. Whoever knows Gen. Jerome, of Michigan, knows that he has spent a considerable portion of his life in such services as this; and the commissioners have put no extraordinary agreements in this treaty. They are safe provisions. They are the best that could be made with these Cherokee Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to state a few things to the committee to remove some erroneous impressions that may have been made during this discussion. I am very glad to say that there is so little inclination to oppose this measure in the committee.

The "intruder" that my friend from California [Mr. BOWERS] speaks about as being contemplated in this agreement is not upon the land opened to settlement. There is nobody upon these lands at all. The "intruders" are in the Cherokee home country, where they live themselves. They require the Government to carry out, in other words, treaty obligations that were existing before. The treaty of 1835 guaranteed protection to these Cherokee people against intruders. The treaty of 1866 renewed that obligation.

Mr. HEARD. It is the law under the treaty now.

Mr. PEEL. It is the law under the treaty to-day. So that that article is but a renewal of the obligation; it is but reaffirmation of preëxisting power, or a power already existing. Therefore there is nothing new about it. It may in some instances work hardship, but the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate in reporting this bill proposed an amendment to that clause—that before these intruders shall be removed, after they have made improvements, they shall be paid for their improvements. That is a question to come up hereafter.

Now as to the clause to which my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] raises his objection. Nothing can arise under that clause against the Government unless it grows out of one of these treaties. They can not under that clause bring a claim or suit against the Government for any outside matter. It requires the Government to render a statement of the account current. In the dealings of these people with the United States under its various treaties or in signing any contract they reserve the right simply, if the account is not satisfactory to them, that they can go to our own courts to adjudicate this matter. That is certainly not an unreasonable proposition.

We are certainly not afraid of the courts of the United States giving money away that we do not owe under treaty stipulations; and if we do owe them, let it be one or two million dollars, or any amount, if we do owe it, we ought not to try to avoid payment. But I do not believe there is much difference between the Government and the Indians in their accounts, because I have lived for a quarter of a century within 25 miles of the Cherokee lands, and for ten years in Congress I have been a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I have never heard that there was a difference of any considerable size between them and the Government in regard to their account.

That, Mr. Chairman, is about all I desire to say. I do, however, want to say one thing more. I hope that when we take up this bill by sections we shall get along with it as rapidly as possible, because this is the only day the committee has, and if the bill is not disposed of to-day I have no hope that we can reach it again in this Congress; and if we do not pass the bill the whole contract becomes void and the Government is left in relation to this matter just where it has been for years, after having incurred much trouble and an expense of at least $50,000 in procuring this contract.

As to the provisions in the bill providing for the disposal of these lands, the committee have had but one object in preparing them, viz, to preserve the lands as far as possible for the benefit of actual bona fide settlers, people who desire to go there in good faith and make homes for themselves and their families. The sole object of the committee has been to preserve the land for such settlers and to exclude the speculators and "sooners" who have embarrassed us so much in connection with the lands that have heretofore been opened to settlement.

Mr. PICKLER. I will ask the gentleman whether this is not in the same plan on which the great Sioux and other reservations have been opened up?

Mr. PEEL. Very similar.

Mr. REILLY. Are there not a very large number of people located now on the borders of this Strip, ready to enter?

Mr. PEEL. Judging from the newspaper accounts and from the letters which I receive, there are a great many people there. There is nobody on the land, of course, but the people are all around there within striking distance, and are preparing at their homes to enter upon these lands as soon as they can go in under authority of law.

Mr. REILLY. And have they taken that action in anticipation that Congress would open up this Strip?

Mr. PEEL. Certainly. I believe I have myself stated upon all occasions when the question has come up, that I was confident that whenever Congress came to understand fully the merits of this bill they would ratify this treaty, and I believe so still.

Mr. REILLY. Would the gentleman consider the class of persons to whom I have referred as bona fide settlers in case this bill should pass?

Mr. PEEL. Oh, certainly. I wish to say further that if any improvements can be suggested in any of the provisions of this bill which will still further guard these lands and preserve them for the benefit of actual settlers, the committee will gladly accept them. I do not care to occupy further time.

The CHAIRMAN. There are eleven minutes remaining under the control of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill be now closed, and that the eleven minutes remaining to me may be used in discussing some amendments that will be offered to the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill by sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the agreement recited, accepted, ratified, and confirmed on behalf of the Cherokee Nation in the said act of the national council of that nation be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed, subject to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer some amendments, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read for information.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Add to section 1 of the bill the following words, viz: "Except as to the following provision of the sixth clause of said agreement, viz., 'It is expressly understood that this agreement ceding and relinquishing the title to the lands herein described shall not be effective for any purpose whatever until it shall, in its entirety, be ratified by Congress, and the amount of money herein agreed to be paid to the Cherokee Nation for such cession and relinquishment shall have been appropriated by Congress and placed in the Treasury of the United States, subject to the order of the Cherokee national council.' And the United States hereby propose to the said Cherokee Nation that the following words be substituted for the foregoing provision, viz: 'It is expressly understood that this agreement ceding and relinquishing the title to the lands herein described shall not be effective for any purpose whatever until the United States shall have agreed by law to appropriate the said sum of money, viz., $8,595,736.12, and pay the same to the Cherokee Nation within six years after the final ratification of this agreement, and shall also have by law agreed to pay to the Cherokee Nation interest on said $8,595,736.12, or so much thereof as shall at any time remain unpaid, annually from and after the date of such ratification at the rate of 5 per cent per annum; but the United States shall have the right to pay said money or any part thereof at any time within said six years."

SEC. —. That whenever the Cherokee national council shall at any time hereafter ratify and accept the foregoing amendment of said agreement and said agreement as so amended shall be in full force and effect and the following provision shall immediately be in full force:

In lieu of section 4 insert the following: The United States, in consideration of the cession of said lands as specified in said agreement, will appropriate and pay to the Cherokee Nation the said sum of money, viz., $8,595,736.12 within six years after the said nation shall ratify said amendment to said agreement and will pay to the Cherokee Nation interest on said sum of money or any part thereof at any time remaining unpaid at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from and after the time said Cherokee Nation shall agree to and ratify said amendment until the said sum shall be paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very emphatically opposed to the policy of postponing the payment of our debts or incurring debts which are to be met in the future, for I think that every Congress should appropriate all the money it authorizes to be expended. I have always contended—and I have so often stated my views on this subject in this House that I hardly need to repeat it—I have always contended that no policy can be more fatal to economy in a government like ours than that of entering into contracts to be paid for in the future, creating future charges upon the Treasury. The enlarged expenditures of the next year and the year after will show how rapidly extravagance grows under such a policy. Such a policy results inevitably in excessive extravagance on the part of the Government. It has always done so in the States of the Union and constitutional barriers have been raised, I think, in all the States against it; but this is an exceptional case.

The Government some two years ago authorized the making of a treaty with the Cherokees for the purchase of the Cherokee Outlet, and during the progress of the negotiation, and especially after it was known that an agreement had been reached, a great multitude of people have naturally gone to the northern border of this strip of land for the purpose of obtaining homes. Forty or fifty thousand people, as we are told, are there. Under these circumstances, although I did not believe that the opening up of this land to settlement at so early a period was good policy, as this is the only large tract of land of our once great public domain we have left adapted to cultivation without irrigation, I feel for one that Congress should in some form or other ratify this agreement.

I am not one of those who have been anxious to see our public domain exhausted, indeed I have resisted every step of our legislation by which our once great possession has by grants and monopolies and other artificial agencies passed into private ownership, for all men can see that when it is exhausted the real perils of our free institutions will begin.

Our safety in the past has been this public domain, which excited the hope and inspired the energy of our laboring and landless people in all years gone by. Millions of men have toiled on cheerfully and hopefully, confident that sooner or later they would be rewarded with independent freeholds and happy homes in the public possessions under the humane provisions of the homestead law. Under ordinary conditions, with the natural and conservative development of our country, such as governed the settlement of our country in the march westward from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, the public domain would have furnished homes for our people for generations to come. The legislation of the last thirty years has been fatal to all this. Enormous grants of public lands to corporations, creating a motive for an artificial system of emigration, has put a heavy mortgage on this, the future. We have wasted our priceless possessions, and who shall estimate the shrinkage in the value of lands it has created between the Mississippi and the Atlantic.

But, under the circumstances, it seems to me proper that this treaty should be ratified in some form or other. The remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] relieve me entirely from the necessity of entering upon the discussion of the necessity of postponing this payment; the state of our finances renders postponement of payment imperative. It is obvious to all gentlemen that the condition of our treasury for the coming year and the following year will not under ordinary conditions bear so heavy a drain upon it as this payment would make. We have not got the money. We have laid heavy mortgages on the early future. Within six years the proceeds of the sale of these lands will furnish the money to pay for them.

Some suggestion has been made as to whether it is likely the Cherokees will ratify this agreement. I have no doubt whatever on that point. As the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] has well said, the Cherokee people are a very intelligent, keen, and businesslike people; they understand their rights and interests very fully. Their Legislature is well conducted. Intelligence is almost universally diffused among them. Their newspapers and their charitable institutions show the progress they have made. There are in this treaty two provisions of the highest moment to them independently of the question of money here involved. One of these is the provision for the removal of intruders.

This is of vital moment to them; and it is to be carried out at the expense of the United States. The other provision is the clause to which the gentleman from Maine has referred in regard to the examination of their accounts. They have in former years and still indulge the belief that large sums of money were due to them from the United States; and hence this provision, and if their claims are correct, as asserted years ago more than of late years, this provision will be of special benefit to them. The gentleman from Maine is undoubtedly correct in his suggestion that the statute of limitations will not apply in such a case. As a general principle it does not apply in any matter of trust, and I think it almost certain that it will not apply here. Hence the right to have their accounts examined and to go into the Court of Claims, may be of great value to the Cherokee Nation.

I have nothing further to add, Mr. Chairman, except to say that the last two sections read were only sent up in connection with the amendment to the first section. I do not offer them at the present time.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman state the import of his amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] suggests that I state the effect of my amendment. A clause in the sixth section of the agreement provides that the agreement shall have no effect whatever unless and until the money is appropriated and placed to the credit of the tribe in the Treasury of the United States, subject to the order of the Cherokee Nation; until this is done the treaty is to be absolutely without effect. The substitute provides that it shall not take effect until the Government of the United States shall provide by law that within six years the money shall be appropriated and paid to the Cherokee Nation, and the United States shall also agree by law to pay interest on the amount at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from the time the Cherokee Nation ratifies the amendment, and that the agreement shall take effect "whenever at any time hereafter" the Cherokees shall ratify the amendment. That is the purport of the amendment. I hope if there is any misapprehension in regard to it the reading will be repeated.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, if I should express my individual judgment upon the propriety of this amendment I should pronounce it an unwise provision, because I think there is very great risk that we may not obtain the consent of the Cherokee Nation to the amendment. But in view of the consultations I have had with a number of gentlemen on the floor, and the very great interest we all feel in the condition of the Treasury, the apprehension being general that the Treasury will probably not be in a situation to stand the strain of so large an amount if immediately appropriated, I shall offer no objection to the amendment. This amendment simply defers the appropriation stipulated for in the agreement, and provides for the payment of interest on the amount in the meanwhile.

Mr. BRODERICK. Will the gentleman state whether there is reason to believe that the amendment if adopted will be accepted by the Indians?

Mr. PEEL. I must confess I have some doubt on that point. But there are some other very important matters embraced in this agreement; and when the bill shall be finally perfected the question whether the Indians will accept the modifications which Congress may have placed upon the agreement will be one for the sound discretion of the Cherokee Nation to determine. In the hope that we may be able to secure the consummation of the agreement as an entirety, I feel liberally disposed toward any amendment that may be offered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, one word further, Mr. Chairman. As the bill stands now, the treaty is to go back to the Cherokees.

Mr. PEEL. Oh, no; as the bill stands now, that is not required.

Mr. PICKLER. If Congress ratified it, it is an agreement now.

Mr. PEEL. After conferring with the committee on Indian Affairs, we thought better, in order to succeed, to allow this payment to be deferred.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, it was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to effect the removal of intruders from within the territory of the Cherokee Nation, as required by the first subdivision of article 2 of said agreement, the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to employ such expert person or persons and assistants as may be necessary to properly render a complete account to the Cherokee Nation of moneys due said nation, as required in the fourth subdivision of article 2 of said agreement, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend this section by striking out in line 7 the sum of "$5,000" and inserting "$2,500." I think one-half of the amount proposed to be appropriated as ample, and I offer that amendment.

Mr. PEEL. I think myself, Mr. Chairman, that the amount suggested by the gentleman from Indiana is ample. That section came to the committee from the Indian Office.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was adopted.

Section 4 was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of making the compensation provided for in said agreement the sum of $8,595,736.12 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid in the manner provided for in article 2 of said agreement.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a substitute for section 4:

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of section 4 insert:

"The United States, in consideration of the cession of said land, as specified in said agreement, will appropriate and pay to the Cherokee Nation the said sum of money, namely, $8,595,736.12 within six years after the said nation shall ratify said amendment to said agreement; and will pay to the Cherokee Nation interest on said sum of money or any part thereof, at any time remaining unpaid, at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, from and after the time said Cherokee Nation shall agree to ratify said amendment, until the said sum shall be paid."

Mr. HOLMAN. That amendment seems necessary to carry out the provision heretofore adopted, and I move its adoption.

Mr. REED. Why is such an amount of interest fixed as 5 per cent? Is that recommended by the committee?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have followed the provision as it appears in the agreement. I offer that because it was presented as having been agreed upon by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It seems to me to be too large a rate.

Mr. PEEL. It is the rate specified in the contract made between the commissioners of the Government and the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. REED. And not by the committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. PEEL. No, it is fixed in the contract.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would also suggest that this is the amount that has always been paid by the Government as interest on the Indian fund.

Mr. HOLMAN. The rate is too high.

Mr. PEEL. That is fixed in the agreement.

The question being taken, the substitute to the fourth section was adopted.

The Clerk read section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That within ninety days after the approval of this act the President of the United States shall, by proclamation, declare the lands ceded in said contract, except the allotments provided for in the fifth article of said agreement, to be part of the public domain of the United States and open to settlement by actual settlers and citizens of the United States under the homestead laws of the United States only as hereinafter provided.

Mr. BOWERS. To that section, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 5 the following:

"For the term of six months succeeding the date of the proclamation of the President as provided, said territory shall not be open to settlement except to such citizens of the United States as have heretofore taken up or actually settled upon public lands under any of the laws relating to the entry of public lands, and who have been dispossessed of the same and the improvements thereon by the United States for the use of Indians without compensation therefor, shall at any time during the said period of six months be allowed to select 160 acres of any of the lands embraced in this agreement ratified by this act: Provided, That all such persons shall first have made due proof in a court of record in the State or Territory wherein such settlement on and eviction from public lands was made, and also establish the value of substantial improvements made thereon, and the amount of the value so ascertained shall be deducted from the price to be paid for said lands as provided in section 14 of this act, and in case the value of such improvements shall equal or exceed the price fixed upon such lands, then a patent shall be issued at once to the settler for the land so taken. All United States land offices shall promptly furnish certified abstract of all entries or filings or orders made regarding any claim of which the claimant has been dispossessed and his claim taken for the use of Indians.

"Upon the expiration of the said term of six months the said lands shall be opened to settlement by actual settlers and citizens of the United States, as provided by the following sections of this act."

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I trust the committee will not accept that amendment, and I hope the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] will not seriously press it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 5, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to section 5, as follows, to wit:

"The selection of said allotments, provided for in the fifth section of article 2 of said agreement, shall be made without delay by such persons, or if minors, by their parents or guardians appointed by the Cherokee courts, who shall be recognized as guardians in respect to said allotments, and the titles as guarantied in section 5, of article 2 of said agreement, shall be made and confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior by patent, prior to the issuance of the proclamation of the President opening said lands to settlement, and he shall publish for the information and protection of proposed settlers what selections have been so reserved."

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I will explain the object of that. In the treaty with these Indians, they reserved the right for as may as seventy persons to make selections, claiming that some of their people have gone over and made valuable improvements upon this Outlet, to a number not exceeding seventy. They reserved the right for that many persons to select out of these lands 80 acres apiece and to pay to the Government the proportionate price that the Government is paying for the whole.

Now it will be seen at once that unless they make these selections before the proclamation is issued opening these lands for settlement, settlers will go in there and perhaps get onto some of their claims. This amendment requires them to go ahead and make their selections and let the Secretary of the Interior issue notice in the proclamation, showing where each one of these allotments has been made, so that there will be no conflict of claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill about a clause in the sixth line, which provides that these lands shall be a part of the public domain of the United States and open to settlement by actual settlers "and citizens of the United States," under the homestead laws of the United States. What is the meaning of the words "and citizens?"

Mr. PEEL. I do not know that there is any particular necessity for that. I believe that under the homestead laws aliens can not take up public lands.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to amend by striking out the words "and citizens."

Several MEMBERS. Why?

Mr. KYLE. Would you not let aliens in then?

Mr. HOLMAN. The homestead law allows persons who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, etc., to take up lands.

Mr. PICKLER. That is the very point. This modifies the homestead law so that a man who comes to this country, and who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, could not take up land in Oklahoma Territory. The words "and citizens" ought to come out, and then it will leave the land to be taken up by settlers under the homestead laws of the United States, which are ample to protect the rights of everybody in that particular. If this provision is left in its present form it will cut off every person of foreign birth who has not become a fully naturalized citizen of the United States.

Mr. PEEL. I think the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] is right about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER].

The amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words, "and citizens of the United States."

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PICKLER, the chairman announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BOWERS demanded a division.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not do that. This will leave the provisions of the homestead law to operate.

Mr. BOWERS. Then I will withdraw the demand for a division.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to offer an amendment to section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was read as follows:

Strike out in line 1 the words "approval of," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the ratification of the amendments."

Mr. SPRINGER. The object of that is to make it read—

That within ninety days after the ratification of the amendments, the President of the United States shall, etc.

It is a proper amendment in view of the changes which have been made.

Mr. PEEL. I will accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to come in as a new section, to be numbered section 2. I wish to ask unanimous consent to return to that part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent at this time to offer an amendment to come in as section 2. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert as section 2 the following:

"That whenever the Cherokee National Council shall at any time hereafter ratify and accept the foregoing amendments to said agreement, the said agreement as so amended shall be in full force and effect, and the following provisions shall immediately be in full force."

Mr. SPRINGER. Just add that as a part of section 1.

Mr. HOLMAN. It might just as well be added to the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to add to the first section the amendment which has just been reported by the Clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That no person who is the owner, in his or her own right, of 160 acres of land, or who shall be the owner of real estate in any city or town of the United States the aggregate value of which shall exceed $3,000, shall be allowed to enter or hold any of said lands.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment there.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, in line 2, strike out the words "one hundred and sixty," and insert "eighty."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make this suggestion: When a party enters less than 160 acres of land, he does it because it is more desirable to enter a smaller piece, because it is more valuable than a larger piece; and where a citizen has before availed himself of the benefits of the homestead law, why should he have the opportunity, for his own benefit, of settling on 80 or 40 acres, rather than on a whole quarter section? If he does settle on the smaller amount of land, it is because it is more valuable land.

Mr. PEEL. I will say that that is already the law to-day.

Mr. BRODERICK. Section 6 does not have reference to the homestead law. If the whole of the amendments I desire to offer to that section are read, they will explain themselves. Only one amendment has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that the two other amendments he has sent up to the Clerk's desk be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, strike out the word "three," and insert the word "two."

And in line 5 of said section, strike out the word "any," and insert the words "more than eighty acres."

Mr. BRODERICK. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is rather a good provision, especially the last one. With 40,000 people on that border and millions of landless people in this country, with this land of special value, too, and the only available tract of land fit for cultivation without irrigation, with the exception of the 3,000,000 acres on which the Comanches are located in the southern portion of the Territory, I think that the proposition to limit the settler to 80 acres of land is a very good one.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman in charge of the bill to accept these amendments?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendments of the gentleman from Kansas before us, it is whether section 6 provides that whoever is the owner of 160 acres of land, shall not take land under this bill; the gentleman desires to provide that whoever owns 80 acres shall not take any of it. Is that true?

Mr. BRODERICK. That is not exactly correct.

Mr. PICKLER. I am opposed to that. I believe that when any soldier has taken 80 acres of land under the homestead law in any other States, or any citizen has taken 80 acres of land under the homestead law, he ought to be permitted to take up an additional amount under the homestead law to bring it up to the full amount he would be allowed to take under that law.

I do not believe that it is fair to say that he shall not have the right to make it up to the usual homestead of 160 acres. This has nothing to do with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who wants to restrict homesteads generally to 80 acres. That is another question altogether.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that to be a part of the amendment.

Mr. BRODERICK. Yes, sir. If the gentleman will read the section as it will be amended, he will see that it will be this way:

That no person who is the owner in his or her own right of 80 acres of land, or who shall be the owner of real estate in any city or town in the United States, the aggregate value of which shall exceed $2,000, shall be allowed to enter or hold more than 80 acres of said land.

It simply means that if these amendments are adopted any one who owns 80 acres of land, or owns not exceeding $2,000 worth of property, "may" own 80 acres of this land.

Mr. PICKLER. Then there are two amendments.

Mr. BRODERICK. Three.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to hear the section read as it would be if these amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BRODERICK. If the Clerk will read the section as proposed to be amended I think there will be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the section as it is proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That no person who is the owner, in his or her own right, of 80 acres of land, or who shall be the owner of real estate in any city or town of the United States, the aggregate value of which shall exceed $2,000, shall be allowed to enter or hold more than 80 acres of said land.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say in regard to that——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman recognizes the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this amendment it will simply provide that every man in the United States, whether he be worth a million or any other sum, can homestead 80 acres of land there. That opens up a great question. Any man who owns 80 acres, or has property in a city to the value of not exceeding $2,000 shall not have "more than" 80 acres. He may have 80 acres, so that whatever the value of his property, or whatever the wealth of that man, he may homestead 80 acres, if this amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BRODERICK. I can not see that that amounts to anything. If a man has 159 acres, he may homestead a quarter section.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. BRODERICK. And this is a restriction.

Mr. BUTLER. But it says that if he has 160 acres (or, of course, more) he shall then not be allowed to enter any, but under this amendment if he has 80 acres and property in the city to $2,000 he may, even then, enter 80 acres more.

Mr. BRODERICK. That is true.

Mr. BUTLER. He may have 160 acres or more and he can still homestead 80 acres. If he has 10,000 acres he may still homestead 80 acres.

Mr. BRODERICK. No, no.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. It can not mean anything else as it reads.

Mr. BRODERICK. It simply says that if he has 80 acres he may not homestead more than 80.

Mr. BUTLER. How much can he homestead under this amendment if he has 10,000 acres?

Mr. BRODERICK. None.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; he can homestead 80 acres.

Mr. BRODERICK. Oh, no.

Mr. BUTLER. "Not to exceed 80 acres" is what it says.

Mr. PICKLER. "That no person who is the owner in his or her own right of 160 acres of land."

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; but the wealthiest man in America can homestead 80 acres under this amendment.

Mr. BRODERICK and Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the amendment be read again, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BUTLER (to Mr. BRODERICK). Now, am I not right?

Mr. BRODERICK. No, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. I will bet a horse that I am right [laughter], and it can not be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I highly approve of the first part of the amendment, proposing to strike out "160" and insert "80." I think that is exactly right. I do not think that a man having already an ample farm—because 80 acres of good land is a very handsome farm—should be allowed to enter public lands at a mere nominal price. Gentlemen, we forget the great mass of landless people in this country, a mass which is so rapidly growing, and we propose to legislate here in such a way that a gentleman living, for instance, in my own State, or in any other, having already 80 acres of land, worth thousands of dollars, can go and take up at a merely nominal price these lands which we ought to hold for the landless people of the country.

Let me mention a fact which may not be generally known, that in a portion of my own State where the land is not of the best, being somewhat broken and hilly, the great body of those lands was entered in 40-acre and 80-acre lots. You will find whole counties where there was not a quarter section entered in one lot. That was years ago; yet now, with our public lands substantially exhausted and the landless people of the country increasing continually in numbers, we are proposing to so legislate that a man having already an ample farm may go in and enter a quarter section of land, stay there fourteen months, get his title, the land in the mean time having become worth from fifteen to twenty dollars an acre. We are opening up an ample field for speculation by this kind of legislation.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Chairman, I am willing that the amendment shall be divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas, proposing to strike out "160" in the second line of this section and insert "80."

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I cheerfully accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the second amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 of said section 6, strike out "three" and insert "two."

Mr. PEEL. I am willing to accept that, because it reduces the limit of the value of the town property from $3,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the third amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5 of section 6, strike out the word "any" and insert "more than 80 acres."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, that is the part of the amendment that I criticised awhile ago, and I desire again to call attention to it.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. That suits me.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 6, page 13, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "allow," insert the following: "Either directly or indirectly."

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer that simply as a matter of precaution. As the amendments which have been heretofore offered to this section have been designed for the purpose of securing these lands to the poorer classes of our people, I desire to have these words inserted so that a person having already a large amount of means or of property may not do indirectly what he could not do directly under this bill.

Mr. PEEL. I accept the amendment.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Would it not be better to say, "Who is the owner of real or personal property of the value of $3,000"?

Mr. PEEL. Personal property is so invisible that it would be very hard to determine the matter.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The provision, as it now stands, would allow a man worth $50,000 to go and make a homestead entry. If it is a short half-quarter, he can take another one; if a long half-quarter, he can not.

Mr. PICKLER. Men worth $50,000 do not take land under provisions of this kind.

Mr. PEEL. Not often.

The Clerk read the next section as follows:

SEC. 7. That no person who has had the benefit of the homestead laws of the United States to the extent of procuring title to as much as 160 acres shall be allowed to take or enter any of the lands embraced in the agreement ratified by this act: Provided, That persons who have homesteaded and procured title to less than 160 acres of land shall be allowed to homestead enough of the lands in said agreement to equal 160 acres.

Mr. BYNUM. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 2 and 3, of section 7, the words "to the extent of procuring title to as much as 160 acres."

Strike out also the proviso to said section, so that the section as amended will read:

"That no person who has had the benefit of the homestead laws of the United States shall be allowed to take or enter any of the lands embraced in the agreement ratified by this act."

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I have been led to offer this amendment because I hold the same view which was advocated by my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] a few minutes ago. Those who have homesteaded lands heretofore to the extent of less than 160 acres would have homesteaded the full 160 acres, but for the reason that they secured a more valuable tract than one of 160 acres. It does seem to me that the value of the land homesteaded ought to be the criterion, and that those who have gone in and taken less than 160 acres ought to be precluded just as much as those who have taken the full quantity. The simple effect of my amendment is that any person who has taken land under the homestead law will be precluded from going into this newly opened country and taking any land whatever.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question upon another point. Where a person has commuted, as we term it, on a homestead, that is, has paid $1.25 an acre instead of living on the land the required five years, would he be prevented under this amendment from taking land?

Mr. BYNUM. My amendment does not change the effect of the section in that respect at all. If under the section as originally drawn such a person would be precluded, he will be precluded under my amendment; otherwise not.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. BYNUM was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. It seems to me proper to provide in this section that any person who has had the benefit of the desert-land act, or the timber-culture act, or the preëmption laws of the United States should be precluded from entering land under this bill. I move to amend by inserting after the word "homestead," the words "timber culture, preëmption, or desert land."

Mr. BYNUM. I see no objection to that amendment.

Mr. PEEL. I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment which I have promised the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HARVEY] to offer. It was prepared to be added to section 5. A delegation from Oklahoma came before our committee with their memorial. No action was taken by the committee, but I promised the delegation that I would offer the amendment and allow the House to determine whether they were asking more than was proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] to section 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

And except sections 13 and 19 in each township, which sections are hereby reserved from sale or entry for the following purposes, to wit: The thirteenth section of each township is hereby reserved for the equal use and benefit of the University of Norman, the Normal at Edmon, and the Agricultural College at Stillwater, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and the nineteenth section of each township is hereby reserved from sale or entry for the charitable reformatory and penal institutions of said Territory, and to be so used and held in trust by the State when statehood shall exist.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, the memorial which has been presented to Congress by the gentleman to whom I have referred shows by a tabulated statement that in the creation of the new States of Idaho, Wyoming, the two Dakotas, and Montana between six and seven hundred thousand acres were reserved for purposes similar to those contemplated by the amendment now offered.

I myself think it perfectly just to a new country growing up like that to make some such provision. This is especially true, because much of the Indian lands which have been opened for settlement have had no provisions for reservations for this purpose, and a great deal of the lands allotted to the Indians is nontaxable for twenty-five years, so that it will be embarrassing for the Territory to build up its charitable and penal institutions unless some reservation of the public land is made for this purpose. This will not be more, in my judgment, than was reserved to the other new States.

Mr. BUSHNELL. As I understand, you reserve three sections in each township?

Mr. PEEL. No, section 13 for one purpose and section 19 for another.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Let me ask my colleague on the committee if it would not be better to put this in as a provision to section 13, which provides for school purposes?

Mr. PEEL. I have no objection to that. I prepared it, however, as an addition to section 5.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to inquire where these institutions named in the amendment are located by this provision of the law?

Mr. HARVEY. They are already located and in operation.

Mr. PICKLER. By a Territorial statute of Oklahoma?

Mr. HARVEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PEEL. If the reading of the amendment is noticed, it does not locate or fix the locations of these institutions. They can be established at any point in the Territory that the Territorial government or State government may fix. It only specifies that a certain amount of land shall be donated for this particular purpose.

Mr. PICKLER. This has not been granted to the other Territories. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me if we adopt that amendment we absolutely fix these two institutions at these two places, regardless of what the people of the State may desire when it comes in as a State.

Mr. PEEL. My friend is entirely mistaken. The institutions are only named as the beneficiaries of this land. But this does not undertake to fix the location. It does not confine the location to the points fixed. You can, if you see proper, provide that nothing herein contained shall be construed to require them to be located at the points named.

Mr. HARVEY. We are willing to strike out the names.

Mr. TURPIN. How much land has been donated heretofore to the Territory of Oklahoma for this purpose?

Mr. PEEL. None at all.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to strike out the words in the amendment "Edmon" and "Stillwater" and let the appropriation be for the normal schools and let the people themselves determine where they shall be established.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 8. That section will have no value in view of the amendments to section 7.

Mr. PEEL. I am not sure that my colleague is correct about that. Let us have the section read.

Section 8 was read, as follows:

SEC. 8. That no person who has heretofore made homestead entry of any Indian lands heretofore opened to settlement within the limits of the Territory of Oklahoma, or who has occupied or set up claim to any such lands, shall be allowed to homestead or otherwise hold any of the lands embraced in the agreement ratified by this act unless he or she, as the case may be, has lost the same by due process of law upon contest or otherwise.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 8, page 14, as follows:
On line 8, after the word "otherwise," insert the following:
"Or shall, prior to his or her application to homestead or enter such land, file with the Secretary of the Interior a relinquishment of his or her claim to such former homestead entry or claim.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the purpose of this amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I think there can be no objection to that.

I offer the amendment for this purpose: The section provides that no person who has heretofore made a homestead entry on any Indian lands shall be allowed to enter any of these lands unless he shall have been actually ejected or lost his right to his prior lands. I simply desire to amend by providing that if a party relinquishes his claim to the Secretary of the Interior then he may be permitted to enter these lands like any other citizen.

Mr. PEEL. I do not think we ought to adopt that provision, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read section 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. That all homestead entries of the lands embraced in the agreement ratified by this act shall be initiated by actual location and going upon the land in person by the entryman and commencing substantial and lasting improvements thereon, and the occupant shall file formal application in proper land office, under this act, within four months after date of entry by occupancy.

Mr. OTIS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3 of section 9, after the word "land," insert "and residing at least four months thereon."

Mr. OTIS. The effect of the amendment is to avoid anything like speculation on the part of those seeking to occupy the land, by requiring that a party shall go upon the land and reside there at least four months in person before he can make the entry.

Mr. PICKLER. He is required now to reside there five years in person.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, but fourteen months.

Mr. PICKLER. I beg pardon. If he takes under the homestead law he must reside five years. He can commute in fourteen months, that is, pay a dollar and a quarter an acre. Now, this is not a good amendment. The homestead laws of the United States require actual occupany and actual residence.

Mr. OTIS. The gentleman does not understand me. This provides that it shall be that long before he can make his filing.

Mr. PICKLER. That is not necessary. The section provides that anyhow. That is altogether unnecessary. The original section provides that it shall be an actual occupant who shall take this land, and that he shall have four months to make his filing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that amendment will be reported again.

The amendment was again reported.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That the President shall give at least thirty days' notice before said lands shall be thrown open to settlement; he shall fix the time for entering upon said lands for settlement under this act, which time shall be at least thirty days before the date named for persons to enter; and persons entering upon any of said lands before the time fixed in the President's proclamation shall not only forfeit all rights in and to any of said lands, but shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars: Provided, That persons entering under authority of law shall be exempt from the fine prescribed in this section.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 10 the following:
"And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to prevent contests as to priority of location upon any of said lands; and all such rules and regulations shall be incorporated in said proclamation of the President, and they shall become a part of the conditions upon which location and settlement upon said lands shall be made."

Mr. PEEL. That is a good amendment, and I accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman in charge of the bill accepts the amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. It must be voted upon by the committee, however.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out "thirty" and inserting "sixty," in line 1, section 10, on page 14.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the object of purchasing this land is to furnish homes for poor people. Now, the people in every section of this country are equally interested in this land after it is purchased by the Government, and it is our duty to afford to them all the facilities necessary for reaching these lands.

Mr. PEEL. I am perfectly willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Let it be reported again.

Mr. PEEL. It gives sixty days' notice instead of thirty.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think thirty days are enough.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to that amendment. Thirty days are altogether too long. Sixty days only double up the number of people who will be there scrambling for these lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. It gives them all an equal chance.

Mr. PICKLER. There is not a man or woman in the United States who will want to take any of this land as a homestead, who will not know it within three days after the proclamation is issued. This amendment only prolongs the matter and leaves those people camping around the border in an unsettled state, and affords occasion for riots and rows and all sorts of difficulties; and it is altogether unnecessary. Three days would be time enough.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to state further that these additional thirty days might postpone the time of settlement so far that it would be impossible during that year to raise any crops at all. These thirty days may be of the utmost importance to the settlers. We leave it to the discretion of the President, who may fix sixty days if he desires to do so.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MILLER. I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers another amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out "thirty" and inserting "sixty," on line 5, section 10, page 14.

Mr. MILLER. Now, I think, in limiting this time you are merely giving an advantage to the people in the immediate vicinity in getting the benefit of this land. We are all equally interested. It is understood that this is valuable land; and even in my section of the country people are talking about going to that region when the land comes into market. Now, those who seek new homes in new countries are not people of wealth. They can not take express trains and go to the regions which they desire to reach.

The people from Maine and the people from Wisconsin are equally interested and have an equal right to make their homes in this valuable tract of country, and I think it is only fair that we should give them an equal chance. It is on this account that I have introduced these two amendments.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask that the amendment may be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I desire to offer an amendment to section 10, by inserting the word "public" after the word "days," in line 2; so that the clause will read "public notice."

Mr. PEEL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That every person who may enter upon and set up claim to any lands embraced in the agreement ratified by this act, knowing that he or she, as the case may be, is not entitled to take and hold the same under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not less than $300 nor more than $1,000 and be imprisoned not less than six months for each offense.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

After section 11 add the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall in any way affect or abridge any rights or privileges of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians under existing treaties and laws."

Mr. PEEL. Certainly; there is no objection to that amendment

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That all lands embraced in the agreement ratified by this act shall be entered under the homestead laws of the United States only: Provided, That each settler shall pay to the United States, as hereinafter provided, in addition to the usual local office fees, for all lands lying east of 97½° west longitude, double minimum or $2.50 for each acre; for all lands west of 97½° west longitude and east of 98½° west longitude at $1.50 for each acre; the remainder at $1 for each acre: Provided, That the settler in each case may be allowed to pay for the same as follows: One-half of the purchase price at the end of two years from date of entry; the remainder at the end of four years from date of entry: Provided, That in no case shall patent issue until all the purchase money is fully paid.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to ask the gentleman if he does not think that this section ought to be amended by inserting after the word "price" the words "before or," and after the word "remainder," in line 14, to insert the words "before or" in the interest of persons desiring to commute under the homestead law?

Mr. PEEL. It is not necessary. It is only premissive.

Mr. PICKLER. It does not seem to me that the Government can take out of this one-half the purchase price at the end of two years from the date of entry. I think it ought to be "before or at the end."

Mr. PEEL. I do not think it makes a particle of difference.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad to have a vote of the committee upon the question of limiting the entry to 80 acres. I do not know what the sentiment of the committee may be, but I move to amend, in the second line, by inserting "shall be limited to 80 acres of land entered under the provisions of the homestead law of the United States:"

That all lands embraced in the agreement ratified by this act shall be entered under the provisions of the homestead law of the United States, and be limited in amount of 80 acres.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will please send his amendment to the desk in writing, as the Clerk is unable to understand it.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Do not the amendments already agreed to cover that?

Mr. PEEL. They do not.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 14, line 3, after the words "United States," insert the words "but not to exceed 80 acres of land for each entry."

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment will be a mistake. It seems to me that, in view of the vast area of land still unsettled in that Western country and in view of the many restrictions provided in this bill, that there ought not to be this limit of the amount. I have been on that strip of land, and my great disappointment was that the land was not half as good as I supposed it to be before I went there. On two-thirds of this land a man will do well if he can make a home and support a family on 160 acres of land.

Now, if 80 acres of land only were allowed along the rivers, where the land is very fertile, it would be all right. I would rather have 40 acres of land along the Arkansas and other rivers than 160 acres anywhere on these rough prairies, which are sandy and not very good. The great body of the land is not as good as it is supposed to be. I have heard a good deal said about this land and its fertility, but I was there, and it is not half as good as it is said to be.

You will remember that thousands and thousands of men were disappointed heretofore when these tracts were opened for settlement; and they came back without making settlement notwithstanding the great number of people that were along the borders at the time when the lands were declared opened for entry. I think you will cripple these people and do them an injustice if you limit the number of acres to 80. I think it ought to remain 160 acres, and if you will go there and see that land I know you will agree with me that it will be wrong to limit the number to 80 acres.

Mr. PEEL. I hope we will have a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word upon the amendment. I do not wish to consume the time of the gentleman from Arkansas who has charge of the bill, but still I wish to get my proposition before the committee. I am willing to limit this proposition to the eastern third of the land.

Mr. PICKLER. That is all right.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the conditions on which we are opening this land for entry there would be unexampled speculation as to that eastern third. These lands are unusually valuable today, and there are large settlements right on the border. Why, there are towns right on the border, and lands that are worth from $50 to $75 an acre.

Mr. HEARD. Part of these lands are within 4 miles of Arkansas City, Kans., a town of 12,000 inhabitants.

Mr. HOLMAN. And I therefore think that as to this eastern third, at least, the entry should be limited to 80 acres.

Mr. PEEL. That is all right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I therefore modify my amendment so as to provide that in the eastern third the amount of the entry shall be limited to 80 acres.

Mr. HEARD. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I send up an amendment to come in at the end of the section.

The amendment was read, as follows:

And provided further, That the rules and regulations that may be made by the Secretary of the Interior as defined in section 10 of this act may change the times of the payments of the purchase money required by this section.

Mr. SPRINGER. The object of that is to enable the Secretary to make some modifications, if he so desires, of the requirements as to the times of payment of the purchase money, in order to prevent, if possible, contests with regard to priority of location. The amendment is in harmony with the other provisions heretofore adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 15, as follows:

SEC. 15. That the money appropriated for the purchase of the lands embraced in this act shall be paid as stipulated in said contract, except a sufficient amount to pay the Delawares their per capita share, which amount shall remain in the Treasury of the United States until the status of said Delaware Indians shall be determined by the courts of the United States before whom their suit is now pending.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for that section. I send the amendment to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 15. That the money appropriated in section 4 of this act shall be paid as therein specified, except a sufficient amount to pay the Delawares their pro rata share in the proceeds of said Outlet; which amount shall remain in the Treasury of the United States until the status of said Delaware Indians shall be determined by the courts of the United States, before which their suit is now pending.

Mr. PEEL. The territory where the Delawares are is a part of the Cherokee country. They bought in there in 1866 and '67, and there is some dispute as to whether they are entitled to any share of the proceeds of these lands. By authority of Congress they have brought a suit to determine that question, and the suit is now pending, and this section proposes to reserve a sufficient amount of money to pay their claim if it shall be found valid.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 18, line 24, after the word "same," insert "provided that no greater number of lots than are embraced in one block shall be sold to or for the same person, association, or corporation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEEL. I desire to offer an additional section, to be numbered 17.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 17. That the act granting right of way to the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company, approved February 24, 1887; also the act granting right of way to the Galena, Guthrie and Western Railway Company, approved June 21, 1890; also the act granting right of way to the Hutchison and Southern Railroad Company, approved September 26, 1890, and the act amendatory thereof, approved January 5, 1892; also the act granting right of way to the Sherman and Northwestern Railway Company, approved October 1, 1890, all of which cross what is known as the Cherokee Outlet, the same being the land embraced in the contract ratified by this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 18. That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States courts created and established for the Indian Territory to hear, determine, and adjudicate all cases and claims which may arise in the respective judicial divisions or districts affecting or involving the rights of Indian citizenship in any Indian tribe or nation in the said Indian Territory, and which is or may be claimed under the provisions of any treaty between such tribe or nation and the United States, the constitution, acts of councils of said tribes or nations, and the usages, customs, and traditions of said tribes or nations, either by blood or marriage. All cases or claims prosecuted under the provisions of this jurisdiction as conferred shall be commenced by the claimant or claimants, or the principal chief of the tribe or nation in the said Indian Territory, filing in the said courts a petition or complaint setting out fully the title to the said claim, as the court may prescribe, which petition shall be by the court referred to the nearest commissioner in the said division or district in which the claimant or a majority of the claimants may be, in said Indian Territory, and the commissioner shall proceed to examine and take the testimony in said claim or claims, in the manner as the court shall prescribe and direct, and report the evidence and his findings to the court as soon as the investigation is closed, when the said case or claim shall be heard, determined, and adjudicated by the court. In all cases prosecuted under the provisions of this act, where the claimant or claimants shall file the petition or petitions, the defendant shall be the principal chief or governor of the tribe or nation of which the petitioner or petitioners claim to be a citizen, and the service of the summons shall be made on him, and all other proceedings had and taken like as in other cases made and provided.

In all cases prosecuted under the provisions of this act, where the principal chief shall file the petition or complaint that persons or claimants, naming them and describing them, are not citizens of the tribe or nation, and are unlawfully in the said Indian Territory, the said persons so named and described shall be the defendant or defendants, and service of the summons shall be made on such defendant or defendants as in like cases. All orders, judgments, and decrees of the court shall be executed and enforced by the United States marshal for the said Indian Territory. Appeals may be taken and writs of error prosecuted to the appellate and supreme court as in other cases made and provided.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the point will not be insisted upon. By referring to page 5 of this bill, it will be seen that the Cherokee Nation is given full and exclusive control of this matter of citizenship, which raises the question of jurisdiction——

Mr. PEEL. That is in the contract.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, it seems to me that that is a dangerous power to confer upon this Indian tribe, especially as there are a great many interests involved. There are already citizens who have located there and who have certain rights. No provision is made in this bill for compensating those people who are now settled there and recognized as Cherokees, so that when they are removed by order of this council they will lose everything. I think that is too dangerous a power to put in the hands of this Indian tribe without any right of appeal, and I trust the point of order will not be insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the matter of the amendment seems to be entirely foreign to the matter under consideration, and the Chair is of opinion that it is not germane as an amendment.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BYNUM. Before the gentleman makes that motion I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask the gentleman to withhold his motion for a moment.

Mr. PEEL. Very well; I will do that.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to ask unanimous consent to return to section 9 in order to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] asks unanimous consent to recur to section 9. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, section 9, in line 3, after the word "land," insert the words "and residing thereon at least ninety days."

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the object of that amendment?

Mr. BRYAN. The object of this is simply to protect the settlers against speculators.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BRYAN. I demand a division.

Mr. PEEL. I hope the gentleman will not delay the passage of the bill by demanding a division.

Mr. BRYAN. Then I will withdraw the demand.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BYNUM. Before that is done, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PEEL. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BYNUM. What provision is contained in this bill that will determine who are intruders, when the Government is asked to remove them?

Mr. PEEL. There is nothing in the bill about that.

Mr. BYNUM. Is there anything in the treaty that will determine that matter?

Mr. PEEL. It just reaffirms two or three treaties existing heretofore.

Mr. BYNUM. But we agree to go there and remove intruders?

Mr. PICKLER. The Indians settle that question themselves.

Mr. PEEL. The Indians settle that question themselves, as they have the right now to do, and have always had.

Mr. BYNUM. So that whatever persons they call upon us to remove, the Government has simply to go and drive them out, whether they have any rights or not?

Mr. PEEL. It leaves the law just as it is now.

Mr. HARVEY. We assume no new obligations in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly arose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TARSNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9190) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee Nation of Indians, of the Indian Territory, to make appropriations for carrying out the same, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

Mr. PEEL. I move the previous question upon the adoption of the amendment and the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Unless a separate vote is desired on some of the amendments, the Chair will submit them as a whole.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PEEL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 16, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. STONE of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, in lieu of the bill H. R. 8329, the bill (H. R. 10192) for the relief of Mrs. Catherine Dudley (Report No. 2250); which was delivered to the Clerk, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills; which were re-referred as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 16, 1893.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury relating to the Department letter addressed to the President of the Senate on the 9th instant reporting the facts and legal status of the case of the condemnation proceedings for the acquisition of the property selected as a site for the United States custom-house building in the city and State of New York, transmitting supplemental letters, and requesting that Congress take action in the case as speedily as possible; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a report from Maj. E. M. Coates, Nineteenth Infantry, on the condition of the Mackinac National Park, for the year ending December 31, 1892; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILROAD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railroad Company of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in compliance with law, a report of the names of all the stockholders, the amount of stock held by each, with a statement of the receipts and disbursements of the company for the year ending December 31, 1892; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of citizens of Belfast, Me., praying for the passage of legislation enabling female citizens of the United States to vote for members of the House of Representatives; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT presented a memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Washington, D.C., remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. QUAY presented memorials of the Pisgah Presbyterian Congregation of Corsica; of the Presbyterian Church of Bangor; of 44 individual citizens of Jersey Shore; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Brookville, and of 84 individual citizens of Claysville, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the repeal of the present law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. WILSON presented memorials of the First Baptist Church of Newton; of the People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Belle Plaine; of the Presbyterian churches of Sydney and Anderson; of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of Council Bluffs; of the Reformed Church of Alton; of the First Baptist Church of Grundy Center; of the Congregational Church of Tabor; of the Prospect Park Methodist Church of Des Moines; of the Congregational Church of Rainbeck; of a union meeting of the church members of Belle Plaine, and of a union meeting of the people of Red Oak, all in the State of Iowa, remonstrating against the repeal of the present law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the Republican and Democratic Territorial central committees of Arizona Territory, praying for the admission into the Union of Arizona as a State; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. PEFFER. I present the petition of C. G. Gest and other citizens of Rock Creek, Kans., praying for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors at the national soldiers' home at Leavenworth, in that State.

In this connection I desire to suggest to the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom this petition will be referred, that the people of Kansas quite generally take a great deal of interest in this matter. I am frequently in receipt of statements from reputable citizens of different parties and of different religious sects, and from persons making no pretension to either political or religious affiliations, demanding that Congress take some action upon this subject, and, as I shall show at some appropriate time, there is a general feeling in different parts of the country with reference to the same question applicable to military reservations all over the country. I wish the Committee on Military Affairs would take note of that fact. I also present a petition in reference to the same subject from other persons in the same locality. I move that both petitions be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PEFFER. I also present a series of resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Presbyterian Congregation of Peotone, Kans., which are in the nature of a memorial, in opposition to the change of the law passed at the last session requiring that the World's Fair be closed on Sunday.

I also present resolutions adopted by the United Presbyterian Church, of Lyndon, Kans., on the same subject.

I move that the memorials be referred to the Select Committee on the Quadro-Centennial.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of ministers of Worcester, Mass., praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PETTIGREW presented a memorial of members of the Junior Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the First Congregational Church of Allegan, Mich., remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. SAWYER presented a petition of the Association for the Advancement of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the immediate repeal of the so-called Sherman silver act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Boston (Mass.) Associated Board of Trade, favoring the recommendations of the Postmaster-General in regard to adding the telephone and telegraph to the postal system of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented resolutions adopted by the Kentucky State Nicaragua Canal Convention, held at Louisville, Ky., January 10, 1893, in the nature of a petition, praying for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, and that the same be placed under national control; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BERRY. I present a resolution adopted by the annual conference of the Arkansas Southern Methodist Church, which comprises a membership of 23,683 people, 103 traveling preachers, and 223 local preachers. The resolution approves the act of Congress passed at the last session closing the World's Fair on Sunday, and remonstrates against any repeal of that act.

I also present a petition of citizens of Boonsboro' Ark., praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday.

I move that the resolution and petition be referred to the Select Committee on the Quadro-Centennial.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE presented memorials of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and of the Young Men's Christian Association, of Mitchell, S. Dak., remonstrating against the repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. HARRIS presented a memorial of the Ministers' Association, of Clarksville, Tenn., and the memorial of David Strang, of Lincoln, Tenn., remonstrating against any repeal of the law closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition of citizens of the town of Rulo, Richardson County, Nebr., praying for the passage of a law to include certain lands within the State of Nebraska. The petition, I think, involves some question which will perhaps need to be passed upon by the Committee on the Judiciary, and while it may ultimately go to another committee, I move that, for the present, it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN presented a petition of the Journeymen Tailors' Union of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the passage of House bill 8535 limiting the free entry of wearing apparel of foreign manufacture; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Blue Earth County Alliance of Minnesota, praying for the passage of the Washburn-Hatch antioption bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Gen. Wesley Garrison, No. 58, Regular Army and Navy Union of the United States, of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the passage of legislation for the retirement of enlisted men of the Army after twenty-five years' service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the passage of legislation empowering the State Department to forward, free of charge to the sender, plate-books, catalogues, and samples, not to exceed 5 pounds in weight, to any consul of the United States in any part of the world, to be placed by them on exhibition for the benefit and information of interested visitors; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DOLPH presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Oregon, praying for an extension of time to settlers upon lands within the limits of the forfeited land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, in which to make final proof in all cases, to January 1, 1894; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE HOUSE, SALEM, OREGON, January 12, 1893.

Hon. J. N. DOLPH, or Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL, or Hon. BINGER HERMANN, Washington.

Senate joint resolution No. 2.

Whereas by act of Congress approved June 25, 1892, the time within which persons actually residing upon lands forfeited by act of Congress approved September 29, 1890, could make final proof, was extended to September 29, 1893, but as to persons who were not actually residing upon lands so forfeited the time for making such proof was limited to February 3, 1893; and

Whereas the greater portion of the lands in Oregon so forfeited are not actually resided upon, but were settled by persons now entitled to purchase the same, who are occupying adjoining tracts on which their principal improvements were made, and who are therefore, except in a technical sense, actual settlers upon such forfeited lands; and

Whereas by reason of an almost entire failure of crops from an unusual drought in 1892 over the territory in Oregon covered by such forfeiture, the persons so entitled to purchase are entirely without means so to do, and must therefore lose their rights and labor unless a further extension is granted; and

Whereas if the time be extended until January 1, 1894, these persons will have the proceeds of the coming year's crop out of which to meet such payment, and can then undoubtedly do so; and

Whereas we believe that under the circumstances these persons should be treated as actually residing upon such lands and have the same rights as those given to actual residents: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested and urged to make a special effort to secure the passage of an act by Congress extending the time to make final proof in all cases under the said forfeiture act to January 1, 1894; and

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to telegraph a copy of this resolution to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Adopted by the senate January 10, 1893; adopted by the house January 10, 1893.

C. SHERMAN, Chief Clerk.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3340) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ellery, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10007) to provide for lowering the height of a bridge proposed to be constructed across the Ohio River between Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Ky., by the Cincinnati and Covington Rapid Transit Bridge Company, to report it favorably, without amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Being satisfied that the bill just reported by the Senator from Missouri will produce no discussion, I ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the bill respects a bridge of considerable importance at the place named, and as I do not know the contents of it, I prefer that it shall go over until I can examine the nature of it. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar, and by to-morrow I shall be able to look at it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

SCHOOL LAND AT KITTERY, ME.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4844) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to school district numbered 12, of Kittery, Me., a portion of Fort McClary military reservation, in exchange for other land, to report it favorably without amendment, and from the same committee I report adversely Senate bill 3244, which is the same as the House bill.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the House bill be put upon its passage. It only provides for an exchange of land agreed to by the Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

After reading, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill (S. 3244) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to school district numbered 12, of of Kittery, Me., a portion of Fort McClary military reservation, in exchange for other land, will be indefinitely postponed.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. There was referred to the Committee on Printing the regular annual report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for 1892. I am directed by the committee to report it back with the recommendation that the usual number of the document be printed. I ask that that order be now made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

SENATE PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably, with certain amendments, a concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and I ask that it be now considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. HOAR, December 20, 1892, was read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound, in addition to the usual number, 3,100 copies of the compilation entitled "Senate Privileges and Elections" prepared by the Committee on Privileges and Elections under resolution of the Senate passed February 28, 1891, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 100 for the compiler.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is this a reprint of the former volume?

Mr. MANDERSON. I will explain the matter to the Senator from Missouri. There was printed some time ago a volume known as "Senate Election Cases," compiled by Mr. Taft, the efficient clerk of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The volume brought down all the election cases to the year 1885. Since that time there have been compiled the election cases from 1885 to date. These cases will be included in a new volume to be known as "Senate Election Cases," and to be volume 1 of a work to be known as "Senate Privileges and Elections," the second volume of which will be about the size of the first, and will be made up of questions decided by the Senate pertaining to the privileges of the Senate, akin to election cases.

This work has been prepared under the direction of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and particularly under the care of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. The Committee on Printing propose a slight increase of the number provided for in the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. The resolution provides for publishing both volumes?

Mr. MANDERSON. It provides for publishing both volumes, so that they will be uniform.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Committee on Printing will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "number," in line 3, insert "forty-six hundred" in lieu of "thirty-one hundred;" after the figures "1891," in line 5, insert "said work to be bound in two volumes, the first to contain all Senate election cases to date and the second to contain all matter pertaining to Senate privileges;" and in line 7, after the word "and" insert "three thousand" in lieu of "fifteen hundred;" so that the concurrent resolution, as amended, will read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound, in addition to the usual number, 4,600 copies of the compilation entitled "Senate Privileges and Elections," prepared by the Committee on Privileges and Elections under a resolution of the Senate passed February 28, 1891, said work to be bound in two volumes, the first to contain all Senate election cases to date and the second to contain all matter pertaining to Senate privileges, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 100 for the compiler.

Mr. COCKRELL. In a publication of this kind is it not necessary to adhere to the well understood and established rule of giving the other House two-thirds and the Senate taking one-third? Ought not the Senate to have a larger proportion of these volumes than the other House, as it is a matter which relates entirely to the Senate proceedings?

Mr. MANDERSON. Still the work seems to be one that is in much demand by members of the House of Representatives. The committee on consideration thought it best to adhere to the usual rule. Fifteen hundred copies for the Senate are all that were asked for by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, and it would seem that that number is enough for this body. When you come to distribute 3,000 copies among the more numerous branch of Congress there are not a great many for each member.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a rule, the number is a great deal more for the constituency of each member than double the number is for the constituency of a Senator in most of the States. I should think we ought to have a little larger proportion of these volumes. I think exact justice ought to be done to the other House in all such cases, but it looks to me as though we ought to have a larger proportion; and if the number were divided equally between the two Houses there would not be any discrimination against the House of Representatives.

Mr. MANDERSON. Under the method of distribution proposed it will be noted that a much larger number is to be distributed by each Senator than by each member of the House of Representatives. However, I have no objection to an increase in the number for the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not understand that that is to be the case.

Mr. MANDERSON. Fifteen hundred copies are to be distributed among the 88 members of the Senate, and there are but 3,000 copies to be distributed among the 350 or 360 members of the other House, including Delegates.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska or the Senator from Massachusetts if it is supposed that there is any general demand or demand at all throughout the country for a book such as this. It is a valuable book for the archives of the Senate, but I doubt very much whether we ought to print a large number with any idea of distribution. I do not think the country generally would feel any interest in such a work. I doubt whether the librarians of the country as a general rule would desire to have it.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not know what the experience of the Senator from Tennessee has been. I know that the work prepared by Mr. Taft, known as "Senate Election Cases," had a very large demand among the attorneys of the country. I had no difficulty in disposing of all the copies I could obtain when that work was first issued.

The number is not great, and if the Secretary will turn to the foot of the report he will find the cost stated. My recollection is that it is less than $2,000—about $1,900. It is not an expensive publication.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amount is $1,950.

Mr. MANDERSON. Less than $2,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall interpose no objection to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. There is a great demand in my part of the country for these books, not only by librarians who want to make their Congressional publications complete, but by students of history, students of law, and men in State Legislatures who have election cases pending where the parliamentary questions which have come up in the Senate on election matters and questions of the law of election are cited as pertinent and applicable. So about two years ago, when I wanted a single copy of Taft's Election Cases in my committee room, I obtained it with a good deal of difficulty.

Perhaps I may also state that the second volume will contain a great deal of very valuable matter with reference to the compensation of Senators, with reference to dealing with witnesses, the rules of the Senate for discipline over its members, the familiar question of the Vice-President's power under the Constitution in the absence of a rule of the Senate to exert any authority in the matter of order. There are fifty such questions which will occur to so eminent a parliamentarian as the Senator from Tennessee even if they do not occur to others, which, when the Senate wants to deal with them, and they come up very often unexpectedly, we must make a difficult search for through the Congressional debates in the volumes of the RECORD, the Globe, and so on. It will be very conveninent indeed for the Senate to have them all collected in this volume.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no doubt as to the value of the book. It is doubtless a valuable production. The only doubt in my mind was as to whether it is such a book as we would want to distribute generally to libraries and to the people. But the statement of the two Senators is perfectly satisfactory to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Committee on Printing.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 9190) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee Nation of Indians of the Indian Territory, to make appropriation for carrying out the same, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10189) relating to proof of citizenship of applicants for Indian war pensions under the act of Congress approved July 27, 1892.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 3725) authorizing the construction of a free bridge across the Arkansas River, connecting Little Rock and Argenta; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MANDERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3726) for the relief of Harrison Wager; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3727) to amend "An act authorizing the construction of a railway, street railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., and to extend the time for the completion of the bridge therein provided for; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3728) for the relief of the Blalock Wheat Growing Company of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3729) for the relief of the citizens of the city of Ouray, in the State of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3730) in amendment of the provisions of the Revised Statutes relative to national banks; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Failed National Banks.

Mr. SQUIRE introduced a bill (S. 3731) for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the coast defenses; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

HUDSON RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. McPHERSON submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2623) to authorize the New York and New Jersey Bridge Companies to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River between New York City and the State of New Jersey; which was ordered to be printed.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR KENNA.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the expenses incurred by the select committee appointed to take order for the funeral of the late Senator Kenna be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. VANCE subsequently reported the resolution from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PARIS EXPOSITION REPORTS.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in addition to the usual number, there shall be printed 5,000 extra copies of the reports of the Commissioners of the United States to the Paris Exposition of 1889, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of State.

MARITIME CANAL OF NICARAGUA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. WOLCOTT on the 14th instant was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be directed to inquire what sums, if any, have been expended by the Maratime Canal Company, the Nicaragua Canal Construction Company, or any company allied to either of said companies, in and about the construction of said canal or otherwise, with the items of said expenditure, since the accounts of expenditure heretofore rendered to said committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not see the Senator from Colorado in his place. The Committee on Foreign Relations would be very glad to execute the order of the Senate in this particular, and I hope the resolution will be passed.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9190) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee Nation of Indians, of the Indian Territory, to make appropriations for carrying out the same, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT. As a similar bill has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, I ask that the bill lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The bill (H. R. 10189) relating to proof of citizenship of applicants for Indian war pensions under the act of Congress approved July 27, 1892, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

NEW YORK INDIANS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 3407) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of certain New York Indians against the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The bill was read, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of the bill, and to learn how much is involved in it. I see that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who made the report, is present.

Mr. HISCOCK. The bill involves possibly $1,971,295.92. It is for the title of these Indians in certain lands which were assigned to them at the time of the order for their removal. The bill has the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some information in regard to it. It is one of the old matters, nearly half a century old.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the Senator who reported the bill to explain it.

Mr. PLATT. I had not thought that this measure was coming up at this time, and perhaps I may not be able to recall the facts at this moment; but the claim of the New York Indians to be compensated for certain lands which were given them in lieu of the lands which they had in New York was referred under the Bowman act to the Court of Claims in 1884. The Court of Claims found all the facts in relation to it and made a statement of the account, without pretending to determine whether legally the Indians were entitled to recover or not. But they found all the facts upon which they stated the account, and the statement of the account showed nearly $2,000,000. That finding of the Court of Claims came to Congress, and the Committee on Indian Affairs were asked to report a bill to pay that amount to the New York Indians with interest. We reported, however, that the Indians should have the right now to go to the Court of Claims upon the law, and indeed upon the fact. I will read the conclusion of the committee:

It will be observed that this finding was made under the so-called "Bowman act," and deals only with facts. Upon the facts as found questions of law arise as to whether the United States is liable for a money payment to the claimants; and, if so, the amount thereof. These questions, in the opinion of the committee, should be determined by a court where they can all be carefully considered and decided. The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the case.

The claimants demand interest on the value of their lands in Kansas, which were set apart for them with a view of their removal thereto, from 1843, or certainly from the year 1860, when the United States proclaimed the Kansas lands open to settlement. But in the judgment of the committee this case is not one in which interest should be allowed against the Government.

So we inserted in the bill that whatever finding there might be by the court, it should not include interest.

In 1838 the Government made a treaty with these Indians, then in New York, by which, in consideration of their giving up some lands in New York, other lands were to be given up to them in Wisconsin called the Green Bay lands. Afterwards, there having arisen some controversy with the Menomonee Indians, the Wisconsin lands being desired for settlement, the Government made another treaty with these Indians by which they gave up the Wisconsin lands in consideration that they should have 1,824,000 acres in Kansas. The Indians never went to the Kansas lands except a small body of them.

Mr. HISCOCK. But they gave up the New York lands.

Mr. PLATT. But they gave up the New York lands. When, however, Kansas was opened for settlement, settlers rushed in and occupied the lands. From that time to the present the New York Indians have been claiming payment.

Under some subsequent treaties, one band of these Indians, I think the Tuscaroras, were paid for their share in these lands at the rate of a dollar an acre. There were some subsequent treaties made by the Indians, which were not however ratified by Congress, because Congress, in 1871, said it would not make any more treaties with Indians. By these treaties some of the other bands were to be paid.

To my mind, the legal question which arises in this case, is whether by not removing to these lands the Indians did not forfeit them. They reply to that by saying that they were to remove within five years, but that the Government was to fix the time within which they should remove, which it failed to do, and consequently there can be no forfeiture. They urge that notwithstanding that claim might have been set up, the Government has since settled with one tribe and paid them at the rate of a dollar and a quarter an acre and made a treaty agreeing to pay others, but that treaty has not been ratified. The committee thought that if these Indians were entitled to be paid for these lands in law, they ought to be paid, but that the place to determine that was not here in Congress, but the Court of Claims, and I think the matter can be safely left to the Court of Claims to determine whether in law they are entitled to this payment or not.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator please tell me just what is submitted to the Court of Claims by this bill?

Mr. PLATT. I will read it:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims to hear and enter up judgment as if it had original jurisdiction of said case, the claim of the New York Indians, being those Indians who were parties to the treaty of Buffalo Creek, N. Y., on the 15th of January, 1838, against the United States, growing out of the alleged unexecuted stipulations of said treaty on the part of the United States. In the hearing and adjudication of said case said court may proceed upon the finding of facts already made, upon a reference of said claim to said court, filed on the 11th day of January, 1892, and transmitted to Congress by John Randolph, assistant clerk of said court, on the 16th day of January, 1892. Or said court may, if in its opinion justice so requires, take other testimony as to facts. But in any judgment it may render against the United States, in favor of said claimants, interest shall not be allowed.

The Indians say with great force that they surrendered their lands in New York, they being the original Six Nations, for other lands in Wisconsin and without any consideration, unless it was a small payment of $20,000 or some such sum; and then, at the request of the Government, they exchanged their lands in Wisconsin, so that the Government might have them settled upon and opened up, for lands in Kansas, and that they have never received in any way compensation for the surrender of their lands in New York.

I conceive that the only question against their recovery grows, first, out of the statute of limitations, and, second, out of the fact that they did not remove to the lands in Kansas. There is, however, force in their claim that the Government has got their lands in New York without compensation, and there is force in their claim that under the treaty of 1838 it was the duty of the Government to fix a time within which they should remove, but the Government never did it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M'GARRAHAN—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, a few days ago I gave notice that this morning, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, I should call up Senate joint resolution No. 96, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to limit the official tenure of the office of President to a single term.

I find this morning that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] expects to address the Senate upon another matter now pending. As it always affords me pleasure to avail myself of any opportunity to yield in any respect and in every respect to the venerable Senator from Vermont, and having conferred with him, it is the understanding that after he has completed his address, if the morning hour has not then expired, I shall have the floor, and if the Senator's address is not completed this morning during the morning hour, that I shall then call up the same joint resolution to-morrow morning and ask the Senate to indulge me while I submit a few remarks upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. I thank the Senator from Kansas for his courtesy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill referred to will be regarded as before the Senate if there be no objection. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1958) to submit to the Court of Private Land Claims, established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, this is a most extraordinary case, whether we consider the many years it has been forced upon the attention of Congress or its growth in importance, comparing the last bill with any other which the attorneys of Mr. McGarrahan have ever ventured to ask for. I hope the Senate will decide it fairly on its actual merits, although many of us might be excluded as jurors if the having previously expressed an opinion on the case were to operate as a disqualification. No one of us on the question presented can be suspected of arguing for any other purpose than the promotion of truth and of justice to both Mr. McGarrahan and the United States.

Being under obligations by our treaty with Mexico to recognize any grants of land previously lawfully made by Mexico in the territory ceded to us, the United States in 1851 appointed a board of three commissioners to act as a court, and with salaries of $6,000 each, and they were sent to California to investigate and determine all the private land claims that might be presented. A secretary skilled in the Spanish and English languages to act as interpreter, an agent learned in law to superintend the interests of the United States, a deputy marshal and five clerks were also provided to accompany this board. It would have been difficult to have created a more competent tribunal to hear and determine according to law and equity all questions relating to these land claims.

Gomez was in no hurry to present his claim to this tribunal, and did not present it until 1853, and it was rejected. If all the decisions of this board had been made final, I believe that neither the land claimants nor the United States would have suffered any injustice.

How is it that a claim which has met with so many rebuffs from the Supreme Court and from committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, from the Attorney-General, and finally from a Presidential veto, should still survive to claim the attention of this body? Of course it lives by the nitroglycerine prescriptions and the nunc pro tunc heroic remedies administered from time to time by the claim attorneys who hope to lawfully prosper from the increasing magnitude of the claim and which they hope to share. The case when lost in one House leaps over to the other. When the Committee on Public Lands sits down upon it, it revives long enough to be referred and squelched by a Committee on the Judiciary or by the Committee on Mines and Mining.

At length, if there is no excuse for referring such a claim as that of McGarrahan to any special committee, it may go to the Committee on Claims, the hardest worked committee and least thanked of any in the Senate. One member of a committee is usually assigned to the work of thorough examination of the case, and his report will nearly always be accepted. But the literature on file in relation to the Gomez-McGarrahan case would require for its mastery all the time of any member of Congress for an entire session of Congress. Very few Senators, except in isolated cases, ever have time to thoroughly investigate or to question reports made, and no one feels authorized to object because no examination has been made and because of trust and confidence reposed in the industry and fidelity of the committee.

This claim which passed the Senate at its last session, it has been stated, then attracted no attention and no debate, and passed without a yea-and-nay vote. With all the chances for a whole generation of changes from committee to committee, of changes of the members of committees as well as of the members of Congress, the Rancho Panoche Grande claim never got through both Houses of Congress until last year, and then got through the Senate in the way I have stated. As it appears to me, the only excuse Congress can offer for not further resisting the pertinacity of the continual coming of the claimant would be that of a young woman in the town where I live who married a worthless and rather tough fellow, but soon found out her mistake, and when asked by a friend how she came to do it, answered, "He was hanging round all the time and I married to get rid of him." We can be rid of the claimant, of course, by taking him into our bed and board.

Committees of Congress are generally subjected to the consideration of claims solely on the ex parte testimony offered by the claimants. Rarely do they exercise the privilege of asking for power to send for witnesses in rebuttal of any case presented or to impeach the testimony of witnesses living thousands of miles away. Therefore an adverse report on any claim, after a hearing of all that can be said in its favor, is rarely found to be contrary to justice and equity.

If Mexico had actually made a grant of land to Gomez our Government would be bound to recognize it, but the real trouble is a lack of all proof that an actual grant was ever made. All there appears to be is the begging request to the governor by Gomez, March 13, 1844, who represented that—

Desiring to devote myself to the interesting pursuit of agriculture, which is of such vital importance to this department, and which, as yet, is in its infancy, I pray your excellency to concede me in property the place known by the name of Panoche Grande, bounded on the north by Don Julian Ursua; on the south by Serrania (mountain range); on the east by the Villa de los Tulares, and on the west by Don Francisco Arias, which tract of land contains 3 square leagues, a little more or less, as shown by the map, which in due time I will present more correctly drawn than the one now presented.

In view of what I have set forth, I pray your excellency to be pleased to take my petition into consideration, in order that in this way I may obtain the means necessary for the support of my large family.

The petition of Gomez, who was so anxious to devote himself to the interesting pursuit of agriculture and thus to support his large family, was referred to some officer at San Juan, who reported "that the land is vacant, and that there is no reason why the petition should not be granted." This is all that appears on the Mexican records, and furnishes hardly a shadow of reason for claiming that the extraordinary grant was ever consummated. He asked for it but did not get it. It is not even mentioned in the Mexican general index of such grants; and it is most unlikely that even by accident it should there have been omitted, if it had ever been actually issued.

It does not appear that the further map, which Gomez promised should be furnished "in due time more correctly drawn," was ever received by the Mexican governor. Nor does it appear, while it was under the jurisdiction of Mexico, that Gomez ever occupied the land in the pursuit of agricultural or for any other purpose. Gomez was a clerk at Monterey in the office of the commissary department. Is it likely that this large grant would have been made at once to him by the governor as soon as it was asked for? He got about as near to it as the young man did to getting married when he asked a young woman if she was engaged, and she said, "No, and I don't intend to be." Oral testimony of a vague character was introduced to prove that somebody remembers to have seen a paper in the hands of Gomez many years ago which purported to be a grant from the Mexican governor; and another witness says he saw a paper in the hands of Gomez, which Gomez told him was such a grant to him.

This very meager testimony was offered to sustain a legal title to an immense tract of land, and to which the claimant had no other evidence in its support except that he had asked for it by a petition with an imperfect map. The Supreme Court, as it appears to me, very properly rejected all of such testimony. It would have been inadequate, certainly, in a suit for an ordinary personal debt of $10. If any oral testimony could supply the place of a public record, why did not Gomez obtain the affidavits of the Mexican governor and secretary claimed to have signed the grant? They could not have forgotten a grant of this importance and would wish to maintain it.

After the Americans got possession of Monterey Gomez says he left and joined the Mexican army, and when he came back the American officer refused to let him have any of his papers; but he says he got possession of his map to copy, and we have his word, for what it may be worth, that it was the original one presented with his petition to the Mexican governor. But he has no scrap of evidence to support the fact, save his own words, which, in such a case, can not be accepted. Is it likely that his petition and map would be preserved and that the grant itself should be destroyed?

In his petition of March 13, 1844, to the Mexican governor, Gomez asked for the concession "of the place known by the name of Panoche Grande, bounded on the north by John Julian, on the south by the Serrania (mountain range), on the east by the Valle de los Tulares, and on the west by the Don Francisco Arias, which tract contains 3 square leagues, a little more or less."

In his petition to the board of commissioners for the settlement of land claims in California, filed February, 1853, Gomez describes and bounds his claim as follows: "A certain tract of land called the Panoche Grande, of the extent of 4 square leagues, now lying and being in the county of San Joaquin, bounded as follows: On the south by the lands of Francisco Arias, on the north by the lands of Julian Ursua and the low hills, and on the west by the barren hills, as explained by the map hereto annexed.

It will be noticed that Gomez petitions for 4 square leagues of land to the board of commissioners, and only for 3 leagues, a little more or less, in his petition to the Mexican governor, and all but one of the boundaries set forth are so wholly different that they seem to swear at each other. So contradictory are these descriptions that it appears to me it would be insufficient as a basis for a claim of even a quarter section of land, and much less for 17,000 acres.

The description of the land has been a very elastic one, and made so as to cover, more or less, 11 square leagues or 4 square leagues or 3 square leagues, as circumstances might require, and described with remarkable variations of the boundaries, sometimes as in the northern district of California and sometimes in the southern district, but the title of Gomez to this princely heritage will appear much like the world-wide land grants once offered on an exceeding high mountain by a nameless personage.

Is it at all probable that Gomez would have made the gift of one-half of the many-leagued estate to his thrifty attorney, and then sell the other half to McGarrahan for the pitiful consideration of $1,100, if his inner consciousness had not continually proclaimed that it was a bottomless claim, or that the title was so lame and incomplete, or so fraudulent that it was sure to be exposed and defeat its further prosecution?

From the adverse decision of the board of commissioners an appeal was taken to the United States district court, where this Mr. Ord was not only the attorney for Gomez, having a deed of one-half of the property in dispute, but was the attorney also of the United States. This court reversed the judgment of the board of commissioners and awarded the title of the land to Gomez, Mr. Ord nothing loth; not even saying that he "would ne'er consent, consented still." While this case was hanging on the decision of the district court of California, the Secretary of the Interior, supposing the decision to be final, had the papers made out for a patent to Gomez, but they were not completed and recorded or ever delivered. So the Supreme Court decided. Meantime the proceedings of the district court of California and the district attorney were in due form brought into the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, which decided the whole case on its merits against Gomez, reversing the action of the district court of California and denouncing it as fraudulent.

The McGarrahan claim is an old stager with which I became somewhat familiar more than twenty-five years ago while a member of the House, and then became convinced that it was merely an adventurous speculative claim entirely destitute of any foundation, except that Mr. McGarrahan bought one-half of a ranch described as containing 3 leagues of land of uncertain boundaries, with an apocryphal map, and claimed to be owned by one Gomez, for which McGarrahan testifies that he paid Gomez $1,100, and obtained the other half, or 2 square leagues, from Mr. Ord, the attorney of Gomez, who had presented it to Ord, and who subsequently transferred it to McGarrahan rather than to be charged with one-half the expenses of prosecuting the claim. It was Gomez who was guilty of fraud in the inception of this claim and not Mr. McGarrahan, who appears to have estimated the speculation to sell or prosecute as worth $1,100.

Mr. McGarrahan knew when he bought one-half of this doubtful claim and got a deed of the other half from Mr. Ord that it was a subject in litigation. He got it at the risk of an inconsiderable sum as a speculation, and not as an innocent purchaser without knowledge that the United States insisted upon a paramount title and would not yield without a contest. If Gomez gave to McGarrahan a defective title, McGarrahan's legal remedy would be against Gomez, but he could then only recover the amount or the $1,100 he paid to Gomez. Ought the United States, if defeated in the attempt to maintain its own rights, to pay any larger sum?

Mr. McGarrahan had a suit of ejectment against the New Idria Mining Company, which the United States court decided against him. Not being able to show any legal title that would take away the lands or mines from that company, he is now claiming that the United States shall make his title good and also award and pay to him all of the profits which accrued for many years to the New Idria Mining Company upon the many millions of quicksilver produced. Thus the United States is to be made responsible for the defective title of Gomez and the unprosperous speculation of Mr. McGarrahan, and foot the bill at whatever cost. The United States are under no obligations to make the title of Mr. McGarrahan any better than it was when he took it.

Very soon after McGarrahan obtained the claim of Gomez, or in 1861, he put it into the hands of a corporation. A company was organized under the name of the Panoche Grande Quicksilver Company, and of course the claim was capitalized at whatever amount he pleased. Some of the stock of this company was distributed where it was supposed it would do the most good, and some of the names of the stockholders leaped to light, but the scandal was not so dense as that of the Panama Canal, and hurt the reputation of the company rather more than that of any other parties. Mr. McGarrahan calls this "a family arrangement," and says that the company ceased to exist in 1866, by the deeding the property back to him, but without the full consent of all the stockholders the deed of the officers of the company would be very defective and inoperative.

How much of this stock was sold and how much of it distributed as contingent fees or for services rendered or to be rendered, the record fails to show, although some names of Congressmen, as well as of many others, have been paraded. I wish, however, to declare that I do not believe any member of Congress was actually bribed or ever knew that a certificate of stock in the Panoche Grande Quicksilver Company had been issued in his name; but the officers of the company knew the fact and knew they were taking the initiatory step in very dirty work. The prostitutes may have been absent, but the Don Juans were present. Those who are curious to look at this record will find it in Miscellaneous Document, No. 85, second session Forty-fifth Congress.

In 1870 Mr. McGarrahan, with the aid of Simon Stevens and Frederick Franck, organized another corporation, again under the laws of New York, under the name of "The California Quicksilver Company," with a capital of $5,000,000, and a first mortgage of one million 7 per cent gold bonds, Mr. McGarrahan receiving for his title to the Panoche Grande three and one-half millions of stock and $500,000 of the bonds, while Stevens and Franck received $1,500,000. The speculation now assumes large proportions. It was equipped with all the machinery of a corporation, and with half a million dollars of the nominal stock unappropriated, and sufficient to keep the machinery lubricated.

I do not wish to assail the character of Mr. McGarrahan. He has exhibited great courage and persistency in pressing for many years his claim before Congress, whatever may be thought of his methods; and I have no doubt he has come to believe in its justice. Why, sir, the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who reported the vetoed bill, also believes in its justice; but a former Senator from Colorado [Mr. Chaffee] thought and voted otherwise. There have been several reports on this case, but a conspicuous one of January 15, 1879, by the Committee on Public Lands, was made by Senator McDonald of Indiana. The case was under consideration for nearly a year and Mr. Mc-

Garrahan was represented by five attorneys-at-law. The testimony, documentary and oral, was very voluminous. On such a question we have never had many Senators better equipped or who would be sooner trusted to render a decision than Senator McDonald. There was no phase of the question that was not examined. The unanimous report of this committee was as follows:

In conclusion the committee find:
First. That there was no patent from the United States to Vicente P. Gomez prepared and duly signed by the President, or his secretary acting for him, and complete in all its parts, excepting only the attesting signature of the Recorder of the General Land Office.
Second. That there was no grant made by Micheltorena, the Mexican governor of California, to Vicente P. Gomez, of the land known as the Rancho Panoche Grand.
That the memorialist is entitled to no further relief.

There was another and later report from the House Committee on the Judiciary, made March 28, 1884, by John Randolph Tucker, and is equally worthy of attention with that of the Senate by Mr. McDonald. Mr. Tucker is eminent in his profession and attracts attention now because it is generally reported that he will be selected on the 4th of March next by the incoming Administration as the best qualified gentleman in Virginia for the position of United States Attorney-General. All who know Mr. Tucker hope this report will prove true. It is needless to say, as Mr. Tucker is a sound lawyer, that his conclusions were adverse to Mr. McGarrahan.

The bill now under consideration, and which the President has returned without his approval, was from the Committee on the Judiciary, with a report made by the learned Senator from Colorado, who adopted the statement of facts and arguments presented by Mr. WILSON, now a member of this body, in a report made to the House of Representatives in the first session of the Fortieth Congress. But the Senator from Colorado did not see fit to copy the example furnished by Mr. WILSON so far as to adopt the remedy he proposed, which was that McGarrahan should have the privilege of buying from the United States the land embraced in the said grant at $1.25 per acre. The reason that the committee had for reporting in that form was to avoid the appearance of overruling the decision of the Supreme Court, while at the same time asserting the equities of McGarrahan in the premises.

It appears by the several hundred letters of Mr. McGarrahan to his partner, Mr. Frederick Franck, printed in the report of Senator McDonald, that the parties annually and actively enlisted in the support of the McGarrahan claim were very numerous, and evidently were a class of auxiliaries that do not render services without compensation, one of whom McGarrahan denounces as a "cormorant." He must have given some liens upon the Rancho Panoche Grande before and after it was placed as the property of either of the corporations, as heretofore mentioned, doubtless as contingent upon his success in the Supreme Court or before Congress. Franck was to have one-fourth part, Simon Stevens 6 per cent, and O. L. Shafter was offered, whether it was accepted or not, one twenty-fourth part.

Whether these liens have been canceled on the record or not, and whether both of the corporations once endowed with a legal title to the whole claim are now legally defunct, so that certificates of stock now outstanding are without validity, are questions that would become important if the vetoed bill should become a law. Then the United States would take the risk of giving the whole of the Rancho Panoche Grande to McGarrahan, while many other parties may have prior liens or shares, both legal and equitable, in the property. These parties would be entitled to relief from the United States as much as McGarrahan.

These four or five hundred letters of McGarrahan, addressed mainly to "My Dear Franck" and others, are more interesting than many volumes which have been copyrighted. For the purpose of showing the facility, ability, and unflinching skill of the beneficiary of the bill now before the Senate in all the fields of enterprise for promoting the success of a measure which provokes opposition, I will read a few extracts from these letters, and I will only add that I have read but a small number of the letters and do not know the extent of the riches the remainder may contain.

May 3, 1861, McGarrahan to Franck, speaking of the coming civil war:

What a pity that out of the impending ruin we can not succeed in plucking our fruit, and all I can say is that no effort of mine shall be left untried to accomplish it.

January 7, 1861:

Should Gardner be able to consummate the sale of the 2,000 shares for $6,000, cash as stated, I shall on my part interpose no objection. * * *
I don't think it would be any harm for you to mention this matter to Messina, and to tell him if they have not succeeded in getting permission from Chase to ship the goods as before mentioned, that I will bring Frank Blair's influence to bear upon him, upon condition of their taking the 1,000 shares as before stated. I have told Blair already that if this sale was made that I was willing to divide my portion of it with himself and Hickman. From the way in which he received it, I think there would not be much difficulty in my getting him to work on Chase provided the negotiations can be consummated.

January 15, 1861:

The office [of surveyor-general] is one of the most important and lucrative among the Federal appointments in the State. Salary, I believe, is $4,500 per annum, office rent and all expenses paid, and to which is to be added the pickings. It has also a large patronage at its disposal. I regret very much now that I was not myself a little "dyed in the wool." Had fortune favored me so much, and conferred the additional inestimable blessing of a little of the nasal twang instead of that hideous and barbarous Irish brogue, I might with every confidence be a prominent and acceptable candidate for the office; but that is impossible. I am an outcast and one of the proscribed.

March 27, 1861:

Then the vital question of money came up. No man could be had to go there from here for a less salary than about $3,000 per year, and it is presumed that the entire receipts of the office would not amount to $1,000 per year, if it will even come to that; and the broad fact stared us in the face, could we provide the difference if they procured the man. I told them that I would write to you on the matter, and advised that the appointment should at all events be made, and that if we could not make the arrrangements he could resign. Before I left the man was selected, Harry B. Edwards, and since our return here Judge Bates has been spoken to, and he will send his name to Lincoln, requesting that the appointment will be made at once.
Now, upon this point there is the most sacred confidence enjoined upon me, the necessity of which you will yourself readily see, for, I may say, the final safety of the case depends in a measure upon it. Edwards will carry out from here the necessary instructions how to act in the case when it comes up again in the district court, and if he only says on behalf of the Government, that he has no evidence to impeach the merits of the case and that he is satisfied with the decree as it at present stands, stand it must, untouched, in spite of Ogier's teeth and Gibb's to boot.

March 27, 1861:

It is this: He will get Judge Bates at the exclusive expense of the Government to commence a suit against all of our opponents for injunction to restrain the waste and an action for a million dollars against them for the spoliation and robbery of the property.

3d. That a district attorney for the southern district of our own choice shall be appointed. This is one of the most important steps of all, and one, I am sorry to say, is going to affect us in a monetary point of view, but it can not be dispensed with to insure the final success of the case.

April 16, 1861:

And the result is that he is to-day the surveyor-general for California, and one whom we can have the utmost reliance and confidence in.
The district attorney we could have had ere this and without one-quarter the trouble if Edwards would have consented to his name going before the President for the office; but this he objected to in toto, and declined under any circumstances having it done until Beale's appointment was known.

* * * * * * *

The papers and letter indorsing Edwards have been handed to Judge Satterlee by Hickman with the request that he will have them up before the President, asking that Dimmick's appointment be canceled, as he is a Democrat and unknown, and that Edwards be substituted instead. Satterlee promised to present the papers to-day, but with what prospect of success I am unable to say; should we fail in this, we will endeavor to get the Attorney-General to appoint a special agent, who will have control of both of the district attorneys.

April 18, 1861:

It is possible that this place may soon get too hot for me; if so, I shall beat a retreat, as I am scarcely patriotic enough to yet shoulder a musket.

May 3, 1861:

Dimmick, the new district attorney, has not, I believe, been appointed by the influence of our opponents.
Frank Blair told me before he left that he was only recommended by one man, and that man from either Indiana or Illinois, so that I think a direct and careful effort ought to be made to Shaffer and Hirsch to get possession of him, even if we have to give him a small interest with us.

July 21, 1861:

I am afraid to be too intrusive, for I fear it may inoperate what I have in hand.

November 18, 1861:

We both proceeded there and were received very cordially by him (McDougal), and remained for over four hours, steadily drinking whisky and wine with him and a Mr. Murray and a countryman of mine named Ryan, and a colonel, also. It is almost incredible, but nevertheless the fact, that during all that time Patch or I could not find an opportunity to introduce the subject, though that was the object of both our visits.

March 12, 1862:

I have talked again with Mr. Hickman on the resolution, and he says it is binding on us. What he advises is, that as it is not entered on the books that it be destroyed.

* * * * * * *

From this you will see the absolute necessity of having this done instantly.

* * * * * * *

I have looked over the resolution again since I wrote the foregoing, and it strictly prohibits any transfer of stock on the books of the company having a power of attorney attached, and it also prohibits expressly the president and secretary from signing any stock with power of attorney attached thereto, so that from this nothing can be done until it is destroyed or canceled, and a resolution explanatory of what the new stock is issued for passed.

There is another potential reason why this bill deserves, on the part of the Senate, a unanimous defeat. It has been drawn with consummate legal skill so as to make it sure that this new court shall receive as evidence what will compel the court to decide the case at every point in favor of the claimant. Everything there enumerated must be accepted as evidence, and can not be rejected, as it would be by a court not thus hampered. I do not believe there is a lawyer in the Senate who, upon examining this bill, will not say that it is a bill so constructed by its terms as to unduly favor McGarrahan, and to cut away all possibility of equal justice to the United States. Whether that was the intention or not, it is a fact.

I regard this claim as having originated after the United States obtained possession of the Territory by the fraud and trickery of Vincent P. Gomez; and this bill, I can not but feel, whether so intended or not, will be accounted as a deliberate insult to the Supreme Court, which has unanimously made five adverse decisions on the claim, and two of them after a full consideration on its merits.

The President withholds his assent to the bill because he believes, whether the beneficiary is entitled to any relief or not, that he is not entitled to the extraordinary measure of relief here proposed.

Consider this bill as we may, it must be admitted in the sober second thought of every Senator that this bill proposes to overrule and reverse the repeated decisions on the merits of the case by the Supreme Court of the United States—the court of last resort—and to hand it over to the inferior court of land claims with complete jurisdiction for a final decision without further appeal, and with such conditions as will bind this court to render a decision in favor of the claimant. It is in plain terms an exercise of the legislative power, through an inferior court, to set aside and annul the decisions of both of the other coördinate branches of the Government—the Judiciary and the Executive Departments.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, in pursuance of notice heretofore given, I ask that Senate joint resolution No. 96 may be now taken up.

Mr. WILSON. I do not desire to have the present order displaced. I wish to have an understanding that it shall be laid before the Senate to-morrow morning after the close of the formal morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent, as the Chair understands, that the bill known as the McGarrahan bill may be considered at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. PEFFER. I now ask that Senate joint resolution No. 96, to which I referred, be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 96) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to limit the office of President to one term for each incumbent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the joint resolution read?

Mr. PEFFER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution.

"ARTICLE —.

"No person shall hold the office of President of the United States more than one term."

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, on the 18th day of January, 1892, I had the honor to offer a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of the President by a direct vote of the people. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which then had under consideration several other resolutions relating to the same matter.

After a closer examination of the subject and upon further reflection, I came to believe that in order to attain the most good results from a popular election of the President, to throw about his great office all possible safeguards against the partisan zeal of friends and the intrigues and jealousies of enemies, it is necessary that its tenure be limited to one term.

I am encouraged in this belief by a review of the proceedings of the convention which framed the Constitution. In most of the original drafts submitted to the Federal Convention called to frame a constitution, is found a clause providing that the President shall hold office but one term. That view of the subject was taken by nearly all of the members of that memorable body when they assembled.

The same view was taken by many eminent statesmen after the electoral method of choosing a President had been tried and found defective. Thomas H. Benton, a Senator from Missouri, a man of great ability and force, gave to this subject much attention and in its study brought to bear the best efforts of a well stored and well trained mind. At the head of a select committee composed of himself, with Senators Macon and Van Buren, and Mr. Hugh L. White, of Tennessee, Mr. Findley of Pennsylvania, Mr. Dickerson of New Jersey, Mr. Holmes of Maine, Mr. Hayne of South Carolina, and Mr. R. M. Johnson of Kentucky, appointed to prepare a plan by means whereof the election of the President might be made more simple and brought closer to the voters, Mr. Benton, in 1828, submitted a draft which after twenty years longer observation and twenty years further study he again brought forward and urged in a powerful speech.

Referring to these things in his Thirty Years' View, the great Missourian says: "That to give full effect to his plan for bringing the Presidential election within the direct range of the people's votes the President's office ought to be limited to a single term."

These are the considerations which moved me to offer the resolution now before the Senate, and in its discussion I shall therefore take up first, the election of the President and second the limitation of his office to a single term. This will not only simplify the line of argument, but it will present a broader view of the subject and add force to the reasoning in favor of the limitation proposed in the pending resolution.

As indicating a plan of popular election of the President, I will ask the Secretary to read Senate joint resolution No. 32.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). In the absence of objection, the joint resolution referred to will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. R. 32) to amend the Constitution so as to elect the President and Vice-President by a direct vote of the people, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes a part of the Constitution.

That hereafter the President and Vice-President of the United States shall be chosen by the people of the respective States in the manner following: That on the first Tuesday of November, in the year 1896, and on the same day every fourth year thereafter, the citizens of each State, who possess the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislatures shall meet at an election and vote for a President and Vice-President of the United States, one of whom shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves. Such election shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot, as a caption thereto, may appear the name of the political party which the citizen voting the same may select, and in addition there may be printed or written upon such ballot a direction to the officers of election in the words following, to wit: "This ballot shall be first counted for the person named thereon for President and for Vice-President, and if such person fails to receive, within the United States, the highest number of votes for the office for which he is designated upon ballots having a like caption, then this ballot shall be counted for the person having said highest number of votes." The votes given at such election shall be counted and canvassed in accordance with said direction, and the officers of election shall certify the number of votes given for every person for President, and for every person for Vice-President, with the number of votes directed to be counted as herein provided, upon every class of ballots distinguished by their caption, to the canvassing board of each State, and the detailed canvass in every State shall be immediately certified by the governor thereof to each of the Senators in Congress from such State, and to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The Congress of the United States shall be in session on the third Monday of December, 1896, and on the same day every fourth year thereafter; and the President of the Senate, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, shall open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted. Congress shall ascertain first the number of votes given for every person upon ea h class of ballots having the same caption, and second, all other votes directed by the electors to be counted for the person having the highest number of votes thereon shall be counted for said person; and the person then having the highest number of votes for President shall be President, and the person having the highest number of votes for Vice-President shall be Vice-President.

No person shall be eligible for the office of President of the United States for more than two consecutive terms.

Mr. PEFFER. That, Mr. President, is the resolution referred to at the beginning of my remarks. It proposes a limitation of tenure to two consecutive terms; but, as I before stated, I am now satisfied that one term will be more in consonance with the reasons urged in favor of the proposed change and more in accord with popular feeling on the subject.

The object sought to be attained is that the individual votes of the people shall operate directly and with full force and effect in the election of the President of the United States. It is expected, of course, that the Vice-President, as long as his office is retained, shall be chosen under similar rules and regulations to those which are applied to the choosing of the President. It will not be necessary, therefore, for me to again refer to the election of the Vice-President.

Mr. President, this is a very good place for me to stop; and as the hour of 2 o'clock has nearly arrived, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow morning at the conclusion of the routine morning business I may be permitted to continue my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent of the Senate that he may be permitted to continue his remarks at the conclusion of the routine business to-morrow morning. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], before the commencement of the speech of the Senator from Kansas, asked unanimous consent that what is known as the McGarrahan bill might be considered to-morrow immediately after the routine business of the morning hour, and that stands as the order of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the Senate given unanimous consent to take up the McGarrahan bill immediately after the routine business to-morrow morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the conclusion of the routine business to-morrow morning.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that he give his notice for the day following.

Mr. PEFFER. I was not aware of the agreement to that effect. Then I give notice that on Wednesday morning, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask the privilege of resuming my remarks.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Kansas may be permitted to proceed now, if his speech will not take too much time.

Mr. WASHBURN. I must object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota objects.

Mr. HOAR. I do not believe the Senator on the floor will have any difficulty in arranging with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] that his remarks may be concluded before the taking up of the McGarrahan bill to-morrow morning, in spite of the unanimous consent. That is a courtesy which I supposed was always awarded.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose that would be true if the Senator from Iowa were here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas, as the Chair understands, asks, then, that to-morrow morning, after the conclusion of the routine morning business, he may be permitted to continue his remarks.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes.

R. L. JENNINGS.

Mr. MILLS. I ask consent of the Senator from Minnesota for five minutes for the consideration of Order of Business 1187, a private bill for the relief of R. L. Jennings, late postmaster at Marshal, Tex.

The reason why I ask for the consideration of the bill now is that the Department has informed us that a claim against Mr. Jennings would have to be sued on by the 31st of this month unless some action shall be in the mean time taken on the bill. The bill for his relief has passed the House of Representatives, and it has been unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It will only take a few minutes.

Mr. WASHBURN. If the bill does not lead to discussion and does not consume time, I shall not object unless the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], who is about to take the floor, shall object.

Mr. CALL. I do not object.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3676) for the relief of R. L. Jennings, late postmaster at Marshal, Tex.

Mr. MILLS. There is an amendment reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to strike out "seven hundred and ninety-nine dollars and thirteen cents," and insert "nine hundred and forty-seven dollars and three cents."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, after the words "sum of," it is proposed to strike out "seven hundred and ninety-nine dollars and thirteen cents," and insert "nine hundred and forty-seven dollars and three cents;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in the final settlement of the accounts of R. S. Jennings, late postmaster at Marshall, Tex., to credit the said Jennings with the sum of $947.03, being the amount remaining unpaid of a loss of the funds in said office by theft during the incumbency of said Jennings, and upon such credit being allowed the said Jennings and his bondsmen be, and they are hereby, released from any and all liability for said sum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the VICE-PRESIDENT was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SAWYER, Mr. MILLS, and Mr. IRBY were appointed.

DEALING IN OPTIONS AND FUTURES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7845) defining "options" and "futures," imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. VILAS.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, proper consideration of the pending bill requires that we should consider the present conditions and circumstances of the country. This is a period of vast combinations, embracing all the staple products of agriculture; it is a time of gigantic incorporated associations of private and public credits, holding in their grasp all the subjects of commerce, the avenues and means of transportation, the control of the public money, and rapidly acquiring the ownership of the soil of the country. These combinations largely control and direct the newspaper press of the country, and speak, or claim to speak, the opinion and will of the people.

These great associations, in the minuteness and extent of their power and in their control of men and of resources, equal the power and the operations of the Government. They are more powerful than the barons of old, who wrested their privileges from the crowned heads of Europe.

The tendency to monopoly; to consolidation; to the solidarity of interests is inevitable and seemingly overwhelming, and its heartless greed and oppressive methods increase every day. An instance of this is to be found in the present condition of things. In the midst of this extreme cold, in which the poorer people are giving their lives by hundreds and thousands for the want of the necessary comfort and warmth and fire, a combination increases the price of coal; and, although the supply is boundless, having already acquired the control of the coal fields of our own country, it is reaching out its hand to embrace the supply of the continent and seeks to pervert the bounties of nature to be the instruments of suffering, torture, and death.

This power, useful and promotive of enterprise when restrained by arbitrary law, if left unrestrained, controls the power of the Government; it manipulates the elections of the country; it controls and influences the legislators who choose Senators here; it speaks the will of the great corporations through the judicial tribunals of the country to a large extent; and it seems as if there was no power in this Government of ours to check and restrain its operations.

In this increase of the price of one of the great staples and one of the necessaries of life through commercial methods and the public economies which now prevail, we have an illustration of the necessity of some legislation hitherto unknown in the country; something more positive than the experience of legislation in the history of our country before this time has required. Let us consider it for a moment and see whether it does not require of those who represent the people some other method and some greater exercise of power than has hitherto been used.

The increase in the price of the great necessary staples of life strikes as deadly a blow at human life as does the murderer's dagger in his sleeping and innocent victim. The only difference is that the one inflicts death quickly and painlessly, the other not upon one victim, but upon hundreds and thousands in the painful tortures of famine and cold. The superstition of the Middle Ages inflicted death by torture and lingering pain to save the soul of the victim, but the avarice and greed of corporate monopoly, of commercial methods in our day, has revived it upon a larger scale and a wider field to accumulate fortunes and give luxury and power.

This power spares neither age, nor sex, nor race. It makes this free country of America the field of its largest exploits and its most successful operations. While despotic powers deal with it with an iron hand, our professedly free government allows it to crush out the life of the people for fear that we may trench upon the limitations of the Constitution and open the way for despotic power, but there is no despotism like monopoly; no cruelty like that of great combinations to control the great staples on which human life and comfort depends; no greed and cupidity so heartless and devouring as that of persons protected by the irresponsibility of great corporations; no immunity from wrong equal to that of corporate irresponsibility.

If as have been said in this debate the modern methods take up and distribute the sum of the vast products of agriculture with greater ease and expedition and less nominal cost than was done formerly with one-fourth of the quantity, it may also be said that they appropriate to those who control and direct them so large a part of the subjects of commerce as to leave the producers with comparatively nothing of the results of their labor. In their silent but sure influence they approach the famine which starves whole provinces and States, and the pestilence which slays its hundreds of thousands.

This bill represents the uprising of the people against these oppressive methods, and their determination to try at least some means for its control and restraint by law, and is the expression of the almost unanimous feeling of the people engaged in the production of the great staples of commerce and of life.

The means by which it proposes to reach the end of securing a just compensation to the producers is to limit contracts for the sale and delivery of agricultural products to the amount actually grown and produced, and to prohibit and prevent contracts for the fictitious sale and delivery of staple products in excess of the quantity actually produced; contracts which have no relation to either the possible or probable productions, no relation to or connection with actual commerce or exchange except as a means of depressing prices and depriving the producers in one State from receiving a fair and just compensation for their property in the markets of another, or in some foreign country.

Objection has been made that this proposed legislation is not embraced in the power to regulate interstate commerce; that if this power can be extended to a contract for future delivery in a State, so also it may be extended to everything which affects commerce, however minute, even to the removal of a gallon of water from the Mississippi. To this it may be well replied that laws must be reasonably interpreted, as is expressed in the maxim de minimis non curat lex, but outside of that let us see how this objection can stand the test of reason.

Suppose the citizens of a State shall devise some method by which the productions or people of any other State passing through it shall be compelled to pay toll or tribute for such passage, is there any doubt that it would be within the power to regulate commerce to provide that this device should be unlawful?

Suppose the citizens of New York should make a trust or combination and control all the dock and wharf property of New York and all the other maritime ports, and impose on all outgoing and incoming commerce a charge of one-fourth of its value for the use of these docks and wharves.

The purchase of this property might be lawful in New York, and the imposition of a reasonable charge for its use on all persons citizens of that or other States might be the use of their property for a lawful purpose, and would operate only on property within the State and subject to its laws, except in so far as this power to regulate commerce might affect and qualify it. Is there any doubt that the regulations of commerce would require Congress to prohibit and prevent this levy of a prohibitory tribute on interstate and foreign commerce? Again, do not the laws of Congress prohibiting trusts and combinations which affect the interstate commerce rest on precisely the same ground in all respects as this proposed legislation?

The bill prohibits fictitious contracts for the delivery of pproerty, with an understanding, either expressed or implied, that no delivery shall be made, but that the contract shall be discharged by the payment of the difference between the agreed price on the day of nominal delivery and the price fixed by the exchange.

The evils ought to be remedied is the arbitrary fixing of a price for products by exchanges less than the price which would otherwise obtain and thus limiting in the will and interest of the exchange and its members the portion of the products of their labors which the producers shall have from the commerce or exchange of their products between the States and with foreign countries.

This production inevitably passes into the interstate commerce and the foreign commerce, and if there be a power anywhere by which its price is affected and fixed in the interests of other than the producers or the citizens of other States, then it unquestionably deprives the producers of one State of their right to a fair and just market, and to the natural laws which regulate the price in other States.

The bill therefore proposes legislation regulating commerce between the States and with foreign countries. Senators find in the fact that a contract shall be made within a State for the payment of the difference between the agreed price of any product and the price fixed on the agreed day of delivery by a stock exchange or a board of trade a reason for exempting such a contract from the legislation of Congress and protecting it under the authority of the States and the limitations of the Federal Constitution, although such contracts regulate the commerce between the States and foreign countries and prescribe the portion of his labor which every producer in other States shall receive.

Senators think that such a contract as this having such an effect was intended to be sheltered and protected from the power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States and with foreign countries, and that an effort on the part of Congress to regulate it under the power to levy taxes and regulate commerce would be an invasion of the rightful authority of the States which would overthrow the fundamental distinctions between the States and the national authority.

That is to say, the contention of those who make this argument is that the sovereign power reserved to States over contracts made within a State is paramount to the sovereign power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States, and the power of the States over contracts made in the State shall be beyond the reach of the power given to Congress, although such contracts may regulate commerce and thus give not to a State but to individuals the power to annul the power of Congress.

The reasons given for this proposition are: The wisdon of the Federal Constitution and the sanctity of its obligation; the tendency of all power to consolidation; the decisions and opinions of the citizens, who have been and are judges, and constitute courts as to the rights and powers of the people and the proper methods of their exercise by their representatives in Congress, and the right of these tribunals to annul the exercise of the powers conferred upon Congress. It will be readily seen that these propositions do not reach the conclusion which has been stated.

No reason can be given why the power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States and with foreign countries should be excluded from operating on a contract within a State which affects injuriously commerce with other States and with foreign countries, nor why the regulation of such a contract would in any way interfere with the autonomy and just powers or rights of the States which have already conceded to Congress exclusive power over commerce between the States and with foreign countries.

The power of Congress is and must be plenary, exclusive, and absolute for the purposes for which it was intended and to the extent to which it has been given. This power over commerce between the States and with foreign countries is to regulate, not destroy; to control and remove all obstacles which destroy, limit, or interrupt it. If this be not so, then for what purpose was this power given to Congress, and can there be any reason and argument on a proposition that some reserved power to the States annuls, limits, and destroys its operation over those things which are necessary to the existence of commerce?

Why should not this power be construed beneficently and broadly? If it be a rightful power, a beneficent power, it should be used for the purpose for which it was given. Is it right, is it necessary, is it beneficent that there should be commerce between the States and with foreign countries? If it is, then this power should be exercised for that purpose, and if it be necessary that any one act or thing done within a State shall be prevented in order to enable this commerce to exist, then unquestionably any reasonable interpretation of the Constitution must include it within its purpose.

If the people and their representatives in the Senate and in the House are not a safe depository of this power, but a tribunal composed of nine persons holding office for life, and wholly irresponsible to the people, are a more safe depository of this power than are the people and their representatives, as the argument of Senators contends, then let us change the Constitution and place this power to regulate commerce in this life tribunal, and let the people and their representatives be excluded from its exercise.

This is the logical conclusion of the argument. Senators contend that the power to levy taxes can not be constitutionally exercised when no tax is levied. It has been said a tax is not a tax when there is no tax. This is true, but it does not follow that an exercise of the power to levy taxes by Congress is unconstitutional because the exercise of the power is fruitless in obtaining money or results. If this be true, then every exercise of a granted power is in violation of the power if it does not result in obtaining the ends for which it has been exercised, and which are declared to be the objects of the grant.

The Constitution gives Congress the power to decide what taxes shall be levied, and what shall be the subjects of taxation, and while it declares the ends for which the power shall be granted, viz, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and the general welfare, it confides the exercise of this power to the discretion of Congress, and it nowhere forbids Congress in the exercise of this power from regarding the incidental effects of the exercise of the power, nor does it anywhere provide that the exercise of this power by Congress shall become unlawful if it shall be unwisely or inefficaciously used.

Senators contend that the exercise by Congress of the power to levy taxes for a purpose other than that of obtaining money is without the authority of the Constitution and in violation of its provisions, and they maintain this proposition by the contention that the taxing power can not be used for a purpose violative of the Constitution and inimical to its spirit and to the partition of power between the States and the National Government. This is certainly true, but it is not less true of the power to levy taxes than it is of any and all other powers granted, as no power can lawfully be used to destroy the Constitution which creates it or to obliterate or annul other powers.

This statement answers the argument which seeks to avoid the reasoning of the justices of the Supreme Court affirming the lawfulness and rightful exercise by Congress of the power to impose a prohibitory tax to prevent the issue of bank notes by State banks, and the reasoning of the justices affirming the rightful exercise of the power to establish post-offices and post-roads, to destroy the Louisiana Lottery by prohibiting to it the use of the mails and by making it a crime. There can be no difference in the rules which regulate and limit or extend the exercise of any of the powers granted by the Constitution to Congress.

If it be a rightful exercise of power to use the power to establish post-offices and post-roads, not to establish offices and routes and promote communication by mails or telegraphs or money orders, but to suppress improper literature or gambling in lotteries within a State, or for any purpose outside the direct scope of the granted power, it is not because it is the power to establish post-offices and routes, or the power to create money and protect the notes and credits of the United States, but because the powers of Congress may be lawfully exercised for objects outside of the scope of the granted power, but for purposes within the spirit and objects of the Constitution and its express and implied powers.

There can be no difference between one and another power. The same reasons which justify in one case will justify and demand it in another.

The reasons for this proposition are, first, Congress is the sole depository of the power and its discretion the only guide; second, all powers granted in the Constitution are granted for the purpose of carrying into effect all the powers, either express or implied, and giving effect and efficiency to the scheme of government therein provided as a whole and not as a part, and for giving force and effect to each granted power, whether express or implied. All the powers, express or implied, are granted for the purpose of giving effect to the power of Congress to regulate commerce, to the power to establish post-roads and routes; to the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof; to the power to declare war and make peace, and to each of the powers of every kind.

All powers must be so exercised as to preserve not destroy each other.

Any other construction will make the Constitution a felo-de-se, with powers warring against and destructive of each other.

In our system of Government, the sovereign people, the electors, are represented by Congress, not by the Supreme Court nor by the President.

Here in this body, and in the House, the people have power over all other departments, and have reserved to themselves in the Congress which they make and unmake at will the power to judge and decide as to the execution of the laws and the performance of their duties by the other departments of the Government.

Senators declare that the argument against the bill is limited to the prohibition in this bill of legitimate contracts, or contracts made within a State for the actual delivery at some future time of property. No defense is made of gambling contracts for the fictitious delivery of property with a forfeit attached, and with the understanding that there should be no delivery but that the difference between the agreed price and the price fixed by the exchange or board of trade shall be paid as a forfeit.

In this we all agree, no one supports this bill or the substitute of the Senator from Mississippi, with the object of hindering or affecting contracts for the future actual delivery of property.

It is only necessary for the opponents of this legislation to point out the respects in which the proposed legislation affects contracts for the actual delivery of property not in excess of the quantity produced to eliminate these features from the bill.

The bill proposes to prevent the dealing in staples which have no existence and to limit contracts to the actual production of the great staples of the country. Certainly it can not reasonably be maintained that the prohibition of contracts for the fictitious purchase, sale, and delivery of property is a prohibition of contracts for the actual purchase and sale of property, and there can be no sale or purchase of that which does not exist and can not exist.

Whatever evil consequences shall follow this legislation must follow not from a prohibition of actual or real sales or actual or real deliveries of property, but from the prohibition of fictitious, unreal, pretended sales and deliveries. If the latter are wise and beneficial and promotive of commerce in real things and of fair and just exchange of commodities, then this bill and this proposed law is wrong and will be hurtful. If, on the contrary, such transactions are hurtful and destructive of commerce and fair exchange, then this bill is right and ought to be passed.

This bill must be tried by this consideration and not by that proposed by Senators in their argument of its unconstitutionality and its overthrow of the partitions of powers between the States and National Government. The proposition is that, admitting the existence for the argument's sake of a great public evil which threatens the social order and the existence of free government and republican institutions, an evil which establishes a privileged class and the dominance in our industrial and commercial system of an arbitrary power in the possession of private corporations composed of a few men who hold in their hands the control of the lines of transportation and the control of the money of the country, to fix and limit the share of his own labor which every producer and every person in all the States shall receive, by regulating commerce through the price of products and by creating an opinion which will regulate temporarily both the supply of and the demand for the great staples; that admitting this evil, there is not and there ought not to be any national power to deal with it; that the power of the separate and sovereign States is ample and easily moved to provide the remedy; that the Legislature of Illinois now in session can easily destroy the corporation which it has created and revoke and annul its powers, and so may the Legislatures of all the States.

This argument reaches to the whole scope and structure of the National Government, and if true, equally proves that each and all of the national powers could be better exercised by the separate States, and reaches the result of separate State sovereignty as a better form of government than that of the United States.

The proposition, if true, would relegate the Senator and all of us to the separate and sovereign States which send us here to say to them "You are mistaken; you can better exercise the powers which you have intrusted to us than we can in this assembly of States and this body, representing all the people; you and a life tribunal to judge of the motives which actuate your legislators and with power to annul your acts when they think it proper to say your motives were not what they purport to be in this legislation, or your acts were designed to have some other effect than the chief one for which this power was granted. This is the better form of government, and therefore we will refuse to exercise the powers which you have conferred upon us to destroy the things which are destructive of commerce and leave it to you in your separate and sovereign capacity to deal with each other.

This is not our scheme of Government. The people are sovereign and are represented through the States and the members of the House of Representatives, to whom the granted powers, whether express or implied, are intrusted.

It is the great dignity of this body and of the House of Representatives that it is the supreme legislative power, although coördinate with, yet in some respects paramount and sovereign to, all other departments of this Government, furnishing supplies for the execution of their duties or withholding them, impeaching and removing the judges of the Supreme Court, the President of the United States, and the heads of all the Executive Departments of the Government.

In these two bodies the people grant or withhold supplies necessary for the performance of their duties by the executive and judicial departments. Here the people impeach and remove justices of the Supreme and all other courts, and even the President and all inferior officers.

Through these two Houses the sovereign people speak in its laws. Here they preserve and defend the Constitution of the United States and the several rights of the States, and to their servants here who shall either fail to exercise the powers conferred upon them or exercise them unwisely or unfaithfully every two and six years' time they give either a judgment of approval or condemnation. Here in these two Houses, reflecting always the will of the people, is to be found the defense of the Constitution and of the States, and all the limitations of power.

Shall we find, then, any justification, when great combinations of corporate power shall seek to gather enormous wealth for themselves by regulating and controlling the foreign and interstate commerce of all the people of all the States so that the portion of every man's labor which he shall receive for himself and his family shall be diminished and the larger part taken as the share of the persons engaged in these corporate combinations, so that great wealth and luxury and power shall result to a few and great poverty and want shall come to the many, to the great body of the people—shall we find justification for refusing to exercise the power of regulating this commerce in all the products of labor between the States by prohibiting such combinations and the methods by which this result shall be reached?

Can we be faithful to the people if we fail to make such things unlawful?

Can we regulate commerce between the States if we allow the people in one or more States by any device or scheme to take the labor and property of the people of other States without just compensation, by obtaining power to regulate and fix the value of the subjects of commerce between the States and the share of these products which the people of other States shall have in the proceeds of their own labor?

Can our institutions of free government coexist with the existence and exercise of a power either of individuals or of corporations to make fictitious prices for the great staples of commerce—undervaluing them when in the hands of the producer and increasing their price when in the hands of the purchaser?

These questions and these considerations seem to me to be pertinent to this bill, and to furnish their own answer.

What is the evil complained of? The vast productions of sixty-five millions of people, constituting their means of subsistence and of procuring the comforts and enjoyments of life, require exchange with the people of the other States and with foreign countries. This exchange is commerce, and can not be confined within the limits of a State, nor of a country, nor bounded by State lines or national boundaries.

It of necessity finds its convenient places of distribution, and becomes properly laden with the just and necessary and reasonable charges of its transportation and of compensation to the persons whose services are required for its exchange.

How large a share of it is taken from the producer is shown in the luxury and lavish waste and vast buildings and enormous individual wealth of the great cities of the world in all previous time, and in the poverty and suffering and humble fortunes of the great mass of the people of every country, our own included.

If the extremes of great wealth in the few, and great poverty and suffering in the many, do not meet in the country as they do in the great cities, we still behold the producers in the country in the main of humble means, and with but a scanty share even of the things which their own labor produces. Superadded on this great structure of commerce and exchange, whose conditions have been made so onerous and oppressive to the great body of the producers, our times have found a new device, a device not needful or useful to commerce or exchange, not just to the producer, nor promotive of permanent production or of increasing commerce.

That device is the fixing of an arbitrary standard of prices on values in the first instance of purchase from the producer, by quotations of prices from the centers of exchange sent by telegram to every producer, the prices being made by an agreement between two persons that on a certain day one will deliver to the other a certain quantity of the staples of commerce and the other will pay a stipulated price, with the understanding that there shall be no delivery or sale of the thing agreed to be sold, but that on the day of delivery the seller or person agreeing to deliver the thing sold shall either pay to the buyer or receive from him the difference between the thing sold or the price agreed to be paid and the price fixed on that day in the exchange or corporation of the place of contract exchange.

We must consider carefully the effect of a transaction of this kind. How does it in any way affect the real price or value of a bag of cotton or a bushel of wheat that a contract shall be made between two persons that on the 1st day of February one will pay the other the difference between 10 cents a pound and the price at which the bag of cotton or the bushel of wheat shall be quoted in the exchange on the 1st day of February, one receiving the difference above 10 cents and the other the difference below 10 cents.

How will this transaction affect the price of the great bulk of cotton or wheat produced while it is in the possession of the producer?

This is what we wish to know; and in the clear determination and explanation of this transaction, and its relations and effects, will depend either the merits or demerits of this bill.

Let us then examine it very closely.

First, it is quite evident that if this transaction were made in a corner between two persons, and should not be known to anyone else, it would have no other effect than that one would lose and the other gain something.

Fifty millions of bales of cotton might be agreed to be bought and sold every day, or fifty billions of bushels of wheat, and if known to no one but these two persons it could have no relation to or influence upon either the supply of cotton or wheat, or the demand for it. It would be neither more nor less than a wager or bet between two persons in the form of an agreement to deliver cotton or wheat at a stipulated price, but with an understanding that no wheat or cotton should be delivered, but that a money forfeit should be paid by one to the other to be fixed by a third person.

If this shall not be done in a corner, what difference will there be then? What effect will be produced by publicity or quotations of this contract and this price, and this fact that A has agreed to buy from B 5,000,000 bags of cotton or bushels of wheat on a given day at a fixed price?

If the price offered for the future delivery is less than the price of the staple at the time of the contract, if it be true that the publicity of this fact—the quotation of it—will or may influence the price of this cotton or wheat in the hands of the producer, then it follows that if this quotation of this fact can be controlled it will be greatly to the interest of someone to control it and fix the price of the staple at such a rate as will allow them to make a profit out of it.

Who is interested in fixing the price of the great staples in the hands of the producers at the lowest price possible? It is not the producer, but must be any one who shall handle these staples or use them. All persons except the producer of an article are interested in getting these great staples out of the hands of the producer at the lowest possible rate.

If this system of quotation and exchange furnishes the means of fixing the price, and it is in the hands of those who are interested in fixing it at the lowest possible rate, then it seems to me that the merits of this bill are decided. If we are to say that this is a useful instrumentality of commerce because a man may make contracts for the delivery of a vast amount of property, and being uncertain whether he will realize anything by the arbitrary prices fixed by a third party he can, upon the other hand, buy on the other side and thus equalize the two transactions, if it be necessary to have this great cost, this fictitious method of bargaining in fictitious things as an adjunct of commerce, let there be established a gambling house, or a lottery, or some other method by which there may be an insurance given to contracts, but let it not be a method by which the price of the great staples shall be fixed for the producers throughout the world.

Now, Mr. President, we have ascertained that this system of quotations of prices at the great centers of exchange, less than the natural and prevailing price, whatever that may be, is possible. How can these quotations be controlled and made to speak the will of interested parties? It is evidently not by means of contracts for the actual sale and delivery of these great staples at some future time.

Such transactions must be limited to the actual supply and can not exceed it, and when they have embraced the entire supply and the exchange has been actually made, all the forces which influence demand and supply have been at work and the price fixed by them is the natural and legitimate one, although combinations between large dealers and the monopoly of money and extortionate charges of transportation have operated in fixing the price to the disadvantage of the producer. Still, under our existing system it is an actual and legitimate price unaffected by dealings in fictitious products, unaffected by fictitious transactions which represent only the opinion of one man that a staple will be more valuable at a future time, and on the other side the opinion of another man that it may be less valuable.

If at a great center of exchange, where the value of all staples is fixed by a system of contracts of fictitious sale and delivery in the future an opinion with all producers shall be made that prices will rule lower or in the decreasing scale, then we can see that those who are compelled to sell will take a lower price. The opinion having been created that the staple which they own will decrease in value, those who hold it and are obliged to sell will of necessity take a lower price.

We can also see that the constant tendency, effect, and purpose of a system of large fictitious sales for future fictitious delivery must have a depressing effect on natural prices.

There is a legitimate price for staples, the cost of production with a margin of profit to the producer and the cost of transportation and exchange with a margin of profit to those engaged in it.

This is the necessary margin of profit. Prices can not fall below this without the cessation of permanent production and all above it is the margin of speculative profit by middlemen and has no real or proper relation to reasonable and fair prices.

It is certainly legitimate and perhaps beneficial that this system of fixing prices by natural causes should be supplemented by the competition between buyers for speculative reasons; but unquestionably it ought not to be allowed that they shall be influenced in any way by the fictitious sale and purchase and the fictitious delivery of vast amounts of these staples not in existence, thus giving a power to great centralized organisms to create an opinion unfavorable to the value of these great staples while in the hands of the producer.

We will suppose that some men who speculate or deal in cotton are of the opinion that the supply of cotton will be very short, and the price rule high; other men are of the opinion that it will rule low.

The men who think cotton will rule high will agree to buy on future delivery, and the men who think it will rule low will agree to sell for future delivery, and if the opinions of all these men were fairly collected every day and sent out they would be nearly equal, and the producers in the country having cotton might properly say opinions are even and nothing can be seen from them as to the effect of these opinions on prices to-morrow. But the fact is that these reports of the sales for future delivery made in the great exchanges of the world must have an effect in fixing the price for both present and future actual delivery.

If I want to buy any staple for future use, and I find that the prevailing rate for future pretended delivery is a certain rate, I will not give a larger price than the prevailing rate for future delivery, especially when a powerful corporation guarantees the difference between the exchange price for future deliveries and the contract price, whatever it may be. Is not the contract price in the exchanges of the world for futures entirely within the control of combinations between the great operators on these boards and subject to be fixed by them arbitrarily and in their own interest, and with reference only to getting these staples out of the hands of the producer before the law of supply and demand shall have increased their value to the natural and legitimate price?

This seems to be the necessary, logical, and inevitable conclusion.

If it be true, if it be possible, if it be probable, it requires of intelligent legislation that all the power of intellect and research should be addressed to its prevention, for it means nothing more nor less than that a power to fix the value of each man's labor; and the amount that he shall receive for his compensation and for the support of his family is left to those whose interest it is to impoverish him, leaving him only the bare necessaries of life.

If this be true, let us inquire, then, how long can the producers stand a system in which a scant and insufficient share to support life of the proceeds of their own labor is assigned to them by an arbitrary power which appropriates the greater part to their own enormous enrichment?

The answer, Mr. President, is not difficult to find. It will only be until the conviction of the fact becomes general. Then their indignation will know no bounds, and may become dangerous to peace and good order unless wise legislation shall remedy the evil here and now. Under all conditions that have been heretofore devised the producer has been at a great disadvantage in the sale of his productions. The progress of poverty has kept pace with the discovery of labor-saving inventions and with the improvements in transportation and the new methods of sale and distribution.

The increase of corporate property and wealth has kept pace with the decrease of the individual ownership of land and property by the great body of the people.

Discontent, dissatisfaction, wild schemes of agrarian legislation and of socialistic systems, misleading the people, are the results of this impoverishment, this arbitrary diminution of the value of each man's labor, this taking from him for the enrichment of others under commercial processes and systems a larger share of his labor than is necessary for its just and proper exchange.

Vast burdens of debt have been created on the producers, and their creditors are the men who produce nothing, but handle the the results of their labors.

The lives of the great mass of the people grow harder every day. There is something wrong in our industrial economies. The people demand of us that we shall at least endeavor to find and remedy it.

Therefore, Mr. President, this legislation, however imperfect and tentative it may be, is in the line of the demand of the people and of public opinion. They believe, as I think, that it is progress in the industrial economy, in the line of the preservation of private property and of our existing institutions, that corporate power may exist and yet be subject to control and limitation. In my judgment, they are not to be deluded with the idea that the limitations of power in the Federal Constitution prevent the representatives of the States and the people from exercising such power and effecting such legislation as shall be adequate to their protection against any evils which threaten the destruction of the commerce of this country.

I, therefore, Mr. President, am in favor of the principle of the bill, and shall vote first for the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. PLATT. It occurs to me that the matter now under discussion is of sufficient importance so that at least an eighth or a tenth of the Senate should listen to the discussion. I suggest the want of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	George,	Mills,	Squire,
Berry,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Brice,	Gordon,	Peffer,	Stockbridge,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Pettigrew,	Vance,
Caffery,	Harris,	Platt,	Vest,
Call,	Higgins,	Power,	Vilas,
Chandler,	Hill,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Coke,	Hoar,	Quay,	Washburn,
Dixon,	Hunton,	Ransom,	White,
Dolph,	Jones, Ark.	Sawyer,	Wilson.
Dubois,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Gallinger,	McPherson,	Shoup,

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is detained at home by sickness.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is detained from the Senate by sickness.

Mr. CALL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. PASCO] is detained from the Senate on business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 15, after the word "thereof," insert:

And does not in good faith intend to purchase and deliver the articles contracted to be sold and delivered according to the terms and requirements of such contract.

So as to read:

That for the purposes of this act the word "futures" shall be understood to mean any contract or agreement whereby a party contracts or agrees to sell and deliver to another or others at a future time, or within a designated period, any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act, when at the time of making such contract or agreement the party so contracting or agreeing to sell and make such delivery, or the party for whom he acts as agent, broker, or employé in making such contract or agreement, is not the owner of the article or articles so contracted or agreed to be sold and delivered, or has not theretofore acquired by purchase and is not then entitled to the right to the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner thereof and does not in good faith intend to purchase and deliver the articles contracted to be sold and delivered according to the terms and requirements of such contract.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, in the course of the remarks of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] the other day I submitted a question as to the operation of this bill unless the amendment be adopted. I now desire to restate that question in as few words as I can, in a plain, business way, because I conceive that the bill without the amendment will be a bill of pains and penalties against cotton farmers in the Southern country. I think I can demonstrate that in a very few words.

The testimony taken before the two committees establishes the fact indubitably that much the larger proportion of the crop in the Southern country is made by advances obtained from factors for that purpose. Formerly the factor who made the advance was generally a factor living in some center of trade. In the operation of the modern system the advance which is made to make the crop, as a usual rule, in consequence of the great subdivision of land, is made by merchants in the interior towns. Their capital not being adequate to make this advance themselves, the usual form of contract which they make is a contract by which the merchant in the interior town agrees to advance a given sum of money to the cotton-raiser to enable him to make his crop, stipulating that for a given unit of money advanced a given quantity of cotton shall be shipped to the merchant.

The result of the system is that the money with which the crop is made is obtained immediately by the planter from the interior town, but the money which the merchant in the interior town advances is obtained from a money center. In other words, not having the capital himself to carry on the business, he obtains the money from a money center. Now, how does he obtain it? He takes his contracts. He produces those contracts and he says, "Here I have contracts to advance $30,000, and as an equivalent of that $30,000 I am to get what? So many bales of cotton. I wish to borrow the money from you to make this advance." That is the usual and customary form in which cotton is raised in the Southern country. I think there is no misapprehension or mistake about that.

Now, how is the money obtained? When the merchant from the interior town comes in with his contract, the statement is made to him, "I will advance you this money, but the only security outside of your credit that I have is the cotton, and the price the cotton is to sell for becomes a question which I must determine before I can make the advance. If you will allow me to determine that question now, and sell for future delivery at a market which is satisfactory to me so as to insure the price I am to get for the cotton, I will make you the advance." There is not a bank in the Southern country to-day that advances money to the larger factors which has not back of the loans these contracts with the price of the property guaranteed by the sale at the time the contracts are made.

Now, what does this bill provide? The bill does not allow the merchant to sell. That is perfectly plain. The merchant will not be able under the bill to do it. But who under the bill will be able to do it? The farmer. Under this bill the farmer can sell his crop growing and in process of being made.

Therefore the inevitable operation of the bill will be that when the farmer presents himself to get the advance the answer will be, "I can advance you the money, but I can not obtain the money. I am placed in a position where I can sell under the future system in order to guarantee a price which warrants me. I will make you the advance provided you transfer to me your right to sell your crop." This bill allows that.

So the inevitable operation of this section of the bill, unless you put this amendment in it, will be to take from every farmer in the Southern country who goes to borrow $1 to raise a crop the right to sell that crop at the time of the making of the contract. Therefore, this is a bill to force all the farmers of the Southern country, who are not rich but are poor, to sell their crop while the seed is in the ground and before the germination has taken place, and thus to force them against their will to become speculators in the sale of their crop at the very incipiency of the season.

I say this is as plain to me as that two and two make four, and if you pass the bill without allowing the person who has the bona fide intention to purchase and deliver, the necessary operation of the bill will be to force every cotton farmer who has not the money to make his own crop to become a speculator in that crop before the crop is out of the ground, and to dispose of his crop as part of the contract to obtain the necessary advance to make it. Such being the inevitable consequence of this bill unless you adopt that amendment, I beg that the amendment be seriously weighed before it shall be voted down.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. SANDERS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. DOLPH (when Mr. MITCHELL'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] is unavoidably detained from the Senate by an affliction in his family. I have been requested to procure a pair for him, but I have been unable to learn who is ordinarily paired with him and have been unable to do so upon this vote. If any Senator upon the other side of the question will pair with him, I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. HOAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I will cheerfully pair with the Senator's colleague.

Mr. DOLPH. My colleague is in favor of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; and I am opposed to it.

Mr. DOLPH. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is absent, and writes me that as the bill has been amended he is in favor of it. He requests me to obtain a pair for him. I have no doubt that he would vote against the pending amendment, and as I should vote for it, I will pair with him.

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] on the bill and all amendments.

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS]. If he were present I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] has announced a pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. WILSON. Although I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], I am advised if he were present he would vote "nay." I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER (when Mr. WOLCOTT'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is detained from the Senate by sickness. I will pair with my colleague. I should vote "nay," and if he were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DIXON. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is absent unpaired. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that he transfer his pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] to my colleague.

Mr. VEST. Very well; I vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], but I understand that if he were here he would vote "nay," and I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CARLISLE. I am paired on the bill and all amendments with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. SQUIRE. I announced my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], but I understand a different arrangement has been made, and that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is paired with that Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington correctly stands paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. SQUIRE. I should vote "nay" if I were not paired. However, my pair with the Senator from Virginia only applies to the main question.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. I have just voted, and I take the liberty of transferring my pair to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. CALL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. PASCO] is paired on this amendment with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. GORMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I notice his name is not recorded, and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—12.

Caffery,	Jones, Ark.	Palmer,	Vest,
Dixon,	McPherson,	Power,	Vilas,
Gibson,	Mills,	Stewart,	White.

NAYS—33.

Allison,	Dolph,	Kyle,	Stockbridge,
Berry,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Voorhees,
Call,	George,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Carey,	Gordon,	Peffer,	Washburn,
Chandler,	Hale,	Pugh,	Wilson.
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Quay,
Coke,	Higgins,	Ransom,
Dawes,	Hunton,	Sherman,

NOT VOTING—42.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Hoar,	Sanders,
Allen,	Davis,	Irby,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Jones, Nev.	Shoup,
Blodgett,	Felton,	Mitchell,	Squire,
Brice,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Butler,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Teller,
Cameron,	Gray,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Carlisle,	Harris,	Perkins,	Warren,
Casey,	Hawley,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.
Colquitt,	Hill,	Platt,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Proctor,

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], to strike out section 10 of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. Before the amendment of the Senator from Virginia is acted upon I will offer an amendment to which I think all will agree. I offer it to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 27, after the word "planter," insert:

Nor to any agreement to pay or deliver a part of the product of land as compensation for its use or as compensation for work or labor done or to be done on the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to offer another amendment. I shall not ask the vote of the Senate on it to-day, but call the attention of Senators to it. I move on page 22, in section 15, line 3, to strike out "September" and insert "July;" and in the same line, to strike out "1892" and insert "1893;" so as to have the bill take effect on the 1st day of July, 1893.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 15, line 3, after the words "day of," it is proposed to strike out "September," and insert "July" and in the same line, after the word "year," to strike out "1892" and insert "1893;" so as to read:

That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of July of the year A. D. 1893.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Senator from Minnesota why he offers that amendment to substitute "July" for "September"?

Mr. RANSOM. The bill now reads "September, 1892."

Mr. BUTLER. I think "September, 1893," ought to be substituted for "July, 1892."

Mr. WASHBURN. I propose to substitute "July, 1893," for "September, 1892."

Mr. BUTLER. "September, 1893," it ought to be.

Mr. WASHBURN. If there be no objection, I will ask for a vote on the amendment at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment heretofore offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. GEORGE. Have all the amendments which have been offered to the body of the bill been acted upon?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. All the amendments have been acted upon with the exception of the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], which is now pending. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 10 in the following words:

SEC. 10. Whenever any contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery of any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act shall be made, and the making thereof shall not be reported by the collector of internal revenue, as required by section 9, and it shall come to the knowledge of such collector, or he shall have reasonable cause to believe that the party by whom such contract or agreement was made as vendor was not, at the time of the making thereof, the owner of the article or articles which were the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contract or agreement, and had not then acquired, and was not then entitled to the right to the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner of such article or articles, it shall be the duty of such collector to require the party who shall have made such contract or agreement as vendor to forthwith furnish to such collector proof of such vendor's ownership, or right or title to the future possession of the article or articles so embraced in or covered by such contract or agreement, and said party shall thereupon make, and file with such collector, an affidavit stating by whom the said article or articles were owned at the time said contract or agreement was made, and, if affiant was not at that time such owner, whether at the time of making such contract or agreement affiant was entitled to the right to the future possession of said article or articles, and how such right was acquired. Such affidavit shall also state the warehouse, elevator, or other place where said article or articles are stored, or, if the same be then in the possession of a vessel, railroad, or other carrier for transportation, the name of such vessel, railroad, or carrier, and the number and date of each separate bill of lading or receipt issued by such vessel, railroad, or carrier thereof, and the amount or quantity of such article or articles called for by such bill of lading or receipt; and such affidavit shall further state the amount or quantity of other articles of the kind embraced in and covered by such contract or agreement which said affiant is then the owner of, or entitled to the possession of, and any and all contracts or agreements which affiant may have made, and which are then outstanding and remaining uncanceled, for the sale and future delivery of any such article or articles of such kind. And said party is further required, if demanded by such collector, to exhibit to the collector the original receipt of the warehouse or elevator where the aforesaid article or articles are then stored, or the bill of lading or receipt of the vessel, railroad, or other carrier having possession of said article or articles for transportation. And in case said party shall fail or refuse to make and file with the collector the said affidavit when so required, or shall fail or refuse to exhibit the said warehouse or elevator receipt or said bill of lading, when so demanded, such failure or refusal shall constitute and be deemed and held to be prima facie evidence that the contract or agreement so made by said party was a "futures" contract or agreement as described and defined in section 2 of this act, and said party shall thereupon become liable and be required to pay to said collector upon the article or articles which are the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contract or agreement, the amount or amounts of special taxes imposed and required by section 4 of this act to be paid for and upon an article or articles of the same kind when sold under any "futures" contract or agreement; and if when such contract was made the party making the same was not authorized, by a certificate issued to him under the provisions of section 5 of this act, to make "futures" contracts or agreements, then said party shall also become liable and be required to pay the further sum of $1,000 prescribed by said section 5 of this act as a license fee for conducting the business of dealer in "futures."

Mr. PALMER. I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. CARLISLE (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] on this bill and the amendments to it; but I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). Being informed that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], with whom I am paired, would, if present, vote "nay" on the amendment, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HOAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted on this amendment, not knowing at the time that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] expected that my pair with his colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] would continue through all the votes to-day. I now withdraw my vote.

Mr. TELLER. On the former vote I was paired with my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is detained from the Senate on account of sickness, but that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] on this question. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] on this bill and the amendments to it. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. CALL. I wish to state that the pair of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has been transferred to my colleague [Mr. PASCO]. If he were here my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], but I have the liberty to vote to make a quorum, and as my vote will not make any difference in the result I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Brice,	Hill,	Pugh,	White.
Caffery,	Jones, Ark.	Sawyer,
Dixon,	Mills,	Stewart,
Gibson,	Palmer,	Vest,

NAYS—32.

Allison,	Dawes,	Hunton,	Squire,
Berry,	Dubois,	Kyle,	Stockbridge,
Blackburn,	Felton,	McMillan,	Teller,
Call,	Frye,	Manderson,	Vance,
Carey,	Gallinger,	Peffer,	Voorhees,
Chandler,	George,	Power,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Gordon,	Quay,	Washburn,
Coke,	Hansbrough,	Sherman,	Wilson.

NOT VOTING—42.

Aldrich,	Cameron,	Daniel,	Gray,
Allen,	Carlisle,	Davis,	Hale,
Bate,	Casey,	Dolph,	Harris,
Blodgett,	Colquitt,	Faulkner,	Hawley,
Butler,	Cullom,	Gorman,	Higgins,

Hiscock,	Morgan,	Platt,	Turpie,
Hoar,	Morrill,	Proctor,	Vilas,
Irby,	Paddock,	Ransom,	Warren,
Jones, Nev.	Pasco,	Sanders,	Wolcott.
McPherson,	Perkins,	Shoup,
Mitchell,	Pettigrew,	Stanford.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. All of the amendments to perfect the bill having been disposed of, I offer an amendment to strike out all after section 3 of the bill, except the last section, which refers to the time when the bill is to go into operation, and insert in lieu of the part proposed to be stricken out that which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, beginning with section 4 to the close of section 14 of the bill, and insert:

SEC. 4. That "options" and "futures," as hereinbefore defined, are hereby declared to be obstructions to and restraints upon commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to be illegal and void; and if any person shall be a party, either as buyer or seller, to any contract or agreement hereinbefore defined as "options" or "futures" he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction therefor in either the proper district or circuit court of the United States shall be fined for every such offense in a sum not less than the whole sum paid or agreed to be paid or received or agreed to be received on any such contract, if the sum shall amount to as much as $1,000; but if the said sum shall not amount to $1,000 then he shall be fined $1,000 and in addition thereto shall be imprisoned for a period not less than one year nor more than five years; and every distinct contract shall constitute a separate offense of the seller and also of the buyer.

SEC. 5. That any merchant or other exchange, board, or other association in or through which "options" or "futures" or both shall be made, encouraged, settled, regulated, or adjusted are hereby declared to be unlawful combinations to obstruct commerce among the States and with foreign nations. And if it shall appear that any such board, association, or exchange has encouraged, regulated, adjusted, or promoted any such contract or settlement the said board, association, or exchange shall be subject to proceedings to be instituted in the circuit court of the United States by bill in equity, by which such action of such association or exchange, or by any member thereof, shall be enjoined. Such proceedings shall be commenced by the proper district attorney of the United States or the Attorney-General whenever there shall be reasonable ground to suspect that any such board, association, or exchange has violated this section. Such proceedings may also be instituted and maintained by any private person or persons, on leave of the court first had and obtained; and it shall be the duty of the court to grant such leave upon proof made by affidavit that there is reasonable ground to believe that any such board, association, or exchange has violated this section. In cases of such suits by a private party or parties the proceedings shall be in the name of the United States on the relation of such private party or parties. In case such proceedings are successful the court shall adjudge to the relator or relators full costs and also full attorney's fees for prosecuting such suit, together with reasonable compensation for his or their time spent and expenses incurred in and about said suit. But such suit at the relation of a private party shall be subject to the control of the district attorney or Attorney-General.

SEC. 6. That any person who shall, in the United States, by letter or telegram or other communication sent from the United States to any foreign country, or by an agent, resident in a foreign country, enter into any contract hereinbefore described as "options" or "futures," or who shall do any other act aiding and encouraging the making of such contract in any foreign country, or shall, in the United States, perform any such contract or pay any damages for nonperformance, or do any act in part performance of such contract or in part satisfaction of such damage, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be triable and punishable as provided for in section 4 of this act.

SEC. 7. That any contract herein defined as "options" or "futures," when made outside the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be held utterly null and void when attempted to be enforced in any court of the United States.

SEC. 8. That when any money or other valuable thing has been paid or delivered on any contract herein prohibited, or in satisfaction of any damages or any part of the damages claimed from a breach of any such contract, the title to such money or other valuable thing shall be held as not having been passed by such delivery or payment, and the same may be recovered back in the proper district or circuit court of the United States at the suit of the party making such delivery or payment, or by his legal representatives, if he be dead, and shall be subject to his creditors as his other property; and there shall be no defense against any such proceeding by a creditor to subject said money or property to his debt arising out of any transaction between the parties to such payment or delivery, except the actual and bona fide return of the money paid or thing delivered before such proceeding had been commenced.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, at the last session I expressed my opinion in regard to this bill, and directed my remarks principally to the measure as it came from the House of Representatives. I do not understand that there is any difference of opinion between the mover of the pending amendment and myself in regard to the palpable unconstitutionality of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. It is now sought by the commerce clause of the Constitution, as it is termed, to evade the constitutional argument against the measure as it came from the coördinate branch of Congress, and to invoke the police power under the commerce clause directly to do away with the evil which is denounced.

The Supreme Court in 116 United States Reports, in the Errol case, which has been frequently quoted here in debate, defines so clearly and distinctly the meaning of commerce among the States that it is not necessary to do more than refer to that lucid opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Bradley. The highest judicial tribunal in the country then declared—and I take it that no intelligent lawyer will for an instant doubt the correctness of the decision—that commerce among the States began from the time the goods or the products of a State or Territory were delivered to the agent of transportation to be carried to another State or Territory.

The point decided in that opinion, the leading case upon the question, is that when the goods or products were upon their way from the place of actual production to the depot or the pier or the wharf where the transit commenced they were still within the police power of the State and subject to taxation by the State or Territorial authorities, and that not until those goods or products were actually delivered to the boat or the railroad or other agent of transportation, to be carried outside of that territorial jurisdiction—not till then did the Federal authority commence. The language of the Supreme Court, which I quote exactly, is that until that time these goods or products are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the State.

How is it possible, if this be so, that the power to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign countries can attach to these products within the States? The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] affects a transaction in the State of Missouri as to a product of the soil of Missouri, between citizens of Missouri, and without any contemplation by either of the parties that the goods should ever pass out of the territorial limits of the State.

It is said that Congress has the exclusive power to declare what is an obstacle to commerce among the States and with foreign countries and that this power is above and beyond the construction of the Supreme Court of the United States and in itself perfect and absolute. Mr. President, if that be so, absolute power, then, exists in the Congress of the United States to declare, however monstrous and indefensible the proposition may be, that any practice or pursuit in any State of this Union is an obstacle to commerce, and the Supreme Court is inhibited from making inquiry and deciding upon the truth of that fact.

Is it possible that it is seriously contended now in the Senate of the United States that this absolute power upon the part of Congress is vested in this body by the Constitution?

In the case of the Loan Association vs. Topeka, in 20 Wallace, Mr. Justice Miller declared that nowhere in any Department of the United States Government was there vested unlimited power. This is a Government of limitation; it is a Government entirely antagonistic and antipathetic to absolutism. Our fathers in vain suffered to establish a free Government if now the doctrine is to be asserted successfully, that either in the executive, legislative, or judicial department is there absolute power or discretion without limitation.

If this doctrine now asserted be true, what is the monstrous conclusion? I belong to a party which has always held from the days of the old struggle between John Adams and Thomas Jefferson that this is a Government of limitations; that the powers granted to the States were vested entirely in the States, and those given by the States to the General Government were to be strictly but fairly construed. What is the monstrous conclusion if this new doctrine be correct? Congress may take from the States all the reserved police powers; Congress, if it can adopt this amendment, may declare properly that the retail of alcoholic liquors in any State is an obstacle to commerce; that opium joints constitute an obstacle to commerce; that ordinary gambling, such as faro banks and roulette and other devices, constitute an obstacle to commerce.

Mr. HOAR. And horse races.

Mr. VEST. If this be so, Congress may declare that all these diminish the absolute products of a State or community, and therefore diminish the volume of commerce among the States and with foreign countries. If such a bill, so monstrous and unconstitutional, should be presented to the Supreme Court of the United States, according to the doctrine now advanced that Court would be compelled to say that Congress had passed upon this question, and we can go no further in this inquiry.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the statement of the proposition is an absolute and irresistible refutation of it. The police powers, which every lawyer on both sides of this Chamber knows are reserved to the States, which not a delegate in the Federal Constitutional Convention of 1789 would ever have thought for one minute of giving to the Federal Government, are here, under the guise of protecting commerce among the States and with foreign countries, to be exercised by Congress in the States. If this doctrine be true, there are no rights in any State; Congress is supreme; Congress is absolute in its power. As a matter of course, if any individual or any State or Territory should put an obstacle in the way of commerce among the States, a physical obstacle or an obstacle in the nature of State or Territorial legislation, it would be unconstitutional, because an invasion of the jurisdiction given alone to the Congress of the United States to regulate commerce with foreign countries and among the States.

If an individual or an association of individuals should undertake by force to prevent the agencies of transportation from going from one State to another, as a matter of course that would be an obstacle to commerce among the States, and the whole power of the Federal Government could be used to remove it. If any State Legislature should endeavor to create an obstacle to commerce among the States by refusing the transit across the soil of that State of any legitimate subject of commerce the Supreme Court would at once declare that such act was unconstitutional and absolutely void.

In the Original-package cases, which we discussed so vehemently for so many days in this body, what was the point involved? The Supreme Court of the United States, through its Chief Justice, declared that no State had the right to refuse entrance into that State of alcholic stimulants, such as beer, wine, whiskies, and brandies, because those articles were legitimate subjects of commerce, recognized as such by the legislation of Congress, and made the subject of taxation to raise revenue by the General Government.

Therefore when the State of Iowa undertook to prohibit the entry into that State of these legitimate subjects of commerce in the original package, the Supreme Court of the United States declared that act to be void. But an intimation in that opinion to the effect that after the goods had come into the State they were subject to the police powers of the State was immediately taken advantage of by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] and a bill was passed by both Houses of Congress and approved by the President, which is now upon the statute book, immediately making the goods imported subject to the police power of the Commonwealth.

Suppose, however, that an act of Congress could be enacted which said, either in the guise of oppressive taxation or otherwise, that the retail liquor traffic should cease in the State of Iowa because it was an obstruction to commerce, what lawyer would say that the Supreme Court of the United States would not declare that act to be unconstitutional and void? Has not the Supreme Court of the United States over and over again exercised its power of judicial interpretation by declaring that acts of Congress and acts of State Legislatures, clothed in the garb of pretending to carry out certain grants of the Constitution, were simply police acts in disguise and unconstitutional and void.

I am amazed to know that any lawyer contends that the Supreme Court of the United States is not in all cases the judicial interpreter of last resort as to whether any act of Congress or any act of any State Legislature comes within the grant of the United States Constitution.

Mr. President, another branch of this question presents itself, which seems to me far inferior in importance. The Senator from Mississippi assumes and asserts vehemently that the evidence taken by the subcommittee, and communications from different individuals, show beyond doubt that the dealing in options and futures constitutes an obstacle to commerce and with foreign countries and among the States. I am not an expert in these transactions; I look upon them simply as I do upon other business transactions of the country, in the light of past experience. I understand the contention to be in every aspect of this argument that the effect of dealing in futures and options is to diminish the price to the producer. Without that argument the whole bill and the declared motives of its projectors must fall to the ground. We have heard here elaborate arguments to prove that dealings in futures and options diminished the price to the producer. That is the basis of this proposed legislation.

Let us take the case of cotton, and assume that "spot" cotton is selling at 5 cents a pound. Does not every intelligent man know that the result of that low price of cotton would be to increase commerce among the States and with foreign nations? Will not the spinner in old and New England buy more of the raw material which is necessary for manufacture when the price is 5 cents a pound than when it is 10 cents a pound? Is it not to his interest, when cotton is abnormally low and depressed in price, to buy more of it in order to retain it for the ultimate purposes of manufacture? Does not his capital go twice as far when cotton is worth 5 cents a pound as when it is worth 10 cents a pound? Assuming the proposition to be correct that futures and options lower the price of cotton, it follows, it seems to me, irresistibly and logically, that the low price of cotton, instead of being an obstacle to commerce among the States and with foreign nations, increases that commerce.

Take an article with which I am much more familiar, cattle. Let the cattle-raiser from Texas start with his cattle to the city in which I live, the great Western market for that commodity. He finds when he reaches his point of destination that the price of cattle has gone down. What does he do? Is not his first idea to go farther to a market where he can obtain more and where the time consumed in transit from one point to another will give the market an opportunity to rise again to its normal condition? Does the fact that the price of cattle has fallen in the Kansas City market present an obstacle to commerce among the States and with foreign countries? The experience of all cattle-raisers and cattle-dealers is that when the market is down in Kansas City, the man who has brought his cattle from Texas or the Indian Territory or New Mexico, is inclined, first, to try Chicago, then New York, and then perhaps the foreign market.

But let us look at practical experience since this bill has been pending in the Senate. Cotton has gone up in price, notwithstanding dealings in options and futures have not diminished in volume throughout the country. Wheat has gone up in price in the last few days, notwithstanding the fact that dealings in options and futures are still going on throughout the country. More than this, other products which are included within this bill as it came from the House of Representatives and as it stands now in the Senate have advanced almost beyond all precedent while this debate has been going on and while options and futures have been indulged in to the same extent which has obtained in this country for many years past.

Look at the price of hogs and pork. Hogs are worth to-day in the market more than they have been for many years, and they are still increasing in price. If dealings in options and futures puts down the price to the producer, how is it explained that, with this system upon us and before this great remedial legislation has been applied by its projectors, the producers of hogs, of cotton, of wheat, and of corn are receiving for their products in some instances more than they have for many months and in others for many years?

Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss this measure elaborately. I represent a great agricultural State. The walking delegate and the facile politician have persuaded the farmers of my State, as they have those elsewhere, that unless this bill becomes a law starvation and ruin must come upon them by reason of dealing in options and futures upon the boards of trade and in the merchant exchanges. I could not vote for this bill under any circumstances with my belief in regard to its unconstitutionality, but I undertake to say that it will not be eighteen months after it becomes a law until the deluded agriculturists of this country will be standing defiantly and sternly confronting the men who have pressed this Dead Sea fruit to their lips, with the inquiry, "Where are the increased prices which you promised us under your act of Congress?"

Eighteen months is a longer time than it will require for that consummation. The business of the country will be deranged; the great mechanism which has been built up, it may be from self-interest, it may be by unlawful combinations, but which still exists throughout this country, can not be torn to pieces by an act of Congress without putting down prices and without bringing loss in price to the people who produce the articles which are mentioned in this act.

But, Mr. President, in conclusion and above all, if I could vote for this bill I should give up all my ideas of the Constitution, all my conception of the meaning of the principles of the great party to which I belong; I should have to tear and obliterate from the pages of my memory the struggles that took place between Jefferson and his followers and John Adams and his followers over the powers of Congress, over the police powers of the States, over the meaning of the general-welfare clause of the Constitution.

If I had my choice to-day between taking the old Federal construction of the general welfare clause, under which Congress could do anything, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, I should take the Federal construction of the general welfare clause of the Constitution in preference to this, because there is some shadow of argument for the proposition that the general welfare clause is a substantive and distinct grant of power in the Federal Constitution. I do not believe so, and the party with which I have always acted does not so believe, but great men and great constitutional lawyers have so contended. When before in the history of the Senate of the United States, however, was it ever contended that under the power to remove obstacles from commerce among the States, the Federal authority could go within the territorial limits of any sovereign State in this Union and wrest from it all of its police powers and exercise them at will upon the ipse dixit of the Congress of the United States, unquestioned even by the Supreme Court.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I was not able to be in the Senate at the last session when the debate on this general measure went on. I have carefully read what has been said on both sides. If it were not for the great importance of the question I should be content to leave the debate where it now stands. But I think I ought to take a few minutes to state as briefly and as compactly as I may, not the argument, but the question, and to sum up my own objections to the measure in either form in which it has been presented.

It seems to me that this is the most important question of a constitutional character ever debated in the Senate, with the single exception of the question of the constitutional power to suppress resistance to the authority of the National Government when that resistance was made under the guise of the authority of a State. With the exception of that supreme question nothing can be so important as the claim which is now presented in either aspect in which it is made.

One party of the supporters of this measure claim that Congress has but to lay a tax and it can suppress every conceivable act which any citizen may desire to do, except, I suppose, the actual exercise of the instrumentalities of State authority. This class of supporters of this measure deny the power of Congress, as I understand it, to prohibit and punish the action at which this legislation is leveled. But they claim the power to tax it. The other, denying the power to impose a tax, claim that Congress has the right, if it choose to affirm, that any kind of business or any transaction known to mankind is an obstacle to anything which the national authority has a right to foster or encourage or regulate, and then may invoke the penalties of national legislation and prohibit the transaction against which they are leveled.

Mr. President, what is involved in this first claim? The simple assertion brings, it is unnecessary to say, within the control of Congress the whole penal code of the States. It brings within the control of Congress every social relation. The whole business of domestic commerce, every transaction of human life upon which the payment of a sum of money may be imposed as a condition, is, according to the claim of the honorable Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] and those who act with him, within the constitutional power of Congress to regulate or prohibit. If this claim be admitted, what a waste of time have been our great constitutional struggles; what a waste of ingenuity have been our great constitutional securities; what a waste of intellectual power the great judgments of Marshall and Taney and Bradley; what mock thunder have been the great debates in the Senate Chamber from the beginning of the Government!

Who cares to discuss, who cares to read, who cares to reflect upon the great and delicate questions which affect the boundary line between the authority of the State and the authority of the nation in this marvelous, complex system of government of which we are so proud, if it be true that Congress has a right to say in regard to any act proposed by an American citizen on American soil, "You shall perform that act only on the condition of paying a sum of money fixed by Congress into the Treasury of the United States"?

Mr. President, I do not think the ingenuity of my honorable friend from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] need to have been troubled very much by the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the original-package cases if all he had to propose to us was to say that every man who sold a glass of liquor hereafter should do it under the penalty of imprisonment unless he had first paid $1,000 into the Treasury of the United States, or that any man who drank a glass of liquor should do so on the condition of first having paid $1,000 into the Treasury of the United States, because the taxing power is unlimited. Is there one of the Ten Commandments for which Congress could not furnish an effectual vindication?

But, Mr. President, this is no tax. Calling this a tax is a pure and simple legislative fraud. No man can be courageous enough to stand up here and deny that proposition.

A tax is the taking the proportionate share of the property of the citizen for the purpose of expenditure for public objects. National tax is the taking such a share for the purpose of national expenditure, for national objects. The contrivers of this proposed legislation start by conceding that they do not expect, that they do not desire, under it to get from any citizen of the United States a dollar as a contribution to any national purpose, or to expend a dollar for any national purpose which shall be so raised, but that, on the contrary, every person who should avail himself (if it can be supposed by a miracle that such a person can be found) of the privilege to get this license to pay this sum of money is, just so far as he does it, defeating the operation of this measure.

It will be necessary, and the framers would propose, that if it should turn out that under the law any considerable revenue came to the National Government, instantly to come in here with supplementary legislation to stop that gap and remedy the imperfection of the measure, and make their penal process complete by some further legislation which should prevent the practice hereafter.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to interrupt the Senator and ask him if when Congress passed a law taxing the State bank circulation they expected to receive any money from that tax?

Mr. HOAR. I am coming to that a little later. I propose to answer that question before I get through.

Mr. President, the only attempt to support this proposition as it stands in the original measure is by the argument that the court will presume Congress is not lying, having a respect for this honorable coördinate and coequal department of the Government, and therefore it will be a very good plan for us to lie. Chief Justice Marshall, in Gibbons vs. Ogden, makes the definition of a tax which in substance I have quoted.

A tax is "the operation of taking small sums from a perpetually accumulating mass."

Mr. Cooley says:

A tax is the enforced proportional contribution of persons and property levied by the authority of the state for the support of the Government.

The power which is given by the Constitution to Congress on this subject settles this question.

Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises.

Was it ever heard before that those things were separable, and that it entered into the thought of the framers of the Constitution that Congress should have power to lay a tax which it never proposed, designed, or desired to collect, and that a tax could be laid not for the purpose of collection or for the purpose of revenue, but was so fixed designedly that nobody should ever be tempted to pay it, and so large that no United States officer should ever be able to collect it?

It seems to me clear, Mr. President, that Congress can have no power under this clause to lay a tax which it does not mean to collect, and the payment or collection of which would be to frustrate the very object for which the bill nominally providing the tax is passed.

It is not that there may be an income derived from a tax; it is that there may be a penalty for the doing of a certain act, that it is proper, if it be proper at all, to make this law. This is a criminal enactment proposed to suppress certain practices denounced, inveighed against, alleged to be criminal, and there is nothing else in it but subterfuge and evasion.

If it were a tax I hold it to be equally beyond the constitutional power of the National Legislature. I affirm, in the language of Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons vs. Ogden, in a sentence which I think has not been quoted in this discussion—if it has I have not heard it—

Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are in the exclusive province of the States. When, then, each government exercises the power of taxation, neither is exercising the power of the other.

I should like to know if there is an honorable Senator upon this floor who is prepared to rise in his place and deny this constitutional proposition of Chief Justice Marshall:

Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are in the exclusive province of the States. When, then, each government exercises the power of taxation, neither is exercising the power of the other.

I will respectfully give way to any Senator who will rise for the purpose of denying that legal proposition.

If it be true that a gambling contract made in a State to be performed in a State in relation to a subject of purely State domestic commerce be an offense which a State may rightfully and properly suppress, and which it is within the province of a State to suppress, the gentlemen who by their silence have admitted the authority of that declaration of the great Chief Justice, have admitted that they can not suppress it under the pretense or pretext of a tax, and that Chief Justice Marshall has said so.

Will any Senator rise here who favors the original bill—I do not now speak of the ground on which my honorable friend from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] puts the question; I am speaking now to the original measure—will any Senator rise here in his place and say that a collection of gentlemen or scoundrels, whichever they may choose to term them, gathering together in the city of New Orleans, saying that we will agree to buy a certain article raised on the plantations of Louisiana to be delivered within Louisiana by a Louisiana citizen at a certain price in the future, and we will make rules and regulations so that nobody who does not conform to the conditions of our association can come in and take part with us in these transactions, is not a matter which is lawfully and exclusively within the province of the State of Louisiana to control? The Senator from Mississippi has another view which he has stated with his accustomed vigor and force, and that I shall have something to say about in a few moments.

Mr. President, all this thing has been before the Supreme Court again and again. There is not a semblance of authority to the contrary either in the statement of any judge or in the comment of any text writer, unless by possibility it should be found in Judge Cooley's article in the Atlantic Monthly. Take Justice McLean's sentence in the Passenger Cases; and I go over this matter very rapidly indeed. He says:

All commercial action within the limits of a State, and which does not extend to any other State or foreign country, is exclusively under State regulation. Congress has no more power to control this than a State has to regulate commerce "with foreign nations and among the several States."

Yet he goes on to say, with the view of overthrowing conclusively the claim upon which this legislation is based:

And yet Congress may tax the property within a State, of every description, owned by its citizens, on the basis provided by the Constitution, the same as a State may tax it. But if Congress should impose a tonnage duty on vessels which ply within ports of the same State, or require such vessels to take out a license, or impose a tax on persons transported in them, the act would be unconstitutional and void.

You can not lay taxes to raise revenue except for a purpose for which you may constitutionally raise revenue. You can not lay taxes to promote or obstruct a particular object unless you have the constitutional power to promote or to obstruct that object. This question seems to me to be settled in principle in the case of The Loan Association vs. Topeka, in 20 Wallace. It will not be contended here, certainly it will not be contended by any of the statesmen on the other side of the Chamber, that the taxing power of the State is not as extensive, that it is not as sacred, and far more extensive than that of the United States; that the term "unlimited" is not as applicable to the power of the State within its sphere, in the broadest and most comprehensive sense of that word, as it is to Congress.

Yet the Supreme Court of the United States held that the Legislature of Kansas could not lawfully authorize the city of Topeka to lay a tax to pay a debt incurred to aid and encourage a certain branch of manufacture on the ground that that was not a public purpose, and so not within the constitutional power of the State, having legislative powers for public purposes and no other. How can you escape the conclusion that Congress, having legislative powers for certain national purposes and no other, can not lay a tax except for those national purposes and no other?

As I have said already, it is not pretended here that there is any purpose of raising any money by this bill to be expended for the national welfare. The sole object of this so-called tax is to punish what you have no right to punish and to prohibit what you have no right to prohibit. If a dollar could come from it into the national Treasury, it would just so far interfere with and obstruct the purpose of the proposed act.

Here is another authority from Alexander Hamilton, than whom no statesman in all our history took a broader and more liberal view of the extent of the constitutional powers of the National Government. He says that the powers of Congress to provide for the general welfare by the use of the taxing power extended only "so far as regards an application of public money." (Hamilton's Report 1791.)

As I just said, no authority can be found in the least in conflict with the position I have stated. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] in a colloquy with my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] the other day asked him what he had to say to a proposition of Judge Story in the nine hundred and seventy-first section of his treatise upon the Constitution. Judge Story expressly disclaimed indorsing that statement. He says in introducing it that he is giving the arguments which have been made popularly on one side and the other without adding any opinion at all of the commentator himself.

In the next place, if you are to take the language which Judge Story quotes, he is not at all speaking of the proposition with which we have to contend. He is only speaking there of the unlimited power of Congress to impose a tax for a purpose confessedly within the operation of the national powers of legislation and nothing more. I will add the section which the Senator from Minnesota referred to, without reading it at this late hour, in the notes of what I say in the RECORD.

SEC. 971. The third opinion is, as has been already stated, that the power is restricted to such specific objects as are contained in the other enumerated powers. Now, if revenue be not the sole and exclusive means of carrying into effect all these enumerated powers, the advocates of this doctrine must maintain, with those of the second opinion, that the power is not limited to purposes of revenue. No man will pretend to say that all those enumerated powers have no other objects or means to effectuate them than revenue. Revenue may be one mode, but it is not the sole mode. Take the power to "regulate commerce." Is it not clear from the whole history of nations that laying taxes is one of the most usual modes of regulating commerce? Is it not, in many cases, the best means of preventing foreign monopolies and mischievous commercial restrictions? In such cases, then, the power to lay taxes is confessedly not for revenue. If so, is not the argument irresistible that it is not limited to purposes of revenue? Take another power, the power to coin money and regulate its value, and that of foreign coin: might not a tax be laid on certain foreign coin for the purpose of carrying this into effect, by suppressing the circulation of such coin or regulating its value? Take the power to promote the progress of science and the useful arts: might not a tax be laid on foreigners and foreign inventions, in aid of this power, so as to suppress foreign competition or encourage domestic science and arts? Take another power, vital, in the estimation of many statesmen, to the security of a republic—the power to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia; may not a tax be laid on foreign arms to encourage the domestic manufacture of arms, so as to enhance our security and give uniformity to our organization and discipline? Take the power to declare war and its auxiliary powers; may not Congress, for the very object of providing for the effectual exercise of these powers and securing a permanent domestic manufacture and supply of powder, equipments, and other warlike apparatus, impose a prohibitory duty upon foreign articles of the same nature? If Congress may, in any or all of these cases, lay taxes, then, as revenue constitutes upon the very basis of the reasoning no object of the taxes, is it not clear that the enumerated powers require the power to lay taxes to be more extensively construed than for purposes of revenue? It would be no answer to say that the power of taxation, though in its nature only a power to raise revenue, may be resorted to as an implied power to carry into effect these enumerated powers in any effectual manner. That would be to contend that an express power to lay taxes is not coextensive with an implied power to lay taxes; that when the express power is given it means a power to raise revenue only; but when it is implied it no longer has any regard to this object. How, then, is a case to be dealt with of a mixed nature, where revenue is mixed up with other objects in the framing of the law?

Then in Veazie vs. Fenno, in 8 Wallace, which is the last hope of this constitutional argument, Chief Justice Chase answers the objection that the tax is excessive, and so excessive, not in fact as to destroy—that is not the argument which he is dealing with there—but as "to indicate a purpose to destroy," by saying first, that the power to tax may be exercised oppressively is not for the consideration of the court but of the people. That is, the mere fact that the tax bears heavily can not be considered by the court. Second, he says as the answer upon which the whole thing is finally disposed of, that Congress has the right to restrain the circulation as money of any notes not issued on its own authority. He does not intimate in that opinion for a moment that absolute destruction of the State banks would be rightful or even constitutional unless Congress possessed the direct authority to destroy them, but only that mere excess does not make the legislation void.

The court was dwelling in Veazie vs. Fenno with a statute which established a legal-tender currency under our admitted constitutional power. The tax was not only an incident, but it was an incident to a constitutional system established in the same act. In Veazie vs. Fenno also the interference which the act of Congress regulated or prohibited or suppressed by this tax with the national circulation upon the continued issue of the circulation of State banks was direct, immediate, and indisputable. The two things could not possibly exist together.

The continuance of a State bank circulation and the operation of the statute which was under consideration, establishing the national-banking system and a currency by that system for the whole people, which was under consideration in Veazie vs. Fenno, was absolutely impossible and impracticable if the State circulation were to go on, or at any rate if it were to go on without being put under such restraint and limitation that its volume was to be almost entirely suppressed. Therefore, Congress having a right to say, as it had the admitted right to say, from this hour the circulation of all State bank currency shall cease in this country, preferred only to say that it shall cease unless there may happen to be some extreme cases where a bank has made a contract or where some special exigency exists that if they choose to pay this large 10 per cent to the National Government they may continue and go on.

But it is said the power to tax is the power to destroy, and that Chief Justice Marshall said so. I should like to know if there is a Senator on this floor who seriously believes that proposition in any sense which would make it applicable to this bill? Does any Senator rise in his place here and say now, or will he to-morrow or the next day rise in his place and say, I believe that Congress has the constitutional power to destroy everything upon which we can constitutionally lay a tax?

Mr. WASHBURN. The Senator will remember what the court said in the Veazie case.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator from Minnesota say to that proposition?

Mr. WASHBURN. What is the Senator's proposition?

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator hold that we have under the national authority the constitutional power to destroy any transaction upon which we may lawfully put a tax?

Mr. WASHBURN. I believe we have the power to destroy a great wrong. I believe we had the power to destroy the State bank circulation; I believe we had the power to destroy the making of oleomargarine; I believe we have the power to destroy the lottery system, and I believe we have the power to destroy gambling in the food and agricultural products of this country. I think the Supreme Court holds that pretty distinctly in the Veazie case. The court says:

It is insisted, however, that the tax in the case before us is excessive, and so excessive as to indicate a purpose on the part of Congress to destroy the franchise of the bank and, is, therefore, beyond the constitutional power of Congress.

The first answer to this is that the judicial can not prescribe to the legislative departments of the Government limitations upon the exercise of its acknowledged powers. The power to tax may be exercised oppressively upon persons, but the responsibility of the Legislature is not to the courts but to the people by whom its members are elected.

So if a particular tax bears heavily upon a corporation or a class it can not for that reason only be pronounced unconstitutional.

Mr. HOAR. Does the court say there that Congress could destroy?

Mr. WASHBURN. It says that evidently the purpose of the tax was to destroy, as it evidently was.

Mr. HOAR. But it does not say the tax destroys.

Mr. WASHBURN. That was the purpose, and the court said that the tax was constitutional.

Mr. HOAR. What Chief Justice Chase says is, that somebody has argued that the tax is one so heavy that it indicates a purpose to destroy, and he replies we can not go into the purpose merely because the tax is heavy. That is all he says on that point, that he can not go into the purpose merely because the tax seemed a heavy one, and then he goes on to say that Congress had a right to establish a system of national currency and to suppress every State transaction, all the State bank issues which came in conflict with it.

Now, Mr. President, I come back to my question. Does the Senator from Minnesota say that we have a right to destroy anything that we have the right to tax? Let me put an illustration or two, and then I should like to hear the Senator in reply. We made a succession duty during the war, and I suppose nobody doubts its constitutionality. Have we a right to regulate the descent of real estate throughout the length and breadth of this country by declaring that any succession to an estate which goes in any other way than that which we prescribe shall be accompanied by paying into the Treasury of the United States a tax twice the amount of the property which descends? We made an income tax during the war. It was a good deal complained of, but its constitutionality was abundantly vindicated. Is my honorable friend quite ready to go with those gentlemen who think that no man in this country should have an income of over a thousand dollars a year and to provide for the destruction of the incomes beyond that amount by enacting that every dollar of income which any citizen or corporation receives over a thousand dollars a year shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as a tax?

Does the Senator think that we can regulate the marriage contracts of the States; that we can provide that a marriage with the deceased wife's sister, against which England and the English Church level their anathemas, can be suppressed by simply taxing every man who marries his deceased wife's sister $100,000 for the marriage? Now, I will listen to my honorable friend.

Mr. WASHBURN. Does the Senator think that could be done by a State? Would that be a proper subject of State legislation?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly it would.

Mr. WASHBURN. So far as the exercise of this power exists under the Constitution we have it, but it must always be used with wisdom, discretion, and justice. You can carry any proposition to such an extreme that it would become absurd and ridiculous. Any great power which this Government may have can be exercised in such a way that it would be absurd and wrong and absolutely improper.

But, answering the Senator from Massachusetts, I do not believe I can furnish him a better answer than is given by Judge Cooley, one of the greatest jurists of this country, when he discusses the suppression of the lottery. I believe that as near a parallel and as analogous a case as can be found.

Mr. HOAR. I do not yield for an argument.

Mr. WASHBURN. I am merely giving Judge Cooley's opinion as my own.

Mr. HOAR. I do not yield for that.

Mr. WASHBURN. It is, that the true way to deal with the suppression of the lottery, is in the exercise of the taxing power for the purpose of destruction. I believe in exercising the taxing power of this Government, not only for the destruction of the lottery, but for the destruction of a character of gambling, infinitely worse, more insidious and far reaching in its effects than the lottery or any system of gambling ever devised by the wit or ingenuity of man.

Mr. HOAR. The honorable Senator answers in substance then, first, by asking me whether the States would have unlimited constitutional power over this subject, and whether they can do a certain thing.

Mr. WASHBURN. They could do it, of course, but would it be proper?

Mr. HOAR. I am not talking about what is proper. I may be allowed to say that this is a confusion in the mind of my honorable friend from Minnesota. When I ask him what is the constitutional power to do something he gets up and says he wishes to destroy a very wicked thing in this world.

Suppose I should introduce a law for the punishment of adultery, or of theft, or of polygamy in the States, I think if I were as eloquent a man I could make quite as eloquent a denunciation of those crimes as my honorable friend makes of the crime of gambling, but I do not think it would help the Senate very much to determine the question whether we could directly suppress those things by legislation or whether we could indirectly and fradulently undertake to suppress them by taxing them. The answer is that the people who framed the Constitution did not mean when they put these checks and balances and limits and barricades and walls into the Constitution which they founded, that any man should have a right to jump over them because he said it is a very fit and proper thing to do it at a particular time.

I took an oath when I approached that desk that I would support the Constitution of the United States with all its checks and balances and prohibitions and limitations of power, and there was not anything said, and there was no mental reservation whatever, that I was to support it only in cases when I thought it was fit, and I did not think it was a fit and proper thing to do something else.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will ask the Senator if he does not think it makes a good deal of difference "whose bull is gored"?

Mr. HOAR. I do not think I shall be capable of understanding that question, and if my friend does not introduce it now I shall be much obliged to him.

Mr. WASHBURN. The Senator, I notice, has always been very willing to vote for a prohibitory tax against importation. For instance, he voted a tax of $2 a pound on leaf tobacco, which was in its nature prohibitory, and it was so intended.

Mr. PLATT. And which, Mr. President, if you will permit me, the Government has derived just about as much revenue on as it ever did under the old tax.

Mr. WASHBURN. That was entirely unexpected, as I am advised by a prominent member of the Finance Committee.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the point of my honorable friend's question, and I answer very decidedly that if I had not had the power under the Constitution to regulate the importation of leaf tobacco I should not have claimed the right to make a prohibitory tax upon it. If I had not supposed I had the power to prohibit absolutely under the clear constitutional power to regulate commerce the importation of any article upon which we put a duty, I should not for a moment have been warranted in voting for that law.

I concede (and that is the precise point of Veazie vs. Fenno) that when the Constitution gave us the power to tax and added, you may provide a uniform currency; if a convenient mode of providing a uniform currency is to make a prohibitory tax, we have a right to do it; and when we were authorized to regulate imports of foreign commerce and had the power to tax, if a convenient mode of regulating imports—of course it is expressly said in the Constitution we can not put a tax upon exports—we should have a right to put a prohibitory tax upon any import.

I am glad my honorable friend called my attention to that proposition, for it shows how the framers of the Constitution understood it. They said, you may regulate foreign commerce and may impose taxes and duties with the expectation that we might keep out any article of foreign manufacture that we thought competed injuriously to our people with our own; but being afraid that we might make a discrimination between the products of the different States in their access to foreign markets they added, "but you shall not put a tax upon exports," showing that they thought without that expression we might, in regulating foreign commerce, have taxed exports.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question, so that I may understand his position exactly?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the position of the Senator to be that a prohibitory tariff tax upon foreign imports does not come from the power to levy taxes under the Constitution——

Mr. HOAR. Not alone.

Mr GEORGE. But it comes from the power to regulate commerce. There is no difference between regulating commerce, whether it is in the way of imports or exports, except one, and that is the taxing power. We may tax imports, but we can not tax exports. Does the Senator wish to be understood as saying that it is within the competency of Congress to prohibit absolutely the exportation from this country in the way of foreign commerce of any article which Congress sees proper to expressly forbid shall be exported?

Mr. HOAR. Congress can not put a tax on exports.

Mr. GEORGE. Leaving out the tax, I ask whether Congress could absolutely prohibit without using the taxing power, because that is expressly prohibited in the Constitution? To make myself understood so that the Senator may answer me clearly, foreign commerce consists as well of exports as it does of imports. If the power to regulate commerce carries with it the power to prohibit absolutely, not in the shape of a tax, but to prohibit absolutely the importation of any article or class which Congress may see proper, does not the same provision also invest Congress with the power to prohibit the exportation of any article raised or manufactured in the United States, provided only it does not do it by a tax?

Mr. HOAR. I am inclined to think the Senator is right.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not assert that; I only asked a question.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, all my unwillingness to yield to Senators is because I want to get through in a very few minutes. It is said that the people are helpless in this matter; that the court will not go behind the form of the law which purports to be a tax, to look at the substance, which is to prohibit domestic contracts in the States. On the contrary, it seems to me that if there is any one doctrine imbedded in the Constitution of this country, any one authority which the court have exercised and will exercise, it is the authority to do this very thing, to go behind and unmask any legislative pretense, State or national, and look at its substance and not its form. Chief Justice Marshall settled that very early in the history of our jurisprudence. He says:

> Should Congress, under the pretext of executing its powers, pass laws for the accomplishment of objects not intrusted to the Government, it would become the painful duty of this tribunal to say that such an act was not the law of the land.

He does not say that if Congress avows a purpose to exceed its powers, but he says that if under the pretext of executing them it passes a law which in substance and effect is unconstitutional the court would interfere.

If there be one doctrine completely and inextricably imbedded in the jurisprudence of this country it is that the courts will look through the form and language of a statute to its design and effect; and that if its design and effect be beyond the powers of the legislature enacting it, whether national or State, it is void. This is especially true when such design and effect, however disguised, are sought to be accomplished by the use of the taxing power. Wherever the presumption may operate against the fact, wherever the deference due Congress or the State Legislature may constrain the court, there is one place where the court never is affected by either of these considerations, and that is when it is an attempt to take the money of the people or to use the taxing power for an unconstitutional purpose.

A tax on sales by auction is a familiar and lawful exercise of State authority, but when it was provided that an auctioneer should pay a tax on his sales of foreign goods it was held in Cook vs. Pennsylvania that it was in substance a tax on foreign goods and so a regulation of foreign commerce and void. So in the passenger cases, a tax on the masters of vessels for every passenger brought from a foreign port was held to be in substance a tax on the passengers and so void, though it pretended to be a tax on the master of a vessel for an exercise of his function, and so was unconstitutional.

So in Crandall vs. Nebraska, 6 Wallace, a tax on the business of railroads and stage coaches of $1 for every passenger carried through the State was held not to be a tax on the railroad or the stage coach as an excise upon its business, but to be in substance a tax on the passenger and so void. Suppose it had been so heavy that no passenger would pay it, so that no citizen of another State would pass through Nevada—a prohibition and not an excise—it would have been this case exactly.

My honorable friend from Minnesota is driven, as it seems to me, to one of three propositions. He has either got to deny all these constitutional affirmations of the Supreme Court or he has got to say that we may tax if we see fit the passengers of one State through another State to the third, or the entrance of passengers from abroad, under guise of an excise upon the carriers who bring them, or he has got to say what he has said, that we may do this when we think the thing is a thing that ought to be prohibited and is wrong, although we can not do it when we think the thing is a thing that ought not to be prohibited and is right. He is driven to say that the whole legislative barrier in regard to all subjects of legislation whatever which now preserves the State from the invasion of Congress is a matter which depends merely and solely on the discretion of Congress as to whether in their judgment the thing is evil and ought to be prohibited or whether they think it is a good thing and ought to be continued. There is no escape from this alternative.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks it would be legitimate to pass an act of Congress taxing the lottery system out of existence, as is suggested by Judge Cooley in his Atlantic Monthly article. Does he think that that would be proper legislation?

Mr. HOAR. I have not reflected enough upon that question to be able to answer it.

Mr. WASHBURN. In answer to the Senator's inquiry I will simply say that I would agree with Judge Cooley that there are certain cases where taxation for the purpose of destruction should be exercised. I think Judge Cooley is right when he says that it should be exercised for the suppression of lotteries, and I have the indorsement of one good man when I say I think it should be used for the suppression of the kind of gambling to to which I refer.

Mr. HOAR. If the Louisiana lottery be solely a State transaction then I differ from Judge Cooley; I do not think we have a right to deal with it. So far as it enters into foreign or interstate commerce we have a right to deal with it. I thought the Senator from Minnesota was himself a great constitutional and legal authority.

Mr. WASHBURN. I never made any such claim.

Mr. HOAR. And I thought him a great business man. It is he who is the Senator.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to correct the Senator. I never made any pretension to be a constitutional lawyer, but I do profess to having a little common sense.

Mr. HOAR. I was trying to find the common sense, if I could. The fact is, I supposed my honorable friend from Minnesota is the Senator from that State at this moment, and that it is he who is responsible; and when I ask him whether he maintains either of these three constitutional positions, one or the other of which he must maintain in order to justify himself in voting for this bill, he does not venture to say that he maintains either of them, but he only says that he agrees with Judge Cooley.

Mr. WASHBURN. Yes, who does assume——

Mr. HOAR. Then, when he answers upon the roll call the next time, I hope "Mr. Cooley" will be called, and not "Mr. WASHBURN." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the rights of the States are as secure and as sacred in the care of the Supreme Court of the United States as the rights and powers of the National Legislature. Is there any distinction in the mind of any gentleman on that side of the Chamber between the absolute right and power of a State within its constitutional limit, the deference due to a State Legislature within its constitutional limits, and the right of Congress and the deference due to Congress?

Is not the honesty of the Legislature of Mississippi or Massachusetts entitled to be presumed by the Supreme Court as much as the honesty of the persons either of those States send to the Senate or the House here? Yet when a State Legislature, by any device or under any mask, seeks to intrench upon the domain of national authority, the court has always looked through the pretense and penetrates the covering and deals with the transaction in substance and not in form, and it does it more especially and more thoroughly when the State undertakes to exercise its powers under the guise or pretext of a tax.

Suppose this were an invasion of foreign commerce by the State of Massachusetts and they said "We are taxing subjects that we have a right to tax and no more and our power of taxation is unlimited," would a Senator who would insist that the Supreme Court of the United States should strip the mask from that pretext any the less maintain the jurisdiction of the State of Massachusetts or the jurisdiction of his own State against a similar unconstitutional attempt and usurpation on the part of Congress?

So, Mr. President, all through the decisions of the court are these cases. In Welton vs. Missouri, and in Woodruff vs. Parham, the same doctrine is applied to attempts by the taxing power of the States to regulate interstate commerce.

If a Legislature which can not regulate foreign or interstate commerce, can not lay a tax which operates as a regulation of such commerce, how can a Legislature, which can not constitutionally forbid an act lawfully under State authority, lay a tax whose sole design and effect is to forbid such act?

The Senate is familiar with the case of Yick Wo vs. Hopkins, 118 U. S., and the case of Cole vs. La Grange in the same volume. This whole argument was fully met and overthrown by the Supreme Court in the case of Minnesota vs. Barker, 136 U. S.

I wish to allude to one other case and then I will yield for an adjournment if the Senate is willing, the case of Ho Ah Kow vs. Nunan, decided in the California circuit by Mr. Justice Field.
